The Queen's Health. The London Spectator says: "The Queen's grief is immeasurable, and her depression is said to be regarded by the court with the deepest sympathy, not now unmingled with some anxiety. All the official allusions confirm this rumor.

The Capitular Vicar and the clergy of Messina had signed a respectful address to the Pope, setting forth the necessity of a separation between his temporal and spiritual power. The address expresses confidence that the Pope will accept the wise propositions of the Emperor of the French and of the King of Italy. The clergy throughout the whole of Italy will probably follow the example set them by their brethren at Messina.

France has sent the strongest recommendations to the Pontifical Government to accept terms for renunciation of temporal power, that French occupation may cease, and the present situation be ended. The Pope's reply shows no disposition to yield.

In Austria the Danube had inundated a district of country in which no less than 80,000 persons were rendered houseless. Rain fell for four days, almost without interruption. Bridges and viaducts were destroyed, and the railroad service was nearly all suspended. Several towns were also inundated by the Danube, including Presburg and Pesth.

Joseph Mazzini now lies on his sick-bed in London, with every prospect of dying an exile in a strange land.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Washington, March 11. A telegram from Fortress Monroe this morning reports all quiet there and at Newport News.

Manassas has been evacuated by the rebels, and our forces have taken peaceable possession. No other news of public interest has been received this morning.

The Intelligencer asserts positively that we occupy Centreville, and that the rebels have evacuated Manassas. It says the above was confirmed by intelligence received at headquarters last night.

Centreville, March 11. Yesterday morning our forces, amounting to upwards 2000, proceeded to Centreville and occupied the village about four o'clock in the afternoon. It was altogether deserted. The entire command proceeded to Manassas, arriving there in the evening. The rebels had destroyed as much of their property as they could not carry away, by fire and otherwise. The bridges, railroad track and depot in that vicinity were seriously damaged, and nothing but ruin and desolation were apparent.

Upon close examination it was discovered that before evacuating their much boasted stronghold, the rebels had set fire to such of their commissary stores as they could not conveniently carry off. The place presented a scene of the utmost desolation—a mass of black and charred ruins.

The rebels also blew up the bridges along the line of the Alexandria railroad for some miles below Manassas. Such of the locomotives as were out of repair were also destroyed, it is supposed by being blown up, and the vicinity of the depot is covered by fragments of machinery belonging to the destroyed locomotives.

THE BATTLE OF PEA RIDGE.

Springfield, Mo., March 11th. A special dispatch to the Republican says a messenger arrived at 10 o'clock last night, bringing additional intelligence of the battle. The engagement took place on Little Sugar Creek, where a skirmish took place on their march down. In anticipation of an attack on the south side, Gen. Curtis ordered the trains to be drawn up on the north side, but unexpectedly the attack was commenced on their rear, north of our army, by 1500 to 2000 cavalry. Gen. Sigel with 800 men protected the train for several hours, alternately retreating and stopping to hold the rebels in check while the trains pushed backwards to the main bodies of the army.

While thus engaged Gen. Sigel was three times surrounded, but he cut his way through each time. The principal fighting on Thursday was done by Gen Sigel. In this way on Friday the engagement became general, and continued so throughout—the officers behaving with much gallantry. The most exposed position was occupied by Col. Carey's division, and the greatest loss was suffered by them.

A letter from Col. Carey says that the losses in the 4th and 9th Iowa, 35th Ill., and 25th Missouri are from 150 to 200 in each regiment killed and wounded.

Only 300 of the 24th Missouri were present, but they lost 29 killed and a large number wounded. The 12th and 17th Missouri, 3d Iowa cavalry and 8th Indiana lost about forty each. Among the wounded are Gen. Asboth, Col. Carr, Lieut Colonels Gilligan and Henon, and Major Coyle of the 9th Iowa.

The rebel officers killed and wounded are Brig. Gen. McCulloch, killed; Brig. Gen. Slack, dangerously wounded; Col. McIntosh, killed; Col. B. H. Rives, dangerously wounded; Col. Herbert, killed or dangerously injured; Major Gen. S. Price, slightly wounded.

Thirteen pieces of artillery were captured by our men. Among them is one lost by Gen Sigel at Wilson Creek.

Our loss is regarded as 800 or 1000 killed and wounded. The rebel loss is not known, but is supposed to be 2000 to 3000. A large number of rebel prisoners were taken; probably 1500. Two thousand Indians were engaged in the battle. Eighteen of our killed were scalped by them. Gen. Price with about 1000 men retreated northward, and then took an easterly direction. The rebels were completely defeated.

New York, March 12th. The Herald's Washington dispatch says that Gen. McClellan has taken up his headquarters at Fairfax Court House.

Before dark last night, Col. Averill, with a large body of cavalry, entered the rebel works at Manassas Junction, and bivouacked for the night amidst the ruins of the rebel stronghold.

It is reported that in their retreat the rebels destroyed the railroad bridge across the North Fork of the Rappahanock. In their haste they left behind straggling parties of soldiers, who seem very glad to be made prisoners.

Everything at Manassas indicates a precipitate flight of the rebels. All the log huts are standing and an immense number of canvass tents. Some caissons were found, but no guns. Piles of bullets and cartridges were left in the tents, and immense quantities of Quartermaster's stores.

In one place were discovered about 30,000 bushels of corn which had been set fire to and was still smoldering. The troops found abundant rebel trophies—pack saddles, army orders, muskets, revolvers, bowie knives, letters, &c. Over one thousand pack saddles were found, all new, and marked C. S. A. The people in the vicinity state that prior to the evacuation there were 100,000 rebel troops at Manassas and Centreville.

Log tents, ample to accommodate 30,000 troops, remain. Heaps of dead horses cover the fields in the vicinity. Log huts are strewn all along between Centreville and Manassas. The railroad track is undisturbed, except the bridges. The stone bridge across Bull Run on the Warrenton turnpike is blown up, as also the bridge across Cog Run, between Centreville and Manassas.

Washington, March 12. General Fremont will return to Washington this evening or to-morrow.

The work of repairing has already commenced on the bridges injured by the rebels at Bull Run. The probability is that the railroad to Manassas will be in running order this week.

By an arrival at the Navy Yard to-day it was ascertained that the rebel batteries at Aquia Creek were evacuated yesterday morning, whether permanently or not we have no means of ascertaining.

New York, March 12. The Tribune publishes a letter from Elizabeth City, dated 4th inst., giving the rumor that Gen. Bragg with all his forces, numbering 7000, arrived yesterday from Pensacola, which place he evacuated after destroying fortifications, guns, etc.

A special dispatch from Washington to the Philadelphia North American reports that Beauregard has been appointed Commander-in-chief of the rebel army, and the evacuation of Manassas was at his suggestion. It is further said that he has arrived at Richmond.

Washington, March 14. President Lincoln has just received a message from Brig. Gen. Strong, saying that New Madrid (Missouri) is ours.

Cairo, Ill., March 14. The rebels evacuated New Madrid last night, leaving a quantity of guns and stores they were unable to carry away. Some fighting took place yesterday between their gunboats and our siege batteries, in which we lost twenty killed and wounded. A shot from one of their guns dismounted one of our 24 pounders killing four or five men.

Washington, March 13. Gen. Halleck has telegraphed the following.

"Our artillery and cavalry yesterday attacked the enemy's works one half mile west of Paris, Tenn. The enemy was driven out with a loss of 100 killed, wounded and prisoners. Our loss is Capt. Bull of the artillery, and four men killed and wounded.

A cavalry force sent out from Lebanon, Mo., attacked one of Price's guerilla parties, killing thirteen, wounding five, and capturing over twenty prisoners, among whom was Brig Gen Campbell, the commander.

Chicago, March 17. The Federal mortar and gunboats, in strong position, attacked Island No. 10 on Sunday evening. The enemy have forty-six guns that we know of. No result up to this hour. The practice of our gunners is splendid.

Gen Pope has New Madrid so fortified as to command the river below the island. Firing was heard there during the whole of Sunday, supposed to be at gunboats attempting to run the batteries.

It is thought that the rebels cannot escape, indeed, it is almost sure that twenty thousand of them will be taken.

Cairo, Ill., March 16. The rebels at Island No. 10 have a very strong position. Forty-six guns have been counted. Eight mortars shelled the battery above the Island to-day. The enemy left it several times but returned. They only fired with two guns. Our shells reached the Island easily. Gen. Pope has sent dispatches to Flag Officer Foote saying that his heavy guns command the river so that neither steamboat nor gunboat of the enemy can pass.

Firing has been heard in the direction of New Madrid all day. It is supposed that the rebel gunboats are trying to force a passage.

Seven rebel transports near Island No. 10 are hemmed in. The encampment of the enemy is visible, and is supposed to be large enough for 15,000 to 20,000 men.

St Louis, March 17. In response to a serenade to-night, General Halleck announced from the balcony of the Planter's House, that Island No 10 is ours, with all the ammunition and transports the enemy had there. He said, also, that another victory had been gained in Arkansas, in which three rebel Cols. were captured. The particulars have not transpired.

Sandy Hook, N. Y., March 17. Steamer Roanoke, from Havana has arrived with Vera Cruz dates to the 4th.

The Spanish troops were returning from the interior. The English forces are to leave the country. The French forces are en route for Tehuacan. The Spaniards for Orizaba.

Marquess holds the road from Vera Cruz to Mexico.

From California.

San Francisco, Jan. 17. During the last fifty hours it has rained hard, almost incessantly, the storm still continues. Yesterday noon the water at Sacramento commenced rising again.

The third complete inundation of that city is unavoidable. The area of land now overflowed in the State is twenty miles broad and two hundred and fifty miles long, taking in upwards of three millions of acres,—a considerable portion being actually fenced and tilled, it is estimated that 4,500 cattle and sheep have been drowned since the winter commenced.

The unprecedented succession of tremendous storms has wasted the mining where the ground was previously upturned and dug over, producing great changes, rendering probable a large increase in the gold product from the Placer diggings for the ensuing season.

The California journals, in giving an account of the late disastrous floods with which they have been visited, state that the Chinese have been very great sufferers. No less than forty-five Chinamen were carried away in their cabins at Oregon Bar, in Placer county. The Chinese hongs in San Francisco have since received letters from the interior of the State, that nearly one thousand Chinamen were washed away from Long Bar and drowned.

Meeting in Dansville.

The Lord willing, there will be a two days meeting in Dansville, Livingston Co., N. Y., to commence Friday evening, April 25th, and close the Sunday following. Ministers and brethren from abroad are cordially invited to attend. Frank Burr, for the church.

Notice.—R. I. Q. C.

The next session of the Rhode Island Quarterly Conference will be holden in Danielsonville, Ct., commencing Wednesday, March 26th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., and closing Friday evening, the 28th.

This conference has been signally blest at nearly all of its sessions in the past. Though never large in numbers, it has sometimes been mighty in power. Those who have come have brought life and love and strength with them. Dear brethren and sisters of R. I. and Ct., let the coming conference be no exception. Let each church send one delegate or more without fail; what if it does cost a trifle to come, the good imparted and received will repay "an hundred fold." The first one of these meetings I attended cost me five dollars. The blessing I got wealth could not buy. If really impossible to send a delegate, then send us a good hearty letter. No matter if several in each church write. You don't know how eager we listen to tidings coming from the scattered "household of faith." Cheer us with a word. If you are burdened, we beg a chance to share those burdens with you. Come, then, let us rally for God. Come from far and near. Come, brethren in the ministry, in the name of the Lord. Come, and the hospitality of the church in Danielsonville shall bid you welcome. H. F. C., Secretary pro tem.

Western Grove Meetings.

Spring is approaching, and the season for holding grove meetings will soon be here. My arrangements for this enterprise will be made sometime in advance. All who are desirous of my services in this enterprise will please remember that they must correspond with me in season. Don't expect that I can comply with a tithe of the calls, for want of time, but will try to arrange for the interest of the cause. W. Sheldon.

Conference Notice.

The Annual Meeting of the Northern Illinois Conference of Adventists will be held in Amboy, Lee Co., Ill., commencing Wednesday, May 28th, at two o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

H. G. M'Cullock, Sec. of Conference.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer.—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars we send them two dollars worth, for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

Miles Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

A Plea for Peace.

BY [illegible]

"Lay down the axe; fling by the spade;
Leave in its track the toiling plow;
The rifle and the bayonet blade
For arms like yours were fitter now.
And let the hands that plied the pen
Quit the light task, and learn to wield
The horseman's crooked brand, and rein
The charger on the battle field."

Thus vengeance calls, and "lusts" of men,*
To bathe the land with brothers' blood.
Pause now, O christian! list again
To Him, the holy and the good:
"Whence do your wars and fightings come?"*
Not from the wisdom from above—†
Pure, peaceful, gentle, like heaven's home—
Thy foes commanding thee to love.‡

"Put up thy sword within its sheath,"§
And pray for those who do thee wrong;‖
Detest the wisdom from beneath,
And in My fear shalt thou be strong.¶
Shall followers of the PRINCE OF PEACE
Take "rifle and the bayonet-blade"—
Mangle and rend the very house
The temple of God's Spirit made?

Is this the armor of the cross
Where our Exemplar loved and died—
When, for his foes in holy prayer,
For God's forgiving love he cried?
Shall thy profession worthless prove?
"My weapons are not carnal," sir;
In holy faith and hope and love,
I shall be "more than conqueror."

Wilt thou the law of man obey
Rather than His who reigns above?††
Acknowledge now God's rightful sway,
And yield thy heart to christian love

Human Ghostology.—No. 11.

16. Luke 16: 22, 23;—"And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died, and was buried; and in hades he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom." This is either a literal case, or it is a parable. If it is a literal historical statement of a past occurrence, it furnishes no proof in favor of the existence of a ghost-man. Firstly; Lazarus "died and was carried"—not his body died and his soul was carried. The very being that "died" was carried. Secondly; he was carried "to Abraham's bosom"—not to heaven. A literal Lazarus literally dies, and is literally carried to the literal bosom of literal Abraham, if this is a literal case. Thirdly; the rich man dies and is buried—not a word said about his soul. "In 'hades,' not in gehenna, 'he lifted up his eyes'—not the eyes of his ghost—and sees Abraham and Lazarus—not their ghosts—requests Abraham to send Lazarus—not his ghost—to bring water to cool his tongue. Not a word about the soul of either the rich man or Lazarus. But if this is a literal case, and it should be admitted that their souls were meant, though not mentioned, it would follow that the home of the saved and the home of the lost are within sight and hearing of each other—for the rich man and Abraham see and converse with each other. If it be said that a ghost can see and hear further than we can, it will not change the matter, for the wails of the damned and the shrieks of the lost would drown the songs of the redeemed, and sadden the hearts of the saved. Imagine a lovely mother standing on the shining shore of deliverance. Just over yonder gulf, in plain sight, are her unfortunate children writhing in keen anguish and excruciating pain; she hears their shrieks of anguish, their wails, their groans, their cries: she turns her eyes away, but cannot forget the sight; she tries to sing, but the bitter cries, and loud groans, and piercing shrieks of her children sound in her ears. Would there be any joy in such a region? Can any one rejoice to think they are going to such a home? Would not a hell in sight and hearing of heaven, cast a gloom over the hearts of the redeemed? Can any one wish to go to a place where they will be compelled to gaze upon, and listen to, the sufferings and groans of their own kinsmen? Yet, if this is a literal case, heaven is just such a place. Who believes it? No one. Then admit this to be a parable; and if a parable, it is not our present object to tell what it illustrates, our object in noticing it being simply to show that it does not touch the existence of a ghost-man. Suffice it to say that, as in a parable, wheat is not used to mean literal wheat, or tares to mean literal tares; so neither in a parable is a rich man used to mean a literal rich man, or Lazarus to mean a literal Lazarus.

17. Luke 20: 38; "For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living." Christ is here refuting the non-resurrection theory of the Sadducees, who claimed that death was an eternal extinction. He commences by saying, "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. [How would that prove a resurrection?] For he is not a God of the dead, [in the Sadducee sense of death,] but of the living, [or those that can be made alive,] for [prospectively] all live unto him." While in the Sadducee sense of death he is "not a God of the dead," that is, those who are eternally dead, yet in the ordinary sense of death he is "Lord both of the dead and living." Rom. 14: 9. Any other interpretation would make Christ's attempt to prove a resurrection, in this argument, fruitless; and would also deny that Jehovah is the God of the bodies of these patriarchs, for all admit that their bodies are dead in the ordinary sense, but not in the Sadducee sense of death.

18. Luke 23: 43; "And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Three days after this, Jesus expressly declared, "I am not yet ascended to my Father." John 20: 17. Now as Christ cannot contradict himself, it may be well to inquire if his promise to the thief has not been misunderstood? In order to get a correct understanding of that promise, we should find out what originated the promise. We find that it was given in reply to the following request: "Lord, remember ME [not my ghost] when thou COMEST [not when thou goest] into thy kingdom." The thief had not prayed to be taken to a kingdom at death, but at the Lord's coming. By placing the comma after "to-day," as it is found in some Greek manuscripts, the Savior is not made to contradict himself three days afterwards, in saying, "I am not yet ascended;" and, furthermore, the Savior's reply harmonizes with the request: "Verily I say unto thee, to-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise," or my kingdom. When? Just when you prayed to be remembered, namely, when I come into my kingdom—not before. It is sometimes claimed that it would be superfluous for Christ to say to the thief, I make you this promise to day, as the thief knew what day Christ was speaking on. But no more so than for Moses to say, "I denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish." Deut. 30: 18. The people knew what day he was speaking on, but that mode of speech has come to be used as a mode of positive expression. "Verily I say unto thee [not thy disembodied soul] to-day thou shalt [not thy soul shalt merely] be with ME [not with my soul simply] in paradise." The tree of life "is in the midst of the paradise of God, (Rev. 2: 7,) and the tree of life is also on the banks of the river of life in the new earth, under the reign of Christ (Rev. 22: 2); hence, Paradise will bloom in the kingdom of Christ, and the thief will there dwell. The penitent thief prayed understandingly. Christ confessed, at his trial, that he was "born to be king, but that his kingdom was "not from hence"—not from that time onward; but, said he, "Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." Matt. 26: 64. Understanding therefore that Christ was to be king, and that his kingdom was not of this age, but that he would come again in kingly "power," he prays, (as the quaking earth, and rending rocks, and midnight darkness dispels his unbelief in the Messiah), "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom."

Hospital Rambles.—No. 4.

"Going to St. Louis again, I suppose, before long?" These words were addressed to me one morning by a merchant, near our place of residence. He was a Universalist by creed, but had heard me preach, and was reading on our views. Bro. Grant's discussion with Clayton had settled him on those questions. "I heard you was sick, and thought a nice ham would be good for you, so here it is; would have brought you some tea, sugar and coffee, but finally concluded to give you the money, and let you get what you needed most." And accordingly he handed me two dollars. "And when you go again to the Hospitals, I will pay your fare;" which he did. I had much rather have the money, as we do not indulge in tea and coffee. "Now, Sister Henry, if you can make it as plain on the personality of God as you have the rest of the Bible, I'm with you." Just at that moment my son came from the post office, bringing a package of "Everybody's Book," a donation from Bro. Smith, on the "Personality of God and the Devil"—just what I wanted, and came just at the right time. He took one of them gladly; and last week he told husband and myself that he was going to build a church at his own expense, and that community would help him, so as to have a place for free speech. He is able, for people can listen to the truth in a cheap house in this part of the world.

"But this is not the hospitals," says one. Well, patience! good Bro. and Sr., I am all ready; let us go. I do not have to get a "permit" any longer; my name is sufficient, or where I am known my face is a passport. Passing by the rocking-chair of an invalid, talking with him on the blessed truths of the Bible, a fine, noble looking woman stopped to listen to what I was saying to the soldier. A moment, and her face brightened, and eagerly reaching out her hand, she grasped mine, exclaiming, "You are my Sister, God bless you!" It was sweet to meet her there. You, that can meet those of like precious faith two or three times a week, can have no idea of the joy of that meeting between us. Strangers to each other's faces till that moment, as we stood there, with our arms around each other, two of the "lambs of the flock" in that great temple of Mars, where nearly a thousand of the noble and brave, the sick, dead and dying surrounded us. For the moment we forgot it all, every thing—sister had met sister. We asked each other's names.

"You are not the Sr. Henry of the Crisis—not Sr. N. M. Henry?"

"Yes." Then she knew me.

"Why, I have seen you here before. It was you, then, who scattered Bro. Hastings' books. The mystery is all solved now."

Her name I found to be Sister Lois Dennett, of Laporte, Ind., daughter of Bro. Harding, of Buchanan, Mich. There is a tie that binds our hearts that cold-hearted professors know nothing of. But time and duties called each of us away, and with true reluctance we parted.

Going into one room the same day, in another Hospital, a gentleman that I had conversed with, and had given some books, as soon as he saw me enter the room, raised in bed, eagerness and pleasure beaming in every feature, and exclaimed as he took my offered hand—

"How glad I am you have come. I was just thinking how I wanted to see you again. I was so sorry I had not asked your name. I wanted to write you a letter."

"What did you wish to tell me?" said I, as I wrote my address for him.

"I wanted to thank you for those books, and tell you that I had a new Bible and a whole God." (I had given him one of Bro. Smith's books.)

"Didn't you have a whole God before?"

"Oh! no. I was a Methodist, and their God, you know, is without form, body, or parts. Now I can see how Jesus Christ is the SON OF GOD. Now I can understand the 37th Psalm. See!" and he had his Bible turned down on the Abrahamic promise, the new heavens and earth of Isaiah, and so on through the book; the future destiny of the wicked, and the state of the dead and all. He made me think in his joy at receiving the truth, of a little child with his arms full of treasures. And when he gave me his "God bless you!" with tears in his eyes, I felt paid for a good deal of hard toil.

I gave a Baptist clergyman one of Bro. Smith's books the next day. He wanted more, asked me to speak to his people on Sunday evening, and gave me my subject—"the kingdom of heaven." There are six hundred members in his church. I did so. My text was the words of the Savior,—"Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." After the close of the sermon, the pastor arose and told his people that his "mind was settled at rest on that subject, the meek will inherit the earth;" and much more to the same effect. The closing prayer was made by one of the deacons. He "thanked God that they had not only heard the truth, but many of us believe." I never shall forget the swell of music that arose from those hundreds of voices (there were about seven hundred present) on that beautiful hymn, the chorus of which is—

"We'll go home in the morning,
Just at the break of day."

The church wished me to preach again on the signs of Christ's coming, which I did to an attentive audience. Oh! such prayers as pastor and people put up for me, and that they might receive the truth in good and honest hearts. One old servant (this was a church of slaves) prayed the "good Lord to bless her little white sister." It seemed as though one could not help but preach after such prayers. They commenced to pray and sing as soon as a few collected, and kept it up until time to commence the sermon. They received the word with joy. The pastor, after meeting, when the colored brethren and sisters were shaking hands with me, was busy selling Bro. Smith's books to his members who could read, and then gave me the money. Please, Bro. S., to receive my thanks. He bought of Bro. Blain's works sixty cents worth for himself, and I gave him some of Bro. Grant's works. Heard from him since then. He wants to hear more. I wish our preaching brethren could only go there to church. Call them goods and chattels!

But here comes an offer of a free pass to Fort Donelson. But that is a great ways to go alone. Another? Where to? Cairo! Well, I will see. Let God direct. Oh! the vastness of the field, and all alone. Who is sufficient for these things?

N. M. HENRY.

THE PRAYER MEETING.—A poor laboring man said, "I love the church, I love preaching, but dearer than all I love the prayer meeting; I always feel as if I was going into my Father's house when I go into the room where we meet for prayer."

We remember a pious cartman who was always found in his place at the prayer meeting; and when he was told that he ought to stay at home after the fatigues and exposures of the day, he replied, "I find I can rest all the better by going to meeting; I forget all my pains and labors, and feel stronger and better prepared for the next day's toil."—Ex.

Fret not Thyself.

"Fret not thyself because of evil doers."—Ps. 37.

Fret not thyself, dear Zion-bound pilgrim,
God's chosen one, patient, loving, true,
Faithfully striving his will to do;
Know still, however, holy trials come—
Fret not.

Bear yet still thy soul in patience ever,
Be not disheartened though foes mistrue;
Every word thou speakest kind and true,
Still thy duty do, faltering never—
Fret not.

Thou mayest be called to breathe around thee
Air poisoned by the slanderer's tongue,
Thine own heart unmercifully wrung
By the galling chains in which he's bound thee—
Fret not.

Though those around thee are ever willing
To lure thee from the God of love,
Thus drawing thy mind from things above,
Thy cup of misery ever filling,—
Fret not.

Trust thy Savior fully, doubt him never,
Seek him truly now, his faith be thine;
With immortal rays thy brow shall shine
As thy reward. Hope on, hope ever—
Fret not.

Correspondence.

From Bro. L. Boutell.

BRO. GRANT:—According to appointment, I visited the churches in Harvard and Stowe, Sunday, Feb. 9th. We had an interesting gathering. They came from Clinton, Acton, Holliston, and elsewhere, to confer upon the loss and gain of our pilgrimage, and whether it is best still to confess that, "after the way which they call heresy, so worship" we "the God of our fathers." Love, zeal, and warm-hearted fellowship were manifest, and all seemed to feel the power of truth, and a love for the same, confessing with their mouths their strong determinations to deny self, bear reproach, and persevere till tribulation should end in glory. Good stirring religion took the place of formalism, and all drank from the sweet stream of living water. All separated, wishing such blessed seasons might be enjoyed more often. How blessed to have the cementing love of Jesus to bind us together.

From Stowe,—my wife with me,—I rode to Newtonville, to visit Sister Field; upon my arrival, I found that the lovers of truth and of the appearing of Jesus were to have a meeting at Bro. Smith's the same evening; so we all were glad to improve the privilege of meeting with those who are not ashamed of Christ and his words. We found a few of Abraham's seed looking for a better country. As they were desirous that I should stay and have another meeting with them, I appointed the next evening, at Sister Field's. The time came, and we found quite an interest to hear this blessed message. It looked like former times, to see the people come together at short notice, some with horse sleds, bringing their neighbors. Thus we had another refreshing season with those of like precious faith, in looking over the last will and testament of our Elder Brother, to find what he had willed us, and when we are to get it. The result was cheering and blessed. All were inclined, by the grace of God, to be heirs of this incorruptible inheritance. This Eden looked so inviting, so desirable, that none would even consent to exchange their heirship for a "Heaven beyond the bounds of time and space." The Bible confirms our faith,—"The meek shall inherit the earth." The righteous shall be exalted "to inherit the land." Amen.

Brethren, beloved of God, hold fast the inspiration of the Bible. Let the word dwell in you richly by faith. Yea, believe it so as to have its Spirit and life. We need, and must have, the Spirit of God to keep us in this hour of peril.

Thursday, I went to Ashland, to visit the family of Bro. James Chickering, the only Advent family in the town that I knew. As they desired a meeting at their house, I gladly consented, and in a little while the neighborhood were apprised that meetings would be holden Friday and Saturday evenings, at the house of Bro. Chickering. There was a good turn out, and a good hearing, while I did the best I could to rightly divide the word of truth; and I could but hope that it might result in good to enlighten and save. Bro. James Chickering lives one mile west of the meeting house, and craves the patronage of the disciples at his pilgrim house.

Sunday, by request, we went to Cordaville, where a hall was offered us for meetings. This is a new place for our doctrines to be preached, but we found some of our faith in this village, and some at Southville. We went to the hall, and found due preparation for singing by the choir, and the people coming together to hear the word of life. We had a good congregation of attentive hearers, while we endeavored to present the plan of redemption in all its harmony, as given in the Scriptures of divine truth, letting the hearer judge of our success. With Paul, we say, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." I think an interest was created to hear more upon the subject of the literal fulfillment of the word. But little can be done in one day to bring back to a plain, simple exposition of the Bible those whose instruction has been wrong for a long term of years. But thank the Lord, true doctrine is gaining ground amid the most determined opposition of the churches and world. I hope this people will be permitted to hear more soon, and, by the blessing of God, see many brought from darkness into God's marvelous light.

The Congregational minister of Southboro, by previous appointment, preached in the hall the same evening, to many of the same congregation, declaring to them the natural immortality of the soul, and its eternal progression in sin and misery, unless repentance redeems it to the felicity of the spirit world. The people, I thought, could plainly see the contrast, and my hope is they may let the Bible decide, and where the plain testimony leads them, there be ready to stand.

Bro. Dorr and wife, with Sister Day, are old soldiers in this warfare of truth against error, and I hope they will be encouraged to make more effort to get the word of life among this people, that they may be wise unto SALVATION.

I left Monday, feeling an assurance that truth was mighty, through God, and would have its influence, by the Spirit of God, in answer to prayer. There ought to be more effort in new places. The result would be glorious.

Groton, Mass., Feb. 25, 1862.

From Bro. R. Willard.

BRO. GRANT:—In reference to our correspondence with Bro. Fike, I thought that some extracts might be interesting to some of your readers, and hence will copy a few which will reflect a specimen of what is going on in that so recently wilderness country. He says:—"I am unable to say that my prospects before me are better than they have been. I have been working for wages (he is a good blacksmith) all the time except the short time I was in Samales. I am now expecting something new. I expect to go to the Washoe or Humbolt mines this winter or next spring, providing Mr. Chester will report favorably. He is there on an expedition now. He started on the 30th of Oct., '61, with Mr. Lants, taking with them seven hundred and eighteen fat hogs, eleven teams, three of their own, one eight, one four, and one two horse teams. Those of the hired teams were six horse, and the rest, except two or three, were all four horse teams. They were loaded with twenty-two tons of barley, 1200 pounds salt, and 4000 pounds flour, besides other provision and groceries and a large cast stove, several large kettles, axes, carpenter tools, keg of nails, and eleven men besides himself and teamsters. He went prepared to stop anywhere in the mountains and build a house and slaughter his hogs provided the snow should fall deep. Last Friday Mr. Chester heard from him by a man that came directly from there He got through with 698 hogs, having lost 20; has a house built and ready for business, and, as the saying is here, can make a nice thing of it. Their hogs cost them four cents per pound, and worth ten cents there. He intends to cure the meat and retail it in the spring. Last fall it was worth forty cents. The distance from here to Washoe is 150 miles across the Sierra Nevada mountains, and a dreadful road to travel. The Humbolt mines have recently been discovered, and are said to be much the richest." He says, "I sold three of my horses for $800—have one left and the little wagon for our own convenience. Winter has now commenced. We had the first rain (since last May) the fore part of this month (now Nov. 24); since which time we have had two or three showers. Some of the farmers are commencing to plow and the grass to spring up, while the coast range forty miles west, and the Sierra Nevada mountains ten miles east of us are covered with snow."

He says: "Thus I am striving to do the best I can under circumstances, and hope an entrance will be administered unto me, with all the dear saints, into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. My faith in God's word is unshaken. Bless God. I trust through grace that all the ims of this world cannot move me. I feel interested in the present movements of the world. My dear friends, what of the night? Are we not in the darkest hour, and has it not nearly passed away? O may we all be ready for the return of our Master."

BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—I miss the companionship of many dear ones, now so far from me. Yet it cheers my heart to hear from you through the Crisis and Harbinger. I wish more of the friends would write for our good papers. The Editors would devote one page to a sort of written Conference Report, and how glad I would be if scores would bring in their testimony. There are brethren and sisters hid away in valleys, whom we never hear from. Wherever the saints are scattered, they ought to speak to us. We want to know you. Come, drop a line, friends.

Well, the war spirit is here, and our Canadian men are forming themselves into companies that shall go at the Queen's bidding. England is sending us troops, and fortifications are to be builded here. What this is for we know not. One thing is certain,—the Lord has a controversy with the nations, and he will gain eternal victory. Then let us serve him.

The Baptists are doing a work in this community. Several profane men have become serious. They have lively meetings; talk well for people who have little to talk about. Wish they had the whole truth. Our church is alive; members scattered, poor, and some of them sick. Sometimes think we are a miserable company; but when compared with the sects around—six of them—I conclude we are on the right track. Like all others, we are not so active as we should be. But I think it pretty well if we live at all, in these awful times. The wicked are hardened. More sin committed than formerly.

I am trying to be good, but have to fight for it. Find nature a mighty foe. Hope to be saved, through the grace that is in Christ Jesus. I believe time is short. It is an overwhelming thought, that Jesus is to appear in person among men, and close up the affairs of this world, ending the day of grace. O that we may be ready for that day! Let us be faithful. Pray for me. I have new and unexpected trials, and need more grace. God bless us all, is my prayer.

BRN. GRANT AND MORGAN:—The responses to the proposed "Try Company," from the children, are encouraging. The Scripture questions and answers given by them will, no doubt, awaken an interest in the study of the Scriptures, and be the means of fortifying their minds with Scripture truth, and raise up an army to do battle against the sins and errors and fables of these days. If the world continues many years longer in its present state, they will need all the helps that can be derived from the Scriptures, and all other sources, to prevent them from being overwhelmed in the perils of these last days.

The development of the character of a large majority of the youth of this age, shows a great lack of religious training and parental authority, and confirms us in the belief of the fulfillment of the sign spoken of by the apostle—"disobedient to parents." Children at the present time, at the age of seven or ten years, often become masters of their parents; or at least, have their own way in most every thing they desire. Signs there's no mistaking proclaim Messiah near.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul

Diphtheria.

To the Editor of the Boston Journal:

From recent issues of your paper I learn that this fearful disease is doing its work of death in some portions of our neighboring State of Maine. I doubt not the public will kindly receive any suggestions which may contribute to a more successful treatment of this modern scourge; and therefore venture to give publicity to the treatment I have used with unfailing success. The remedy on which I chiefly depend is the Actea Racemosa, or Black Snakeroot, which is used both locally as a gargle and taken internally. As a gargle, one teaspoonful of the tincture is added to two tablespoonfuls of water and gargled every hour for twenty-four hours, or till the progress of the disease is arrested; after which the intervals may be extended to an hour and a half, or more, as the symptoms may justify. In connection with the use of the gargle, or separately, the adult patient should take internally to the amount of two or three teaspoonsful of the tincture in the course of twenty-four hours.

In addition to the foregoing I give ten drops of the muriated tincture of iron three times in the twenty-four hours, and a powder of three to five grains of the chlorate of potash in the interval. Under this treatment a very decided improvement takes place within the first twenty-four hours, the ash colored membrane disappears usually within two days, and the patient overcomes the malignant tendency of the disease.

The foregoing doses are for adults; for children they should of course be diminished according to age, &c. It will be observed that great importance is attached to the frequent use of the gargle—that is, every hour—in order to overcome the morbific tendency of the disease by a constantly counteracting impression. In order to guard against a relapse, an occasional use of the remedies should be continued for several days after the removal of the membrane and subsidence of unpleasant symptoms. To complete the cure, a generous diet and other restoratives may be used as the intelligent practitioner shall direct.

How to save your Eyes.

By sitting in such a position as will allow the light to fall obliquely over the shoulder while reading or sewing.

By not using the eyes for such purposes by an artificial light, especially gas light.

By avoiding the special use of the eyes in the morning before breakfast.

By resting them for half a minute or so, while reading or sewing, or looking at things at a distance or up to the sky, relief is immediately felt by so doing.

Never pick any collected matter from the eyelashes or corners of the eyes with the finger nails; rather moisten it and rub it away carefully with the ball of the finger.

Keep the feet warm, and never cool the head suddenly under penalty of inflamation of the eyes.

It is better to bathe the eyes on the outside at night than morning, but it will not do harm to bathe them both morning and evening.

The moment the eye feels tired, the moment you are conscious of an effort to read or sew, lay aside the book or needle and take a walk for an hour, or employ yourself in some active exercise not requiring the close use of the eyes.—Scientific American.

Death from eating painted candy.—A charming little girl, aged about five years, one of two children of Mr. Charles Olenshaw, of Lansingburg, N. Y., died on the 6th inst., from the effects of eating painted confectionary on Christmas day—actually poisoned to death.

Poisonous properties of Brine.

Brine, in which our meat or fish has been salted, is poisonous to domestic animals. If left in their own way, they will partake as freely of it as they will of pure salt, when it very often proves fatal. The Union Medicale, a French publication, gives an account of the researches of M. Reynal in regard to the poisonous properties of brine. From a series of experiments detailed, he draws the following conclusions:

First, That three or four months after its preparation it acquires poisonous properties.

Second, That the mean poisonous dose for a horse is about four pints; for a hog, one pint; and for a dog, four or five gallons.

Third, That in less doses it produces vomiting in the dog and hog.

Fourth, That the employment of this substance, mixed with the food, continued for a certain time, even in small quantities, may be fatal.

We know from experience, says the Valley Farmer, that brine, if swallowed by hogs and other animals, will prove fatal, yet we doubt if the subject is susceptible of the definite results as stated by M. Reynal, for the degree of the poisonous properties of brine depends upon various circumstances. We have known a much less quantity to prove fatal than that stated above.

A Remedy for Sleeplessness.

How to get sleep is to many persons a matter of great importance. Nervous persons, who are troubled with wakefulness and excitability, usually have a tendency of blood on the brain, with cold extremities. The pressure of blood upon the brain keeps it in a stimulated or wakeful state, and the pulsations in the head are often painful. Let such rise and chafe the body and extremities with a brush or towel, or rub smartly with the hands, to promote circulation, and withdraw the excessive amount of blood from the brain, and they will fall asleep in a few minutes. A cold bath, or a sponge bath and rubbing, or a good run, or a rapid walk in the open air, or going up or down stairs a few times just before retiring, will aid in equalizing circulation and promoting sleep. These rules are simple and easy of application in castle or cabin, mansion or cottage, and may minister to the comfort of thousands who would freely expend money for an anodyne to promote "Nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep."—Scientific American.

CORN GRIDDLE CAKES.—Almost every one is interested in knowing how to make corn cakes most palatable since so much of it will be used in these straightened times. The following is said to be an excellent receipt:—Scald at night half the quantity of meal you are going to use, mix the other with cold water, having it the consistency of thick batter; add a little salt, and set it to rise; it will need no yeast. In the morning the cakes will be light and crisp. Skimmings, where meat has been boiled, is best for frying them with. Fry slowly.

CORN BREAD.—The following is the formula given for making corn bread like the loaf which took the first prize at Orange Judd's great Corn-bread Show: To two quarts of meal add one pint of bread sponge; water sufficiently to wet the whole; add half a pint of flour, and a table spoonful of salt; let it rise; then knead well for the second time, and place the dough in the oven, and allow it to bake an hour and a half.

HAVE YOU HEADACHE?—Keep your lower extremities warm, stop drinking tea and coffee, eat less, don't sleep with your head high, and avoid hot feather pillows. Be sure that you always breathe a pure air, and exercise much. Women who wear their hair excessively long and tightly bound up, are constantly subject to headache. The remedy lies in removing the cause.

CORNS.—Having allowed them to come, either through neglect, or satisfying the caprices of fashion or vanity, the only way to get rid of them effectually is to give them full liberty to grow until they ripen and fall off; in fact do not irritate them by pressure of any kind, and the annoyances will depart of their own natural accord.

☞ Dr. Trumbull, of Liverpool, states that the sulphate of aniline is a new and powerful remedy for nervous diseases, such as St. Vitus' dance. He states that he has tried it in several cases of nervous twitching, and in one of paralysis, with complete success.

Human Ghostology.—No. 11.

16. Luke 16: 22, 23;—"And it came to pass that the beggar died, and was carried by the angels into Abraham's bosom: the rich man also died, and was buried; and in hades he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom." This is either a literal case, or it is a parable. If it is a literal historical statement of a past occurrence, it furnishes no proof in favor of the existence of a ghost-man. Firstly; Lazarus "died and was carried"—not his body died and his soul was carried. The very being that "died" was carried. Secondly; he was carried "to Abraham's bosom"—not to heaven. A literal Lazarus literally dies, and is literally carried to the literal bosom of literal Abraham, if this is a literal case. Thirdly; the rich man dies and is buried—not a word said about his soul. "In "hades," not in gehenna, "he lifted up his eyes"—not the eyes of his ghost—and sees Abraham and Lazarus—not their ghosts—requests Abraham to send Lazarus—not his ghost—to bring water to cool his tongue. Not a word about the soul of either the rich man or Lazarus. But if this is a literal case, and it should be admitted that their souls were meant, though not mentioned, it would follow that the home of the saved and the home of the lost are within sight and hearing of each other—for the rich man and Abraham see and converse with each other. If it be said that a ghost can see and hear further than we can, it will not change the matter, for the wails of the damned and the shrieks of the lost would drown the songs of the redeemed, and sadden the hearts of the saved. Imagine a lovely mother standing on the shining shore of deliverance. Just over yonder gulf, in plain sight, are her unfortunate children writhing in keen anguish and excruciating pain; she hears their shrieks of anguish, their wails, their groans, their cries: she turns her eyes away, but cannot forget the sight; she tries to sing, but the bitter cries, and loud groans, and piercing shrieks of her children sound in her ears. Would there be any joy in such a region? Can any one rejoice to think they are going to such a home? Would not a hell in sight and hearing of heaven, cast a gloom over the hearts of the redeemed? Can any one wish to go to a place where they will be compelled to gaze upon, and listen to, the sufferings and groans of their own kinsmen? Yet, if this is a literal case, heaven is just such a place. Who believes it? No one. Then admit this to be a parable; and if a parable, it is not our present object to tell what it illustrates, our object in noticing it being simply to show that it does not teach the existence of a ghost-man. Suffice it to say that, as in a parable, wheat is not used to mean literal wheat, or tares to mean literal tares; so neither in a parable is a rich man used to mean a literal rich man, or Lazarus to mean a literal Lazarus.

17. Luke 20: 38; "For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living." Christ is here refuting the non-resurrection theory of the Sadducees, who claimed that death was an eternal extinction. He commences by saying, "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. [How would that prove a resurrection?] For he is not a God of the dead, [in the Sadducee sense of death,] but of the living, [or those that are to be made alive,] for [prospectively,] all live unto him." While in the Sadducee sense of death he is "not a God of the dead," that is, those who are eternally dead, yet in the ordinary sense of death he is "Lord both of the dead and living." Rom. 14: 9. Any other interpretation would make Christ's attempt to prove a resurrection, in this argument, fruitless; and would also deny that Jehovah is the God of the bodies of these patriarchs, for all admit that their bodies are dead in the ordinary sense, but not in the Sadducee sense of death.

18. Luke 23: 43; "And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Three days after this, Jesus expressly declared, "I am not yet ascended to my Father." John 20: 17. Now as Christ cannot contradict himself, it may be well to inquire if his promise to the thief has not been misunderstood? In order to get a correct understanding of that promise, we should find out what originated the promise. We find that it was given in reply to the following request: "Lord, remember ME [not my ghost] when thou COMEST [not when thou goest] into thy kingdom." The thief had not prayed to be taken to a kingdom at death, but at the Lord's coming. By placing the comma after "to-day," as it is found in some Greek manuscripts, the Savior is not made to contradict himself three days afterwards, in saying, "I am not yet ascended;" and, furthermore, the Savior's reply harmonizes with the request: "Verily I say unto thee, to-day thou shalt be with me in Paradise," or my kingdom. When? Just when you prayed to be remembered, namely, when I come into my kingdom—not before. It is sometimes claimed that it would be superfluous for Christ to say to the thief, I make you this promise to day, as the thief knew what day Christ was speaking on. But no more so than for Moses to say, "I denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish." Deut. 30: 18. The people knew what day he was speaking on, but that mode of speech has come to be used as a mode of positive expression. "Verily I say unto thee [not thy disembodied soul] to-day thou shalt [not thy soul shalt merely] be with ME [not with my soul simply] in paradise." The tree of life "is in the midst of the paradise of God, (Rev. 2: 7,) and the tree of life is also on the banks of the river of life in the new earth, under the reign of Christ (Rev. 22: 2); hence, Paradise will bloom in the kingdom of Christ, and the thief will there dwell. The penitent thief prayed understandingly. Christ confessed, at his trial, that he was "born to be king, but that his kingdom was "not from hence"—not from that time onward; but, said he, "Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." Matt. 26: 64. Understanding therefore that Christ was to be king, and that his kingdom was not of this age, but that he would come again in kingly "power," he prays, (as the quaking earth, and rending rocks, and midnight darkness dispels his unbelief in the Messiah), "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom."

Hospital Rambles.—No. 4.

"Going to St. Louis again, I suppose, before long?" These words were addressed to me one morning by a merchant, near our place of residence. He was a Universalist by creed, but had heard me preach, and was reading on our views. Bro. Grant's discussion with Clayton had settled him on those questions. "I heard you was sick, and thought a nice ham would be good for you, so here it is; would have brought you some tea, sugar and coffee, but finally concluded to give you the money, and let you get what you needed most." And accordingly he handed me two dollars. "And when you go again to the Hospitals, I will pay your fare;" which he did. I had much rather have the money, as we do not indulge in tea and coffee. "Now, Sister Henry, if you can make it as plain on the personality of God as you have the rest of the Bible, I'm with you." Just at that moment my son came from the post office, bringing a package of "Everybody's Book," a donation from Bro. Smith, on the "Personality of God and the Devil"—just what I wanted, and came just at the right time. He took one of them gladly; and last week he told husband and myself that he was going to build a church at his own expense, and that community would help him, so as to have a place for free speech. He is able, for people can listen to the truth in a cheap house in this part of the world.

"But this is not the hospitals," says one. Well, patience! good Bro. and Sr., I am all ready; let us go. I do not have to get a "permit" any longer; my name is sufficient, or where I am known my face is a passport. Pausing by the rocking-chair of an invalid, talking with him on the blessed truths of the Bible, a fine, noble looking woman stopped to listen to what I was saying to the soldier. A moment, and her face brightened, and eagerly reaching out her hand, she grasped mine, exclaiming, "You are my Sister, God bless you!" It was sweet to meet her there. You, that can meet those of like precious faith two or three times a week, can have no idea of the joy of that meeting between us. Strangers to each other's faces till that moment, as we stood there, with our arms around each other, two of the "lambs of the flock" in that great temple of Mars, where nearly a thousand of the noble and brave, the sick, dead and dying surrounded us. For the moment we forgot it all, every thing—sister had met sister. We asked each other's names.

"You are not the Sr. Henry of the Crisis—not Sr. N. M. Henry?"

"Yes." Then she knew me.

"Why, I have seen you here before. It was you, then, who scattered Bro. Hastings' books. The mystery is all solved now."

Her name I found to be Sister Lois Dennett, of Laporte, Ind., daughter of Bro. Harding, of Buchanan, Mich. There is a tie that binds our hearts that cold-hearted professors know nothing of. But time and duties called each of us away, and with true reluctance we parted.

Going into one room the same day, in another Hospital, a gentleman that I had conversed with, and had given some books, as soon as he saw me enter the room, raised in bed, eagerness and pleasure beaming in every feature, and exclaimed as he took my offered hand—

"How glad I am you have come. I was just thinking how I wanted to see you again. I was so sorry I had not asked your name. I wanted to write you a letter."

"What did you wish to tell me?" said I, as I wrote my address for him.

"I wanted to thank you for those books, and tell you that I had a new Bible and a whole God." (I had given him one of Bro. Smith's books.)

"Didn't you have a whole God before?"

"Oh! no. I was a Methodist, and their God, you know, is without form, body, or parts Now I can see how Jesus Christ is the SON OF GOD. Now I can understand the 87th Psalm. See!" and he had his Bible turned down on the Abrahamic promise, the new heavens and earth of Isaiah, and so on through the book; the future destiny of the wicked, and the state of the dead and all. He made me think in his joy at receiving the truth, of a little child with his arms full of treasures. And when he gave me his "God bless you!" with tears in his eyes, I felt paid for a good deal of hard toil.

I gave a Baptist clergyman one of Bro. Smith's books the next day.* He wanted more; asked me to speak to his people on Sunday evening, and gave me my subject—"the kingdom of heaven." There are six hundred members in his church. I did so. My text was the words of the Savior,—"Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." After the close of the sermon, the pastor arose and told his people that his "mind was settled at rest on that subject, the meek will inherit the earth;" and much more to the same effect. The closing prayer was made by one of the deacons. He "thanked God that they had not only heard the truth, but many of us believe." I never shall forget the swell of music that arose from those hundreds of voices (there were about seven hundred present) on that beautiful hymn, the chorus of which is—

"We'll go home in the morning,

The church wished me to preach again on the signs of Christ's coming, which I did to an attentive audience. Oh! such prayers as pastor and people put up for me, and that they might receive the truth in good and honest hearts. One old servant (this was a church of slaves) prayed the "good Lord to bless her little white sister." It seemed as though one could not help but preach after such prayers. They commenced to pray and sing as soon as a few collected, and kept it up until time to commence the sermon. They received the word with joy. The pastor, after meeting, when the colored brethren and sisters were shaking hands with me, was busy selling Bro. Smith's books to his members who could read, and then gave me the money. Please, Bro. S., to receive my thanks. He bought of Bro. Blain's works sixty cents worth for himself, and I gave him some of Bro. Grant's works. Heard from him since then. He wants to hear more. I wish our preaching brethren could only go there to church. Call them goods and chattels!

But here comes an offer of a free pass to Fort Donelson. But that is a great ways to go alone. Another? Where to? Cairo! Well, I will see. Let God direct. Oh! the vastness of the field, and all alone. Who is sufficient for these things?

N. M. HENRY.

THE PRAYER MEETING.—A poor laboring man said, "I love the church, I love preaching, but dearer than all I love the prayer meeting; I always feel as if I was going into my Father's house when I go into the room where we meet for prayer."

We remember a pious cartman who was always found in his place at the prayer meeting; and when he was told that he ought to stay at home after the fatigues and exposures of the day, he replied, "I find I can rest all the better by going to meeting. I forget all my pains and labors, and feel stronger and better prepared for the next day's toil."—Ex.

Fret not Thyself.

"Fret not thyself because of evil doers."—Ps. 37.

Fret not thyself, dear Zion-bound pilgrim,
God's chosen one, patient, loving, true,
Faithfully striving his will to do;
Know still, however, holy trials come—
Fret not.

Bear yet still thy soul in patience ever,
Be not disheartened though foes mistrust;
Every word thou speakest kind and true,
Still thy duty do, faltering never—
Fret not.

Thou mayest be called to breathe around thee
Air poisoned by the slanderer's tongue,
Thine own heart unmercifully wrung
By the galling chains in which he's bound thee—
Fret not.

Though those around thee are ever willing
To lure thee from the God of love,
Thus drawing thy mind from things above,
Thy cup of misery ever filling,—
Fret not.

Trust thy Savior fully, doubt him never,
Seek him truly now, his faith be thine;
With immortal rays thy brow shall shine
As thy reward. Hope on, hope ever—
Fret not.

Correspondence.

From Bro. L. Boutell.

BRO. GRANT:—According to appointment, I visited the churches in Harvard and Stowe, Sunday, Feb. 9th. We had an interesting gathering. They came from Clinton, Acton, Holliston, and elsewhere, to confer upon the loss and gain of our pilgrimage, and whether it is best still to confess that, "after the way which they call heresy, so worship" we "the God of our fathers." Love, zeal, and warm-hearted fellowship were manifest, and all seemed to feel the power of truth, and a love for the same, confessing with their mouths their strong determinations to deny self, bear reproach, and persevere till tribulation should end in glory. Good stirring religion took the place of formalism, and all drank from the sweet stream of living water. All separated, wishing such blessed seasons might be enjoyed more often. How blessed to have the cementing love of Jesus to bind us together.

From Stowe,—my wife with me,—I rode to Newtonville, to visit Sister Field; upon my arrival, I found that the lovers of truth and of the appearing of Jesus were to have a meeting at Bro. Smith's the same evening; so we all were glad to improve the privilege of meeting with those who are not ashamed of Christ and his words. We found a few of Abraham's seed looking for a better country. As they were desirous that I should stay and have another meeting with them, I appointed the next evening, at Sister Field's. The time came, and we found quite an interest to hear this blessed message. It looked like former times, to see the people come together at short notice, some with horse sleds, bringing their neighbors. Thus we had another refreshing season with those of like precious faith, in looking over the last will and testament of our Elder Brother, to find what he had willed us, and when we are to get it. The result was cheering and blessed. All were inclined, by the grace of God, to be heirs of this incorruptible inheritance. This Eden looked so inviting, so desirable, that none would even consent to exchange their heirship for a "Heaven beyond the bounds of time and space." The Bible confirms our faith,—"The meek shall inherit the earth." The righteous shall be exalted "to inherit the land." Amen.

Brethren, beloved of God, hold fast the inspiration of the Bible. Let the word dwell in you richly by faith. Yes, believe it so as to have its Spirit and life. We need, and must have, the Spirit of God to keep us in this hour of peril.

Thursday, I went to Ashland, to visit the family of Bro. James Chickering, the only Advent family in the town that I knew. As they desired a meeting at their house, I gladly consented, and in a little while the neighborhood were apprised that meetings would be holden Friday and Saturday evenings, at the house of Bro. Chickering. There was a good turn out, and a good hearing, while I did the best I could to rightly divide the word of truth; and I could but hope that it might result in good to enlighten and save. Bro. James Chickering lives one mile west of the meeting house, and craves the patronage of the disciples at his pilgrim house.

Sunday, by request, we went to Cordaville, where a hall was offered us for meetings. This is a new place for our doctrines to be preached, but we found some of our faith in this village, and some at Southville. We went to the hall, and found due preparation for singing by the choir, and the people coming together to hear the word of life. We had a good congregation of attentive hearers, while we endeavored to present the plan of redemption in all its harmony, as given in the Scriptures of divine truth, letting the hearer judge of our success. With Paul, we say, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." I think an interest was created to hear more upon the subject of the literal fulfillment of the word. But little can be done in one day to bring back to a plain, simple exposition of the Bible those whose instruction has been wrong for a long term of years. But thank the Lord, true doctrine is gaining ground amid the most determined opposition of the churches and world. I hope this people will be permitted to hear more soon, and, by the blessing of God, be many brought from darkness into God's marvelous light.

The Congregational minister of Southboro, by previous appointment, preached in the hall the same evening, to many of the same congregation, declaring to them the natural immortality of the soul, and its eternal progression in sin and misery, unless repentance redeems it to the felicity of the spirit world. The people, I thought, could plainly see the contrast, and my hope is they may let the Bible decide, and where the plain testimony leads them, there be ready to stand.

Bro. Dorr and wife, with Sister Day, are old soldiers in this warfare of truth against error, and I hope they will be encouraged to make more effort to get the word of life among this people, that they may be wise unto SALVATION.

I left Monday, feeling an assurance that truth was mighty, through God, and would have its influence, by the Spirit of God, in answer to prayer. There ought to be more effort in new places. The result would be glorious.

BRO. GRANT:—In reference to our correspondence with Bro. Fike, I thought that some extracts might be interesting to some of your readers, and hence will copy a few which will reflect a specimen of what is going on in that so recently wilderness country. He says:—"I am unable to say that my prospects before me are better than they have been. I have been working for wages (he is a good blacksmith) all the time except the short time I was in Samalcs. I am now expecting something new. I expect to go to the Washae or Humbolt mines this winter or next spring, providing Mr. Chester will report favorably. He is there on an expedition now. He started on the 30th of Oct., '61, with Mr. Lantz, taking with them seven hundred and eighteen fat hogs, eleven teams, three of their own, one eight, one four, and one two horse teams. Those of the hired teams were six horse, and the rest, except two or three, were all four horse teams. They were loaded with twenty-two tons of barley, 1200 pounds salt, and 4000 pounds flour, besides other provision and groceries and a large cast stove, several large kettles, axes, carpenter tools, keg of nails, and eleven men besides himself and teamsters. He went prepared to stop anywhere in the mountains and build a house and slaughter his hogs provided the snow should fall deep. Last Friday Mr. Chester heard from him by a man that came directly from there. He got through with 698 hogs, having lost 20; has a house built and ready for business, and, as the saying is here, can make a nice thing of it. Their hogs cost them four cents per pound, and worth ten cents there. He intends to cure the meat and retail it in the spring. Last fall it was worth forty cents. The distance from here to Washae is 150 miles across the Sierra Nevada mountains, and a dreadful road to travel. The Humbolt mines have recently been discovered, and are said to be much the richest." He says, "I sold three of my horses for $800—have one left and the little wagon for our own convenience. Winter has now commenced. We had the first rain (since last May) the fore part of this month (now Nov. 24); since which time we have had two or three showers. Some of the farmers are commencing to plow and the grass to spring up, while the coast range forty miles west, and the Sierra Nevada mountains ten miles east of us are covered with snow."

He says: "Thus I am striving to do the best I can under circumstances, and hope an entrance will be administered unto me, with all the dear saints, into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. My faith in God's word is unshaken. Bless God. I trust through grace that all the isms of this world cannot move me. I feel interested in the present movements of the world. My dear friends, what of the night? Are we not in the darkest hour, and has it not nearly passed away? O may we all be ready for the return of our Master."

BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—I miss the companionship of many dear ones, now so far from me. Yet it cheers my heart to hear from you through the Crisis and Harbinger. I wish more of the friends would write for our good papers. The Editors would devote one page to a sort of written Conference Report, and how glad I would be if scores would bring in their testimony. There are brethren and sisters hid away in valleys, whom we never hear from. Wherever the saints are scattered, they ought to speak to us. We want to know you. Come, drop a line, friends.

Well, the war spirit is here, and our Canadian men are forming themselves into companies that shall go at the Queen's bidding. England is sending us troops, and fortifications are to be builded here. What this is for we know not. One thing is certain,—the Lord has a controversy with the nations, and he will gain eternal victory. Then let us serve him.

The Baptists are doing a work in this community. Several profane men have become serious. They have lively meetings; talk well for people who have little to talk about. While they find that whole truth, Our church is alive; members scattered, poor, and some of them sick. Sometimes think we are a miserable company; but when compared with the sects around—six of them—I conclude we are on the right track. Like all others, we are not so active as we should be. But I think it pretty well if we live at all, in these awful times. The wicked are hardened. More sin committed than formerly.

I am trying to be good, but have to fight for it. Find nature a mighty foe. Hope to be saved, through the grace that is in Christ Jesus. I believe time is short. It is an overwhelming thought, that Jesus is to appear in person among men, and close up the affairs of this world, ending the day of grace. O that we may be ready for that day! Let us be faithful. Pray for me. I have new and unexpected trials, and need more grace. God bless us all, is my prayer.

BRN. GRANT AND MORGAN:—The responses to the proposed "Try Company," from the children, are encouraging. The Scripture questions and answers given by them will, no doubt, awaken an interest in the study of the Scriptures, and be the means of fortifying their minds with Scripture truth, and raise up an army to do battle against the sins and errors and fables of these days. If the world continues many years longer in its present state, they will need all the helps that can be derived from the Scriptures, and all other sources, to prevent them from being overwhelmed in the perils of these last days.

The development of the character of a large majority of the youth of this age, shows a great lack of religious training and parental authority, and confirms us in the belief of the fulfillment of the sign spoken of by the apostle—"disobedient to parents." Children at the present time, at the age of seven or ten years, often become masters of their parents; or at least, have their own way in most every thing they desire. Signs there's no mistaking proclaim Messiah near.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul

Diphtheria.

To the Editor of the Boston Journal:

From recent issues of your paper I learn that this fearful disease is doing its work of death in some portions of our neighboring State of Maine. I doubt not the public will kindly receive any suggestions which may contribute to a more successful treatment of this modern scourge; and therefore venture to give publicity to the treatment I have used with unfailing success. The remedy on which I chiefly depend is the Actea Racemosa, or Black Snakeroot, which is used both locally as a gargle and taken internally. As a gargle, one teaspoonful of the tincture is added to two tablespoonfuls of water and gargled every hour for twenty-four hours, or till the progress of the disease is arrested; after which the intervals may be extended to an hour and a half, or more, as the symptoms may justify. In connection with the use of the gargle, or separately, the adult patient should take internally to the amount of two or three teaspoonsful of the tincture in the course of twenty-four hours.

In addition to the foregoing I give ten drops of the muriated tincture of iron three times in the twenty-four hours, and a powder of three to five grains of the chlorate of potash in the interval. Under this treatment a very decided improvement takes place within the first twenty-four hours, the ash colored membrane disappears usually within two days, and the patient overcomes the malignant tendency of the disease.

The foregoing doses are for adults; for children they should of course be diminished according to age, &c. It will be observed that great importance is attached to the frequent use of the gargle—that is, every hour—in order to overcome the morbific tendency of the disease by a constantly counteracting impression. In order to guard against a relapse, an occasional use of the remedies should be continued for several days after the removal of the membrane and subsidance of unpleasant symptoms. To complete the cure, a generous diet and other restoratives may be used as the intelligent practitioner shall direct.

How to save your Eyes.

By sitting in such a position as will allow the light to fall obliquely over the shoulder while reading or sewing.

By not using the eyes for such purposes by an artificial light, especially gas light.

By avoiding the special use of the eyes in the morning before breakfast.

By resting them for half a minute or so, while reading or sewing, or looking at things at a distance or up to the sky, relief is immediately felt by so doing.

Never pick any collected matter from the eyelashes or corners of the eyes with the finger nails; rather moisten it and rub it away carefully with the ball of the finger.

Keep the feet warm, and never cool the head suddenly under penalty of inflamation of the eyes.

It is better to bathe the eyes on the outside at night than morning, but it will not do harm to bathe them both morning and evening.

The moment the eye feels tired, the moment you are conscious of an effort to read or sew, lay aside the book or needle and take a walk for an hour, or employ yourself in some active exercise not requiring the close use of the eyes.—Scientific American.

Poisonous properties of Brine.

Brine, in which our meat or fish has been salted, is poisonous to domestic animals. If left in their own way, they will partake as freely of it as they will of pure salt, when it very often proves fatal. The Union Medicale, a French publication, gives an account of the researches of M. Reynal in regard to the poisonous properties of brine. From a series of experiments detailed, he draws the following conclusions:

First, That three or four months after its preparation it acquires poisonous properties.

Second, That the mean poisonous dose for a horse is about four pints; for a hog, one pint; and for a dog, four or five gallons.

Third, That in less doses it produces vomiting in the dog and hog.

Fourth, That the employment of this substance, mixed with the food, continued for a certain time, even in small quantities, may be fatal.

We know from experience, says the Valley Farmer, that brine, if swallowed by hogs and other animals, will prove fatal, yet we doubt if the subject is susceptible of the definite results as stated by M. Reynal, for the degree of the poisonous properties of brine depends upon various circumstances. We have known a much less quantity to prove fatal than that stated above.

A Remedy for Sleeplessness.

How to get sleep is to many persons a matter of great importance. Nervous persons, who are troubled with wakefulness and excitability, usually have a tendency of blood on the brain, with cold extremities. The pressure of blood upon the brain keeps it in a stimulated or wakeful state, and the pulsations in the head are often painful. Let such rise and chafe the body and extremities with a brush or towel, or rub smartly with the hands, to promote circulation, and withdraw the excessive amount of blood from the brain, and they will fall asleep in a few minutes. A cold bath, or a sponge bath and rubbing, or a good run, or a rapid walk in the open air, or going up or down stairs a few times just before retiring, will aid in equalizing circulation and promoting sleep. These rules are simple and easy of application in castle or cabin, mansion or cottage, and may minister to the comfort of thousands who would freely expend money for an anodyne to promote "Nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep."—Scientific American.

CORN GRIDDLE CAKES.—Almost every one is interested in knowing how to make corn cakes most palatable since so much of it will be used in these straightened times. The following is said to be an excellent receipt:—Scald at night half the quantity of meal you are going to use, mix the other with cold water, having it the consistency of thick batter; add a little salt, and set it to rise; it will need no yeast. In the morning the cakes will be light and crisp. Skimmings, where meat has been boiled, is best for frying them with. Fry slowly.

CORN BREAD.—The following is the formula given for making corn bread like the loaf which took the first prize at Orange Judd's great Corn-bread Show: To two quarts of meal add one pint of bread sponge; water sufficiently to wet the whole; add half a pint of flour, and a tablespoonful of salt; let it rise; then knead well for the second time, and place the dough in the oven, and allow it to bake an hour and a half.

HAVE YOU HEADACHE?—Keep your lower extremities warm, stop drinking tea and coffee, eat less, don't sleep with your head high, and avoid hot feather pillows. Be sure that you always breathe a pure air, and exercise much. Women who wear their hair excessively long and tightly bound up, are constantly subject to headache. The remedy lies in removing the cause.

CORNS.—Having allowed them to come, either through neglect, or satisfying the caprices of fashion or vanity, the only way to get rid of them effectually is to give them full liberty to grow until they ripen and fall off; in fact do not irritate them by pressure of any kind, and the annoyances will depart of their own natural accord.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For the Crisis.

He's Coming.

He's coming, the King, in his beauty, to reign,
The earth all subdued and renewed his domain;
The curse shall remove and the blessing come in,
And glory be found where was sorrow and sin.

He's coming, the Savior, his saints to redeem;
The thunders may roar and the lightnings may gleam;
Huge billows may swell and rude tempests arise,
Yet Jesus shall come to the world, from the skies.

He's coming, the Christ, and the dead shall awake;
Again earth's foundation to centre shall shake;
The trumpet shall sound, and the sleepers appear,
And joy to behold Jerusalem here

He's coming, the Lord, and the judgment shall sit,
No sin and no sinner the Judge shall omit;
All nations shall hasten to hear of their fate,—
The righteous be heirs to a glorious estate.

But, sinner, no tears can your destiny place
With those who are saved by immutable grace;
No sighing can gain you the joys of the just,— Mortality then must return to the dust.

The New Covenant.

God proposes in this prophecy to do for the house of Israel, and the house of Judah, something similar, though differing, in some material aspect, from the covenant which had been made with their fathers at the time of their deliverance from Egypt. In that first covenant, God agreed to establish them as his own chosen people in the land of Canaan, where he would protect them on condition that they would serve and obey him; to which agreement they assented on their part. The covenant was then proposed to them by Moses, their leader, who "wrote all the words of the Lord." The law of commandments was then given to Moses on Mount Sinai, in the presence and hearing of the whole people. Moses then prepared an altar upon which the people offered burnt offerings, and sacrificed peace offerings of oxen unto the Lord. He then took half of the blood and sprinkled the altar, and half of the blood he put in basins. "And he took the book of the covenant and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient. And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning his words." Ex. 24: 7, 8.

The people were now brought into covenant with God; and the covenant having been sealed with blood, they became his chosen people, with whom he would dwell. But in process of time, this same people violated that covenant by reason of their sins and transgression; hence it became necessary that a new covenant should be made, which would differ from the old one. In what particulars that would differ, we learn from divine inspiration. The first prophecy which I will notice is that of Daniel. He had been shown in vision that his people, in consequence of transgression, would be opposed, and subjugated by four great monarchies, all of which had been explained to him; the last of which was more terrible than were the preceding ones. But he had also understood that at their final destruction the God of heaven would set up a kingdom, which would last forever. And in answer to his prayer concerning his city, and his people, Gabriel made known to him what would occur to them in the latter times, and gave him the prophecy of the seventy weeks, in which time they would be visited by their Messiah, who would abolish the old covenant, and confirm another to them.

"Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy. Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks; the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times. And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself. And the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week. And in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate."—Dan. 9: 24–27.

In this prophecy is given a general statement of what would occur in the time specified; to wit, the seventy weeks. Then a particular statement of the manner in which that would be accomplished. What would occur in regard to the holy city, which city had been selected as the place where an atonement would be made for transgression. The purpose pertains to the people and the city, and what would be accomplished in that purpose; to wit, sin and transgression would be restrained by virtue of that atonement,—the way would be opened up by which sin might be pardoned and the transgressor forgiven, and the means introduced by which persons might become righteous,—which way or means would continue through all changes, and still exist when the heavens would be no more. But for the purposes of this covenant, I conceive the 27th verse to be the most material part of this prophecy, as it points out conclusively the time when the new covenant was made, and to whom it was to be confirmed.

The next prophecy which I will introduce is that of Jeremiah, which is as follows:—"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will sow the house of Israel and the house of Judah, with the seed of man, and with the seed of beasts. And it shall come to pass, that like as I have watched over them, to pluck up, and to break down, and to throw down, and to afflict; so will I watch over them, to build and to plant, saith the Lord. In those days they shall say no more, the fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge. But every one shall die for his own iniquity: every man that eateth the sour grape his teeth shall be set on edge. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah. Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of Egypt; which my covenant they break, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord. But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel. After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward part, and write it in their hearts, and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them, unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord; for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more."—Jer. 31: 27–34.

That this covenant was made by Jesus Christ at his first advent is settled beyond all doubt by Paul. "For if that first covenant had been faultless, there should no place have been sought for the second. For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant, etc., (repeating verbatim the prophecy of Jeremiah). In that he saith, a new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away."—Heb. 8: 7–13. Can there be any position more clearly established than the fact, that the old covenant was to be superseded by the one in this very prophecy of Jeremiah? But the apostle does not even stop here. He next proceeds to show that the bloody sacrifices of the law were but "a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience; which stood only in meats and drinks, and divers washings, and carnal ordinances, imposed on them until the time of reformation. But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building. Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? And for this cause he is the Mediator of the new testament; that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. For where a testament is, there must of necessity be the death of the testator. For a testament is of force after men are dead; otherwise, it is of no strength at all while the testator liveth. Whereupon neither the first testament was dedicated without blood."—Heb. 9: 9–18.

It does seem to me that every inquiring mind must see, from this lucid argument which the apostle has brought to bear upon the subject of the new covenant, that it was to be, and that it has been confirmed by Christ's death, and sealed by his blood; and also the impossibility that any other covenant ever can be, or ever will be made with any house of Israel; inasmuch as the offering of Christ is expressly declared to have been "once for all. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment: so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."—Heb. 9: 27, 28. Who are they that are to receive the promised eternal inheritance? They who look for his second coming, and "love his appearing." But what of all who reject him? "He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses; of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, an unholy thing, and hath done despite unto the Spirit of grace? For we know him that hath said, Vengeance belongeth unto me, I will recompense, saith the Lord. And again, the Lord shall judge his people. It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God."—Heb. 10: 28–31.

The prophecy of Amos concerning "the tabernacle of David which was fallen down," is thought by many to have its fulfillment at the second coming of Christ. But that this also is a mistaken view of that matter, is clearly shown by the same apostle in his epistle to the Hebrews. "Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. For there was a tabernacle made, the first, wherein was the candlestick, and the table, and the shew bread; which is called the sanctuary. And after the second veil, the tabernacle which is called the Holiest of all, which had the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold, wherein was the golden pot that had manna, and Aaron's rod that budded, and the tables of the covenant; and over it the cherubims of glory shadowing the mercy seat; of which we cannot now speak particularly. Now when these things were thus ordained, the priests went always into the first tabernacle, accomplishing the service of God. But unto the second went the high priest alone once every year, not without blood, which he offered for himself, and for the errors of the people. the Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest while as the first tabernacle was yet standing, which was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices, that could not make him that did the service perfect, as pertaining to the conscience. But Christ being come an high priest of good things to come, by a greater and more perfect tabernacle, not made with hands, that is to say, not of this building."—Heb. 9: 1–11. Thus he shows that the tabernacle, and the new covenant pertain to the same things, at the same point of time. The apostle James so understood and applied it, saying, "And to this agree the words of the prophets, as it is written, After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up. That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles, upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things. Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world."—Acts 15: 15–18. This agrees with the prophecy of Amos 9. Thus we have the new covenant made by Christ, and the tabernacle set up again by him, that the promise made by God to Abraham might be accomplished by extending blessings to all the nations of earth.

But it is also claimed by many, that the gospel is a dispensation to the Gentiles; consequently, they cannot be the people with whom the new covenant was to be made; but that it was to be made with the people whom God had brought back from Egypt, with whom he made the old covenant; and that this cannot be done until that people are brought again from the nations among whom they had been scattered, and are again returned into their own land. Now, that God has anywhere said that he would make or confirm a covenant to the Gentiles, as such, distinctively, is not so stated any where in the Scriptures; nor is it in his purpose necessary to make any. The manner in which they are to be saved is clearly shown by the apostle Paul. "For the scripture saith, whosoever believeth on Him shall not be ashamed. For there is no difference between the Jew and the Greek; for the same Lord over all is rich unto all that call upon him. For whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved."—Rom. 10: 11–13. "I say then, hath God cast away his people? God forbid. For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin. God hath not cast away his people whom he foreknew. Wot ye not what the scripture saith of Elias? how he maketh intercession to God against Israel, saying, Lord, they have killed thy prophets, and digged down thine altars; and I am left alone, and they seek my life. But what saith the answer of God unto him? I have reserved to myself seven thousand men, who have not bowed the knee to the image of Baal. Even so then at this present time also, there is a remnant according to the election of grace. And if by grace, then is it no more of works: otherwise grace is no more grace. But if it be of works, then is it no more grace; otherwise work is no more work. What then? Israel hath not obtained that which he seeketh for; but the election hath obtained it, and the rest were blinded. . . . And if some of the branches be broken off, and thou, being a wild olive tree, wert graffed in among them, and with them partakest of the root and fatness of the olive tree; boast not against the branches. But if thou boast, thou bearest not the root, but the root thee. . . . And so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, There shall come out of Sion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant unto them, when I shall take away their sins."—Rom. 11 1–7, 17, 18, 26, 27. "I am the good shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine. As the Father knoweth me, even so know I the Father and I lay down my life for the sheep. And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold, them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice: and there shall be one fold and one shepherd." John 10: 14–16.

Here, we not only see how the Gentiles are gathered into the fold of promise, but it is also shown that the covenant was confirmed to the house of Israel by the Good Shepherd, but only those whom he foreknew received him; and inasmuch as the covenant must have the assent of the people, and their agreement on their part to serve and obey the testator, they, and they alone, can be the persons who are to receive its consummated blessing in the restored world; which blessings are not only the blessings of the land, and the fruits thereof, but they embrace eternal Life, to be shared in by the whole Israel of God, who will then possess the land forever, and be no more plucked out. O! what a blessed promise is this. May we all have a share and an abode in that glorious country.

There are many prophecies and scriptures which relate to this same promise, but I must now close this article with the following summing up of the points in the argument:

1st. That it was the purpose of God to establish a divine government over the children of Israel in the land of Canaan, which land was to be given into their possession upon their return from Egypt. Accordingly, when the twelve Patriarchs with their families had been brought into the wilderness to the base of Mount Sinai, Moses was commanded to assemble the people together, and propose a covenant to them, to which they on their part gave their assent. The contract was then made in the most formal manner, and written upon Mount Sinai, and which God commanded Moses to read to them. This they accepted, and promised on their part to observe and obey. Thus they now became a peculiar people and a chosen nation, over which God would be supreme; and whom he would rule by the laws and commandments which then were sealed by the blood of sacrifices, which commandments and laws were by them to be read and taught to their children throughout their generations after them, when they should come into the land which they were to possess. These laws contained blessings to them, if they should obey them, and curses if they disobeyed. Thus was a chosen nation inaugurated, to be led into their promised Canaan, whereby the sacrifices and oblations under the law became types of a better covenant and laws, that would afterward be made unto them, with better sacrifices and oblations.

2d. The old covenant was but the shadow of a new dispensation, to be inaugurated by their "Messiah," who was the promised seed through which all nations of the earth would be blessed. Hence Jesus Christ did come at the appointed time to the house of Israel, when the new covenant was proposed to them, which also involved an agreement on their part to accept and obey, similar to the old one, which was then to be done away. The way in which this new covenant would materially differ from the old would consist in the sacrifice to be offered, and the manner in which the law would be written. Under the old covenant it was written upon tables of stone, and to be confirmed by the blood of "bulls and goats." In the new, it was to be written "in their minds, and in their hearts," and to be "sealed by the precious blood of the Son of God." All, from that time, both Jew and Gentile, who would obey and serve Him with all their heart, should have no occasion to be taught by their neighbor to "know the Lord," for all (who accepted that covenant) would know him, from the least to the greatest of them." Thus all, both Jew and Gentile, would "become one fold, under one Shepherd", whereby the purpose of God, from the creation, would be finally accomplished in his Son, the rightful heir of all things; who is then to take the "throne and reign forever."

Our position now is very similar to that of Israel under the old covenant. As certainly as Moses mediated that on Mount Sinai, before they came into the possession of the promised land, into which they were afterward led, so has Christ entered into Mount Zion to mediate the new covenant, for all who will obey him; from whence he will come again, and lead his own chosen Israel into their promised inheritance, which is none other than the new earth, or Eden restored. They will then be made immortal and with him enjoy all things promised by all the prophets. Therefore, as "Moses was faithful over his house of Israel, and every precept received a just recompense of reward," so is Christ faithful over his house of Israel, under whom every precept and commandment will also "receive a just recompense of reward." How then can any covenant be again made, inasmuch as there is no other testator to die and seal it with his own blood, except Jesus Christ, who hath positively declared, "I am he that liveth, and was dead, and behold, I am alive forevermore."—Rev. 1 18.

"Preparation."

(Concluded.)

We are quite prepared for the reply to this charge. Some spiritual person will reply—"But have we not the presence of the Holy Spirit in the Church, and what more can you desire? Is not the Holy Spirit better than the sight of Divine Glory with our bodily eyes? Are you so CARNAL as to prefer the sight of your eyes to the presence of the Spirit in your heart?" Such will be the triumphant answer—and it will be just as unscriptural as all the rest! The Presence of the Spirit DOES NOT counterbalance the Personal Absence of the Lord. It is contrary to Scripture to say that it does. The Holy Spirit had been already sent when St. Peter preached to the Jews in the third chapter of the Acts—and what was the grand point on which he dwelt? Not the sending the Holy Spirit—but—"Repent, and be converted—and he SHALL SEND Jesus Christ, whom the heavens must receive until the restitution of all things." The sending of Jesus Christ from heaven was the sole object to which he directed their eyes. This one passage, alone, is sufficient to decide the question. Yet we may add that our Lord speaks of his sending the Holy Spirit as a substitute for himself—and the very idea of a substitute carries with it the idea of INSUFFICIENCY (John 16). The Presence of the Spirit can never counterbalance the absence of the Lord, for this plain reason: that the Spirit proceedeth from the Son as well as from the Father—so that the Presence of the Lord implies the Presence of the Spirit at the same time. In his Presence you have BOTH; in his absence you have only ONE.

"The proper study of mankind is Man."

So we are assured on the authority of an infidel poet, writing under the direction of an infidel statesman. On the sanctified authority of Pope and St. John, this sentiment has been welcomed with acclamation; yet nothing can be more false, and even ridiculous. Let us translate it into Scripture language, and see how it will bear translation,—

"The proper study of mankind is—worms!"

If man is our proper study we need study nothing else. He who studies worms understands all that is worth understanding! A strange conclusion. Is it nothing to understand and know him who "exerciseth loving-kindness, righteousness, and judgment, in the earth;"—who "telleth the number of the stars and calleth them all by their names"? Is it nothing to know him who is the fountain of knowledge, and from the knowledge of whom all other knowledge will eventually flow out? Yet such seems the opinion of modern Christendom. The world has run mad after education and the human intellect. Societies for scientific purposes swarm in every town; and the whole earth is like a dead carcass overspread with restless worms. But of the knowledge of God there is little; of the STUDY of God there is next to nothing. A few evangelical formulas and maxims are got up, chiefly from the writings of St. Paul, a few chapters of the "Romans" are studied and preached upon, and the infinite knowledge of God, that spreads through Scripture from first to last, is neglected as useless, and even denounced as pernicious! Such is the position of even the Evangelical world. . . .

How astonished will men be when they find that after six thousand years of uproar they have done nothing whatever towards the improvement of the world—that all their work must be taken down before the world can be renewed (2 Pet. 3). We can understand the astonishment, but we cannot understand the hatred. Nothing should rejoice men more than to have the dread responsibility taken from their awkward hands and committed to One who cannot err. To be allowed to rest from their luckless toil, and to look on, while one Divine Man, with a touch, restores all things.

Yet Christendom itself—the domain of Christ—hates the Presence of its rightful master. His Personal Reign is as clearly revealed as the atonement, yet while men grasp at the atonement from pure self-interest, they hate the Presence of the Atoner himself. They are (often) quite willing to be SAVED, but they are quite unwilling to be GOVERNED. There is no generosity in such a Faith as this. It is a poor thing to be willing to escape eternal misery. It is the very lowest sign of indwelling grace. But it is a great thing to look above salvation, and to desire the personal Presence of the Savior. To say, it is good to walk by FAITH, but it is far better to walk by SIGHT. To make salvation the lowest object of hope, and personal companionship the highest. Suppose a man were to say,—"I have a great love for such and such a person, but I would rather keep at a distance than be near him:" we should think such an expression of fervor rather ironical than complimentary. And yet in fact, and almost in word, such is our treatment of the King of Glory. And we may be assured that nothing but judgment is to be looked for until we have renounced this spirit of aversion. It is high treason against the King—and the Great Tribulation will be the penalty of the Great Treason.

The best direct preparation for the Coming of the Lord is to expect and wish for that Coming. How can we prepare for that which we do not expect? And how can we meet the Lord face to face when we are conscious that we shrink from his presence? He knows what is in man; and when he knows that his Presence is unwelcome, how can we expect him to bid us welcome into the everlasting kingdom? The Lord's Coming may, itself, be very near; a time of trial is certainly so. The whole state of the world proclaims this truth; and this very country is, of all countries, the most likely to be the first exposed to judgment. Where there is most light there is most responsibility. Where, as we boast, "the house of God" is especially to be found—there the judgment is to begin. What preparation have we made against the evil day? Our hands stained with the blood of at least one million heathen, whom we have slain through avarice, ambition or revenge. Our country defiled by incessant murders, for which scarce one murderer is punished. The love of money our one absorbing passion. Our church sunk in worldliness, and cringing to the great. Our Religious Societies consumed by the love of gain. Subscriptions—patronage—men and money their only stay—while the presence of the Holy Spirit is as much forgotten as some heathen fable! If we are "the House of God," as we boast—we are a ruinous house—so ruinous that it would cost less to pull it down and build another, than to attempt to set it up. And this is what the Lord will do. He is not coming to patch up the work of man; but to erect a building of his own, and to fill that building with the glory of his Presence. Be assured that the Lord will not accept the Church which we have to offer him; we might as well offer him a heathen temple. He will overturn it until not one stone shall be left upon another—and then build a temple of his own. The fate of Jerusalem will be the fate of the Protestant Church. Once holy—then defiled—then utterly destroyed—and hereafter to be built again, and to be called by a better name,—"Jehovah, Shammah,"—"The LORD is THERE!" So will it be with our corrupt Protestantism. It will be utterly destroyed as much as Romanism; and on the ground once occupied by both a New Religion will arise, which shall be called by a New Name,—"THE LORD IS THERE." It will no longer be the religion of the Gospel, for that will have done its work—but the Religion of the KINGDOM: when the Lord will be King, and all mankind his subjects. It is to that day alone the world is advancing—to that day alone all the revelations of Scripture are directed—for that day alone the whole creation waits—and it is to prepare for that day the Gospel has been preached. The Kingdom is the END—the Gospel only the MEANS. But modern Christianity, in its hatred of God's Presence, has denied the End—blotted out the Hope—and substituted a false Gospel of its own. It calls Christ "the King"—but it excludes him from the Kingdom; and never shall Christendom prosper—never shall men be prepared for the "Judgment to come," until they have learned to submit to God's decree, and to welcome the True and rightful KING to his True and rightful Kingdom—the Kingdom of the Earth, which he has purchased with his own blood.

It is a common saying, that "rightly to divide the Word of Truth," means "to give to saints and sinners each their portion." This old interpretation is like everything else,—a fragment of our inveterate selfishness and man-worship. We think the "Word of God" has nothing to do with any one but MAN. But surely the "Word of God" must have something to do with him whose word it is! "Rightly to divide the Word of Tr[illegible]" means, to give to GOD and MAN, each his portion. To forget MAN, if possible, for one instant, and to give up one thought to that antiquated subject, the glory of God. To suppose, for one instant, that man is saved; and then to carry on the mind to the final object of salvation,—the establishment of a kingdom in which the Savior and the saved shall meet together in one vast system of policy extending from the throne of heaven to the remotest corners of the earth; and in which the Redeemer shall find, at last, an equivalent for his redeeming blood.

Patristic Theology.

In certain quarters and for certain purposes, for reasons that must be apparent to the discerning, great use is made, and stress laid upon the theology of the Fathers. They are appealed to with the utmost confidence, as though their opinions had equal weight and authority with the Scriptures themselves. We are told that they lived so much nearer apostolic times, that they must necessarily have had better opportunities for understanding the Bible; and it is presumption to call in question their opinions. This extreme deference for the notions of the fathers savors too much of the Catholic doctrine of tradition, to be palatable to a Protestant; and though not exactly the same, it is at least cousin German to that doctrine. Besides, if we adopt them as authority, we must take them entire with all their absurdities; their contradictions, and puerilities. I like what Dr. Adam Clarke wrote in his notes upon the 8th chapter of Proverbs. He says, "As to the Fathers, in general, they were not all agreed on this subject; some supposing Christ, others the Holy Spirit, was meant in this chapter. But of these we may safely state, that there is not a truth in the most orthodox creed, that cannot be proved by their authority; nor a heresy that has disgraced the Romish church, that may not challenge them as its abettors. In points of doctrine, their authority is with me nothing.

The word of God alone contains my creed. On a number of points I can go to the Greek and Latin Fathers of the church to know what they believed, and what the people of their respective communions believed; but after all this I must return to God's word to know what he would have me believe. No part of a Protestant's creed stands on the decision of Fathers and councils. By appealing to the Bible alone as the rule for the faith and practice of christians, they confounded and defeated their papistical adversaries, who could not prove their doctrines but by Fathers and councils. Hence their peculiar doctrines stand in their ultimate proof upon these; and those of Protestantism on the Bible."

Again Clarke says, "Bodies of divinity I do most heartily dislike; they tend to supersede the Bible, and besides this they are exceedingly dangerous. They often give false notions, and by their mode of quoting isolated texts of Scripture greatly pervert the true meaning of the word of God. This is my opinion of them." In this opinion we may all safely concur. Let us beware how we make void the word of God by belief in the absurd opinions of uninspired men. Prove all things; hold fast that which is good. Do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy God.

The Opening of the Fifth Seal.

NUMBER FIVE.—Concluded.

"And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held; and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also, and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled."—Rev. 6: 9-11.

Let us now see when Paul expected to receive his "crown of righteousness." When imprisoned and under the sentence of death, he wrote his last CHARGE to Timothy, buoyed up above the fear of death by the instruction and promise of our Lord,—"Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer. Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." Although this particular promise was not written by the Revelator until after Paul had sealed his testimony with his blood, yet he had received by divine revelation from the Lord himself all that was needful to qualify him for his work. To Timothy he writes: "For God hath not given us the spirit of fear; but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind. Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner; but be thou partaker of the afflictions of the gospel according to the power of God; who hath saved us, and called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Jesus Christ before the world began; but is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel, whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles. For the which cause I also suffer these things: nevertheless I am not ashamed; for I know whom I have believed (or trusted, margin), and am persuaded that he is able to keep that (life) which I have committed unto him against that day."—2 Tim. 1: 7-12.

Paul was one of the souls, or persons, whom the Revelator saw in the picture drawn upon the roll, there represented as being under the altar of sacrifice, slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held; and it is remarkable that Paul, in view of his own death, uses the same figure. "I am now ready to be offered (as an offering upon the altar), and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."—2 Tim. 4: 6-8. Hence they all receive their crowns together at that day, the day of the Lord's appearing "the second time without sin unto salvation."—Heb. 9: 28. He had previously spoken of his appearing the first time,—2 Tim. 1: 10, to fulfill what God had purposed before the world began; but he did not then abolish death, since it still has dominion over us. His appearing the second time therefore is to finish the work purposed of God, and put those that look for him in possession of life and immortality. Thus Paul committed his mortal life to him with firm confidence in his promise, "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake and the gospel's, the same shall save it."—Mar. 8: 35. Paul also declares that he is not ashamed of Jesus, nor of the testimony which he had borne for him, Rom. 1: 16; therefore he can look for him without fear of the doom,—"Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels."—Mar. 8: 38. "For the Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels: and then he shall reward every man according to his works." Matt. 16: 27.

The doctrine, therefore, that every one is rewarded immediately after death, seems to have been borrowed from heathen idolatry, of which doctrine of idolaters Paul gives an intimation, by contrasting their belief with the truth of the gospel which he preached. 1 Thess. 1: 9,—"How ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven." Here waiting seems to imply the belief that the reward was given immediately after death, according to the doctrine of the idolaters from which they turned, and received that of Paul, which taught them to wait for the Son of the living God from heaven, "whom he raised from the dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath to come." From this it appears that Paul understood literally the promise, Acts 1: 11,—"This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Therefore we cannot understand the representation of the souls under the altar as implying that the martyrs are immediately admitted into a state of felicity, of conscious enjoyment in heaven, according to the teaching of some commentators, without contradicting other plain portions of Scripture. [illegible] Scott remarks:—"The white robes given to each of them denoted that they were immediately admitted into a state of felicity, as accepted and holy"; while at the same time he admits that the language of verse 10,—"How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?"—"is rather suited to the imperfect state of the saints in this world, than to the perfection of their state in heaven; there is no impatience, no uneasiness, no need of admonition; but in this world is great need of patience." This is a very sensible admission, and proves conclusively that the language cannot be applied to glorified saints, without admitting impatience and impropriety in the glorified state. This confirms one in the belief that it is the language of the martyrs while suffering the horrors of persecution, as I have before stated. As Scott remarks, "In this world is great need of patience." James realized this, and says to the rich, unbelieving murderers of Christ, "Ye have condemned and killed the just (one); and he doth not resist you." Then addressing his believing brethren, he says, "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord."—James 5: 6, 7. This harmonizes with what Paul taught the Thessalonians, to wait for the Lord from heaven. James 5: 11, refers to Job as an example of patience worthy of imitation. Let us see how patient Job was in relation to this subject, the coming of the Lord, of which James is speaking. Job says, 14: 14, "If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time (after death) will I wait (to live again) until my change come." "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and after I shall awake, though this body be destroyed, yet out of my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not a stranger: my reins within me are consumed with earnest desire for that day."—19: 25-27.

I have given the marginal readings in this last quotation, because they seem more correctly to express the meaning of the writer, and to harmonize with what he had before written, 14: 12,—"So man lieth down, and riseth not: till the heavens be no more they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." This is the patience of Job, to wait all the days of his appointed time, knowing that his Redeemer would stand upon the earth at the latter day, to which James refers his believing brethren as an example of patience in waiting for the coming of the Lord. Thus we have the teaching of Job, Paul, and James, confirming the testimony of Jesus Christ upon the same subject, that we are to wait patiently for the "crown of life," until the day of his appearing the second time without sin unto salvation. Therefore, any interpretation of the figurative representation of the souls under the altar which contradicts this plain, positive testimony, cannot be admitted as coming through Divine Inspiration. THE BOSTON CONFERENCE.

The Conference at Chapman Hall, Boston, of which notice was given in last week's Crisis, will commence on Wednesday, March 26th, at 2 1-2 P. M., instead of Tuesday, as noticed in last week's paper.

We shall expect a good meeting. No pains will be spared on the part of the church here to make this gathering pleasant and profitable to all who attend. We are anxious to see the faces of our brethren abroad, and expect that those who attend this annual gathering will be comforted and blessed. It is time for all to be awake. The signs of the times, and the stirring events connected with the nations of earth, show the fulfillment of prophecy, and the speedy advent of the Son of man. May all who come to this meeting receive such light and encouragement as shall bless and strengthen them to fight the good fight of faith. F. H. BERICK, for the brethren.

State of Europe.

"The presages of a desperate winter are multiplying. Far and wide, upon the continent, financial clouds gather over the political and industrial prospect. . . . Surveying the broad arena of Europe, can it be honestly affirmed that the aspects of the season are cheerful? There is no panic, but, at the same time, there is no approach to a settlement of existing complications in Italy. The French horizon is in all directions dark, ominous, and melancholy. Austria stands on the brink of civil war, and Russia is returning to barbarism. . . . Turkey can hardly be kept afloat; and elsewhere, statesmen must work incessantly at the pumps to prevent the PEACE OF EUROPE FROM SINKING INTO FATHOMLESS DEPTHS OF SLAUGHTER."—London Chron., Nov. 28th. Quoted in N. Y. Herald Friday, Dec. 13, 1861.

The preceding paragraph shows how secular journalists regard the aspects of the present age. Are christians awake to their duty? Do they sound the words of warning, the alarm of war, as faithfully as the times demand? The world verges on to "the war (polemos) of the great day of God Almighty." Let us each do our work before the storm bursts in fury on the earth.

"Lovers of Pleasure."

That the majority of professors of religion are "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God" is a fact too well established to be successfully controverted; but the tide is continually rising and sweeping off new ones, and carrying them to the great whirlpool of worldly festivities where men and women are drowned in perdition. They heed not their danger till it is too late to be rescued. They sneer at the entreaties of their friends, and resist the strivings of the Holy Spirit, while mercy invites, virtually saying to the Lord, that he must wait till they get ready to heed his call; and when they can serve the devil no longer, they will ask for pardon; but the Lord says to such:—"I have called; and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded. . . . Ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof, I also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh, when your fear cometh as a desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind." O what a sad hour awaits the "lovers of pleasures."

"The following account of a donation party is but one among many.—O.

"The donation was a signal success, as you will see when I state that the number of people present was four hundred and fifty, and the net receipts nearly one hundred and fifty dollars. At four o'clock A. M., the musicians gave notice to select partners for the last dance, after which three cheers went up for the stars and stripes that decorated the hall (a barn forty by sixty)—and the party dispersed, all admitting that Friday evening, Jan. 17th, 1862, would be long and pleasantly remembered."

The Italian Question.

The revolutionary spirit is still at work in Italy, and liable to burst forth soon with great fury. The Italians are determined that the power of the Pope shall be utterly broken, so as never to be felt again. This part of their programme comes next in order for execution. The "woman" drunken with the blood of the saints, and with the blood of the "martyrs of Jesus," must soon drink from "the cup" filled by her enemies. There is no possibility for her to escape. The time is at hand. The modern Cyrus and Darius are about to execute their plans and take mystical Babylon.

The following extract, from a Florence correspondent to the New York Independent, will give us some idea of the state of things in and about Rome:—O.

"FLORENCE, Feb. 5th, '62.

To the Editors of the Independent:

The recent diplomatic conference between the French Minister at Rome and Cardinal Antonelli, gives some hope to the Italians that the solution or the Roman question may be near at hand. The impracticability of the Pope—or what the Italians call the brutal obstinacy of the Roman court—has at length exhausted the patience both of France and Italy. The Emperor Napoleon has offered, through his Minister, to secure the Pope in a condition of dignity and independence if he will abdicate his temporal rights. But the Holy See responds in the stereotyped phrase—'non possumus.' Antonelli declared to the French Minister that there was 'no disagreement between the Roman Pontiff and Italy; and although the 'Holy Father' had declined all transactions with the Cabinet of Turin, yet he was in excellent relations with the Italian people themselves.'

This remark has given great offence to the people of Italy; and in Florence there was a grand popular demonstration last Sunday, to protest against the assertion of Cardinal Antonelli. Early in the morning the city was gay with tri-colored banners. At eleven o'clock the large Piazza dell' Indipendenza was filled with patriotic citizens eager to prove they were not in good relations with the Pope. What transpired there I cannot state from personal knowledge; but about one o'clock, I should think, more than ten thousand people passed under my windows with bands of music and banners, with mottoes and devices suited to the occasion. Most of the banners had the words, Rome, the capital of Italy! Down with the Pope-King! On one I read the additional words, Liberty of Conscience, and Liberty of Worship; on another, Protest against French occupation.

This immense crowd appeared before the house of the French Consul-General, and from thousands of lips went forth the cry—We will have Rome! Hurrah for the French! but in their own country! Thank your Emperor, but let him leave us to ourselves!

There was no disorder, no riotous conduct, in this vast assemblage. The people were called to make a "solemn protest against the impudent assertion that the Italian people were on good terms with the Pope and Court of Rome." And certainly they adopted an innocent but very significant method of showing their just indignation against this new insult. Similar demonstrations were made the same day in other parts of Italy.

Appearances certainly indicate the immediate downfall of the temporal power of the Pope. The President of the King's Cabinet, Baron Ricasoli, declared not long since that 'at Rome only Italy would find its coronation, its independence, and its unity.' And last month he declared to the Parliament that 'every day, every hour, every minute, the Roman question is ripening; it advances and approaches its solution. While I am speaking, it cannot be denied that it is making great progress.'

By reference to the date of the conference between De Lavalette and Cardinal Antonelli, the speech of Ricasoli must have been made with the knowledge of the instructions sent from Paris to Rome.

Let us hope that this question which has so long vexed the Italians, and prevented the consummation of their hopes, will soon be solved.

But will the Pope, with a good grace, 'render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's?' Antonelli declared to the French Minister that the Pope and cardinals had taken an oath never to cede the least portion of the territory of the Church.' If they have the grace of perseverance, and keep their oath, then, doubtless, the Pope will leave Italy, and the rupture between him and the people will be complete and final."

France and Rome.

It is evident that the Napoleon dynasty, the last head of the scarlet-colored beast, of Rev. 17, being also the last husband of the "woman" on the "seven hills," will soon cease to be her protector; consequently, we must be very near the great day of the Lord, when "the Ancient of days" will open the judgment books before "thousand thousands, . . and ten thousand times ten thousand." All things are rapidly converging to a grand focal point, where the lines of prophetic events cross each other, and introduce to our world the One born "in Bethlehem of Judea." We see no possibility to avoid this conclusion.

Daniel says, when speaking of the Roman power represented by the "little horn," "I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them, until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Hence it follows that the saints are as near the time to possess their kingdom, as we are to the end of the little horn power, which is most surely but a short distance in the future.

We clip the following from the Catholic of March 1st, 1862:—

"PREPARATIONS FOR WAR IN ITALY.—A letter from Venice in the Nord says: 'It is more certain than ever that a reactionary campaign of extraordinary proportions is about to take place under the auspices, more or less avowed, of Austria.' "

A Paris correspondent, under date of Jan. 28th, 1862, says:—

"Among the diplomatic correspondence laid to-day on the table of the Corps Legislatif, is a note from M. Thouvenel to the Marquis de Lavalette, French Ambassador at Rome, dated Jan. 11, of which the following is a summary.—

'In recognizing the Kingdom of Italy, the Emperor's government acted under the conviction that the restoration of past dynasties was no longer possible. Among the Catholic monarchies, three only—namely, Austria, Spain and Bavaria—have refrained from renewing official relations with Turin. No Cabinet, however, thinks of reacting by force against the order of things inaugurated in Italy.' "

He then quotes the following from Cardinal Antonelli, the Pope's right hand man:—

"As regards entering into any compact with the spoilers of the Church, we shall never do it. Any transaction on this point is impossible. The Sovereign Pontiff, as well as the Cardinals, before being nominated, bind themselves by oath never to cede any of the territory of the Church. The Holy Father will therefore make no cession of that nature. A conclave of Cardinals would have no right to do so, neither would a new Pope nor any of his successors from century to century. With reference to the question of your Excellency whether there is any hope of an arrangement, I believe it to be my duty to reply in the negative.' "

We see from the foregoing that there is no chance for France or any other nation to make any compromise with the Pope. He will have the whole or none. We shall soon see which.—O.

PERSONAL.—We are glad to learn of the success of Bro. C. F. Hudson in his western mission, while endeavoring to convince the people that God will cause sin and misery to cease by the destruction of the sinner. The following is from a Chicago correspondent of the New York Independent:—O.

"Rev. C. F. Hudson, who holds that the future punishment of the wicked will end in the extinction of their being, and in everlasting loss, is in this city selling the assortment of books and tracts which he has written on this subject. He has letters from several well-known Presbyterian ministers, expressing their confidence in him as a christian and a minister; and while they dissent from his view on this point, they deem his error insufficient to exclude him from church or ministerial fellowship. He feels encouraged by the ready sale of his writings, and says that he knows quite a number of orthodox ministers who give their assent to his views."

Apostasy.

The following extract from the Review and Herald gives another sample of the boasted progress of these days. People seem very unwilling to admit the failure of their schemes for the conversion of the world, but there are some who dare speak the truth. Among such are the following:—O.

"Dr. Cumming, of England, says: 'I believe that one half of the professors of the gospel are nothing better than practical infidels.'—Time of the End, p. 188.

Robert Atkins, in a sermon preached in London, says: 'The professors of religion of the present day, in every church, are lovers of the world, conformers to the world, lovers of creature comfort, and aspirers after respectability. . . . . Apostasy, apostasy, apostasy, is engraven on the front of the church.'

Mr. O. Scott (Wesleyan Methodist) says: 'Most of the denominations of the present day might be called churches of the world with more propriety than churches of Christ.'

The following is from the report of the Michigan yearly conference, published in the True Wesleyan, Nov. 15, 1851:

'The world, commercial, political and ecclesiastical, are alike, and are together going in the broad way that leads to death. Politics, commerce, and nominal religion, all connive at sin, reciprocally aid each other, and unite to crush the poor. Falsehood is unblushingly uttered in the forum and the pulpit, and sins that would shock the moral sensibilities of the heathen, go unrebuked in all the great denominations of our land. These churches are like the Jewish church when the Savior exclaimed, "Wo unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites!" How applicable the call, 'Come out of her, my people.' "

Progression.

The advocates of Spiritualism talk loudly about "progression." From time to time, we have given specimens of their progress in morals and doctrines. Here is another sample of their progress. Under the head of "New Books," in the Herald of Progress, we find the following notice:—

"The New Testament of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, as revised and corrected by the Spirits. This is an edition of the New Testament, which purports to be ushered into the world after revision by spirits, under the direction of Jesus Christ, the object being to correct errors in statements of fact and doctrine made by the evangelists and apostles."

We are informed in the Editorial notice of this work, that, among other changes, the first chapter of Matthew is omitted, "and the larger part of the book of Revelations." The writer thinks "this may be very well." We soon expect to see more striking examples of progression.—O.

The Fathers.

With many, the testimony of "the Fathers" seems to weigh more than the Scriptures. The following sensible and truthful remarks from Dr. Adam Clarke on this point, are worthy of consideration. Perhaps no man was better prepared to speak correctly on this subject. He says:—

"We should take heed how we quote the fathers in proof of the doctrines of the gospel, because he who knows them best knows that on many of those subjects they blow hot and cold."—Autobiography of A. Clarke, p. 134.

Let us make the BIBLE our ONLY rule of faith and practice, if all the creeds of christendom are ruined.—O.

Religious Enjoyment.

It is certainly most true, that the only guarantee of a truly religious life, lies in the fact that the principles of the gospel are well digested and settled in the mind of the believer: principles that exercise a governing influence in the moral conduct and life. But it is equally true that in all such persons, there is a joy which, like an ever-flowing fountain, unceasingly sends forth its cheering and healthful influences through all the varied moods and ramifications of life. Indeed this work in the heart is so nearly allied to that rational work of the head which has to do with principles—which we call believing—that we fail to discern why they are not inseparable. In one place it is said, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved"; in another it is stated that the greatest commandment of all is, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." But St. Paul, putting at defiance our rationalism, defines evangelical faith by saying, "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation."

The simple facts in the case are these: the Scriptures address themselves to the understanding of men, as rational, thinking beings; but in order to a sanctifying influence, this faith must be exercised with the affections of the heart, and to secure this end, the Holy Spirit is given for our help. Wherefore it is written, "The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us." "Whoso keepeth His word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him." "For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments." Again, the Apostle speaks of "Peace that passeth all understanding"; and of "Joy unspeakable."

That such states of mind are common to all true believers of the gospel, is just as true, as that the way of life is the same narrow way it was eighteen hundred years ago. But how lamentable, that so few know anything about the "unspeakable joy," or the peace that passeth understanding! Tens of thousands call themselves christians because they have desired to be such; and yet they never came to the exalted position where they made Christ their supreme choice. Beside these, there are multitudes who, remembering the days of their first love (Rev. 2: 4), are unceasingly crying, "My leanness, my leanness!" They can tell you of the days of their former joy; of the time when from full hearts they sung—

"How happy are they
Who their Savior obey,
And have laid up their treasure above!
Tongue cannot express
The sweet comfort and peace
Of a soul in its earliest love."

"Jesus all the day long
Was my joy and my song."

But how changed! changed in their habits of thought, therefore changed in their moods. May be they have not ceased to pray, but they have ceased to praise. The world has come into their hearts, and the peace of God has gone out. Alas for them! We pity them. They are at times conscious of their "low estate," and say they bewail and lament their transgressions and backslidings; but the remedy they fail to apprehend. They are in many instances under teachers that know nothing of the religious ardor of a devoted heart; and often find themselves with hearts callous to divine impressions. But among the most sad of all are those cases where a spurious zeal manifests itself, either in heated controversy, or in the blustering vociferations more fitting the priests of Baal than the worshipers of Elijah's God, but which is accepted in lieu of the holy, peaceful joy of a consecrated heart. We say, Alas for them! Goaded on in a nominally religious life by reason of an educated conscience, and yet never knowing the joy of a Savior's benignant smile. Doomed a little from this to wake up in the judgment, virgins to be sure, but foolish virgins; having no oil in their vessels. May God pity those who, professing religion, yet know not by a blessed experience what its enjoyment is.—M.

The Boston Conference.

The annual gathering of brethren looking for the return of the Nobleman, who have been wont to gather for each other's strengthening in Boston, and who meet this year upon the day this number of the Crisis is issued, may not for several reasons be as large as usual, but promises to be a deeply interesting season. It is desired that God may make this a time of great refreshing to the scattered and tried flock looking for the second advent. An early report may be expected in the Crisis for the benefit of our numerous readers not able to attend.—M.

NAME YOUR STATE AND POST OFFICE.—Did our friends know the many hours of perplexing labor they would save us by giving the name of their State and post-office, we are sure they would never fail to insert them. For example, a letter with $2.00 is now before us from Goshen. There are about fifteen Goshens in the United States, beside the land of Goshen east of the Mediterranean Sea. To which of these to send the Crisis in return for the $2.00 we do not know. Please, then, give the name of your P. O. and State.—M.

Biographical Sketches.—No. 1.

EDWARD IRVING.

It was in the year 1819 that Dr. Chalmers, being in Edinburgh, went into the Church of the Rev. Andrew Thompson, and listened for the first time to a young man—who was himself unaware of the Doctor's presence—"when" he "formed the favorable opinion of him that subsequently led to his appointing him his assistant and colleague in St. John's Church, Glasgow." That young man was EDWARD IRVING. "Born in the Burgh of Annan, Dumfriesshire, on the 15th of August, 1792. The family were originally from France, but now long since settled in the West of Scotland. Educated at the University of Edinburgh, recommended when seventeen years of age as the fittest person of the University to teach an Academy at Haddington, which after one year he left for a larger and more lucrative establishment at Kirkcaldy, where he had continued seven years. He had now "completed his probationary terms, and became a licentiate of the Scotch Church", but still had become so much inclined to law that he had already projected a tour to the continent of Europe when he was heard by Dr. Chalmers. Continuing about three years in Glasgow, he then, by the commendation of Dr. Chalmers, received a call to the charge of the "insignificant Caledonian Church of London," to which he acceded, and removed to the British metropolis in 1822; where," says his biographer—an anonymous writer to whom we are indebted for many of the facts here given—"he distinguished himself so far as to be second in popularity to few preachers in the kingdom."

When he commenced in London, "the attendance at the chapel in Cross-street, it has been said, did not muster more than fifty persons!" "He crossed the Tweed, says a reviewer, with a lighter heart, a buoyant spirit, and more ecstatic joy than he ever crossed the ford that led to the home of his fathers. He reached London by the aid of the Lion of the tribe of Judah, full of strength and courage for the work which his Master had given him to do. His friends, in the bonds of Evangelical love, welcomed him with a salutation of the same; and, as his testimonials bore, he was no common expounder of divine things, 'no plebian casuist—no vulgar theologian.' Five hundred circulars were addressed in one day to all the men of Caledonia resident in London, possessing wealth and influence, and heart to employ both in the cause of a Caledonian preacher, announcing the pre-eminent endowments of his mind, the unquenchable zeal of his spirit, and the fascinating riches of his doctrines. And lo! in one short quarter the application for seats at Cross-street, Hutton Garden, increased from fifty to fifteen hundred!"

From this onward, there set in a tide of popularity which, if we may believe his biographer—who by the way seems to be in no way biased in his favor,—has seldom, if ever, been equaled by any man of modern times. "Mr. Irving's style and manner of preaching differed so widely from everything that was then to be found, even in this immense metropolis, that he could not fail of speedily obtaining notice, and collecting a numerous audience. His powers of eloquence attracted crowds, from the right hand of royalty down to the very dregs of the people. Among those whom curiosity drew to Hutton Garden, at an early period of his ministry, are enumerated Canning and Brougham, Mackintosh and Scarlett, the present Lord Ripon, Lady Jersey and the Marchioness of Conyngham, with many others of the same class of society; and it has even been said—though with what truth I will not undertake to affirm—Royalty itself incog."

In a critique on Irving's qualities as a man and as a divine, we find the following: "Without assenting to, or dissenting from the truth of this assertion, we have no hesitation in saying, that no unprejudiced and discerning man could seriously attend to a sermon of Mr. Irving's, without feeling for the time convinced that he was hearing one of the most able and eloquent preachers in Great Britain. The mere appearance of the man is such, as to excite a high opinion of his intellectual powers. He is indeed one, of whom the casual observer would say, as he passed him in the street, 'There goes an extraordinary man!' He is in height not less than six feet, and is proportionably strongly built. His every feature seems to be impressed with the characters of unconquerable courage and overpowering intellect. He has a head cast in the best Scottish mould, and ornamented with a profusion of fine long curly black hair. His forehead is broad, deep, and expansive. His thick, black, projecting eyebrows overhang a very dark, small, and rather deep-sunk, penetrating eye. He has the nose of his nation; his mouth is beautifully formed, and exceedingly expressive of eloquence; and his chin is somewhat long and elegantly tapered. In a word, his countenance is exceedingly picturesque. By the painter and man of taste, it would be pronounced remarkably fine."

But it was not only as a preacher, but as an author, also, that Mr. Irving was destined, at least in some measure, to excel. He had hardly been in London a year when there came from the press his work, "For the Oracles of God, Four Orations—for Judgment to Come, an Argument, in nine parts," an octavo volume of 600 pages; dedicated to the Rev. Thomas Chalmers, D. D. And subsequently other works. His reviewers are constrained to say of the first work, "Through the whole book there is no such thing as equivocation or trimming; no paring down of principle to fit a particular standard; neither retraction nor qualification. It is Bordaloue preaching at the court of Louis XIV; or South haranguing the royal profligate of England; or the fearless apostle of the Gentiles addressing the heathen and sceptics of Athens. It is perhaps scarcely necessary to add, that in consequence of the qualities we have just referred to, the style of Mr. Irving is often exceedingly impressive. Indeed, we are persuaded that a selection might be made from this volume, furnishing a cento of brilliant and most forcible passages, which should be equal in strength, in warmth, and in all the qualities which commend themselves to the heart of man, to any similar collection which could be made from the same number of sermons of any divine, antiquated or modern."

About the year 1827, Mr. Irving, with many others—clergymen and laymen—became deeply interested in the study of unfulfilled prophecy. With a view to the study of prophecy, he was invited with a number of others—of whom there were some of the most eminent clergymen of all denominations—to spend some time at the house of a friend of his, Mr. Henry Drummond, at Albury Park, near Guilford, in Surry, where it is said at one time a whole week was spent in this delightsome study, interspersed with devotional exercises. Mr. Drummond, who was a wealthy banker of London, but the warm friend of Mr. Irving, and deeply interested in the study of his guests, afterward published 3 vols. 8vo. containing the substance of their discussions, entitled, "Dialogues on Prophecy." Among other things, there seemed to be a general conviction that the second personal advent of Christ to reign on the earth was near at hand. Believing it, the most of them preached it; but none perhaps with more earnestness than did Mr. Irving—not excepting the eloquent McNeil.

In the year 1829 Mr. Irving made a tour to Scotland. In the Dumfries Courier of June, we find an account of his labors in that vicinity, where he seems to have tarried for a short time during this tour. It says, "Dumfries and its neighborhood have again been favored with a visit from the celebrated minister of the Scotch Church, in Regent Square, London, and again his appearance has produced great sensation among all ranks. It is believed the congregations to which he offered his speculations and instructions on Sunday, consisted each of not fewer than 12,000 or 13,000 souls. In all his public appearances here, Mr. Irving has brought forward, more or less prominently, his peculiar dogma relative to baptism, to the immediate downfall of Popery, to the very near approach of the millennium, with the personal presence of Jesus Christ on earth,—to the redemption of the terraqueous globe with all its animals, reptiles, vegetables, and minerals; a doctrine overlooked in all our pulpits, although little inferior, he thinks, in importance to the redemption of man, etc. His discourses were all extempore, and therefore ought not to be rigidly criticised."

The study of the prophetic periods seems to have attracted his attention in connection with other prophecies, and, like Dr. Scott, he did not hesitate to give his opinion with reference to their termination, although he differs with that commentator by extending them two years farther than does Dr. Scott; the latter making 1866 the period when they end, and Mr. Irving 1868. His biographer says, "The Seventh Vial, he tells us, is ready to be poured out, and at the expiration of this second period, the battle of Armageddon is to take place, and will issue in the destruction of Babylon, the second coming of Christ, and the setting up of his millennial kingdom, which Mr. Irving calculates will take place in the year of our Lord 1868."—M.

Drying Up.

It is a matter of fact, that the financial streams, which for centuries have enriched the Roman Pontiffs, are now nearly dried up. Perhaps nothing will more successfully cripple the Papal power, than poverty. Poverty usually precedes famine. One of the last states of the church on the "seven hills" is that of famine, as declared in Rev. 18: 8,—"Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death, and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire." She will soon be in the position of a poor, miserable harlot, forsaken of her lovers, and looked upon with utter contempt by those who have drank only ruin from her cup of fornication.

Bro. L. Reimer sends us the following extract from the Philadelphia Inquirer, of Jan. 18th, 1862, which gives us some idea of the financial condition of Rome:—G.

ROMAN FINANCE.

"In our review of the monetary condition of the European powers, we turn from Austria to Rome. Involved and ruinous as the affairs of the Hapsburghs are, it appears that the finances of the Sovereign Pontiff are, if possible, in a more complicated and hopeless state. Indeed, the Roman question must shortly be solved, unless the age of miracles speedily return, by the French Emperor and the King of Italy merely delaying until affairs run their inevitable course in the city of the Cæsars. In consequence of the Pontiff wielding a temporary sceptre, it comes to pass that, as in the case of other monarchs, as well as in that of private individuals, he is obliged to provide for the settlement of divers little bills at the end of the year, and the operation becomes doubly difficult when the exchequer is empty, and borrowing has reached the limit when trusting creditors tighten their purse strings.

Just now, the sum of thirty millions of francs is required to tide over present difficulties, and every effort is being made to raise this amount by a new loan. To effect this, at a less cost than fifty or sixty per cent., is known to be impossible; and as it is now pretty clearly seen that these and other similar little "items" must soon be shouldered by the Italian Minister, the prospect of Victor Emmanuel having to pay upwards of six millions and a quarter of dollars for a few months additional rule of the Antonelli regime, is by no means comfortable. The truth is, bankruptcy stares His Holiness in the face, even should his friends succeed in negotiating this loan. A new issue of paper need not be relied on, as the Roman dealers are unwilling to receive such promises to pay in exchange for their commodities. Meantime the sale of valuable articles goes on, in order to keep off the inevitable day. The proceeds of the Campana collection were swept away at once; and manuscripts, missals, statues, pictures and other objects of taste are sacrificed as rapidly as purchasers can be found. A few days ago, twelve thousand dollars were realized by the sale of a collection of rare books and prints, and thus the treasures of the Vatican are scattered over Europe and America, while the sums which are paid in return for them are quite unequal to relieve the necessities of of the Roman exchequer.

Indeed, it is even hinted that notwithstanding the reluctance of the Pontiff to admit the reality of the crisis which has arrived, he is beginning to perceive that his affairs are becoming desperate, and it is affirmed that he has resolved to face his arduous position in a manly spirit, and demand from Louis Napoleon a candid exposition of the line of policy which he has resolved to carry out in the settlement of the Italian question. We perceive that a correspondent of a London Journal affirms that Monsignor Bellegarde is entrusted with such a commission to Louis Napoleon. Professedly, his object in leaving Rome was to visit his father in Germany, who is indisposed, but on arriving at Marseilles he proceeded directly to Paris. The dread on the part of his holiness is that the silent man of the Tuileries may, if he speak on such a subject at all, declare that if the Court of Rome is dissatisfied with the conduct of the French troops at Rome, they shall be withdrawn; but on the express intimation that no Austrian or Spanish forces shall be permitted to enter the city in their stead. Did Napoleon take such a step, the Italian troops would forthwith march into the Eternal City, and his Holiness would be shut up to the alternative of taking his departure or of consenting to the arrangement which Victor Emmanuel is prepared to guarantee, to wit—a throne on the Vatican with a competent support, enabling the Head of the Church to rule on his own side of the Tiber.

Then again, when M. Lavalette lately arrived at the Vatican on a mission from Paris, he was asked if the feeling of Napoleon towards his Holiness were the same as he had professed, at the time of the treaty of Zurich. The prudent ambassador replied, that the Emperor had not changed, but that the times were altered, and the affairs of Italy were now in such a state that the Roman question demanded a speedy solution."

For the Crisis.

To the Readers of the Crisis.

Through the kindness of the Editors of "Our Paper," I am permitted to make the following announcement:

For some weeks past I have been preparing for the press a work by the Abbe Czechowski, late Roman Catholic priest; but now a preacher of the everlasting gospel. Eld. Czechowski, in his "Thrilling and Instructive development," portrays the evils existing among the popish clergy with a graphic pen; yet void of that coarseness which mars the style of other exposes of those abominations. To read the history of his sufferings and perils, will move almost the sternest heart to tears; and now he is in the Land of Freedom, at least of conscience, where he is preaching the truths as they are in Jesus, and waiting for the coming of the Son of Man.

I shall give a further notice when the book is ready, and bespeak for it the attention of every christian. JNO. F. COTTON.

Obituary Notices.

Died in New Preston, Ct., March 7th, 1862, Bro JOSEPH GREGORY, aged sixty-one years.

He remained a consistent christian and a firm believer in the speedy advent of Christ. He seemed to dread lying in the grave, but was supported and comforted in his last hours by a firm trust and confidence in Jesus, and exclaimed to his Advent brethren, who visited him repeatedly, "Give me Jesus yet." Once, when he was in great pain, he said, "Glory to God, I am almost through." His last words were, "Praise God."

Sermon by George Tomlinson, from 1 Thess 4 13. M BALDWIN.

Bro JOSEPH GREGORY was one of the most devoted christian men it was ever our privilege to know. After nearly twenty years experience in religious things, and in a field extending from Maine to Missouri, we have never found the man whose eye seemed to be more single to the glory of God. He was a frequent guest at my father's house in the days of my youth, and the impression then made by his godly conversation and fervent zeal, has never been effaced from our mind. His memory is blessed. We lament for him in death, but peace to his slumbers! Assured that after the termination of his lonely pilgrimage he sweetly sleeps in Jesus, we rejoice in prospect of the day when we shall meet him, and hear his joyful and melodious voice again.

"And the ransomed host will shout,
We are come!"

Very many who knew him as a christian will mourn for him. God grant our last end may be as joyful as his!—M.

Died in East Concord, Nov. 22d, 1861, of typhoid fever, widow HANNAH DAVIDSON, aged seventy-nine years and seven months.

Another mother in Israel has fallen. She was from early life a devoted christian. She endured her sufferings with patience,—was sick only eight days. Her mind was calm and peaceful, for her trust was in the God of Israel. When asked how she felt in her mind, her answer would be, "There is peace in believing and joy in the Holy Ghost." Her sun went down without a cloud. We "sorrow not even as others which have no hope," for very soon we expect to meet that dear mother again, in a land where "the inhabitants shall not say I am sick."

"Adieu, fond mother, peaceful rest,
Thy toils and cares are o'er;
Disease and pain have quit thy breast,
To enter there no more."
Z. FOSS.

Died in Hinesburgh, Vt., March 10th, 1862, of measles and lung fever, after an illness of twelve days, CHENEY CLEMENT, son of Samuel C. and Irene R. Castle, aged one year, two months and twenty-three days.

We deeply feel this affliction, for our darling and our pride is gone. The light of his sweet, loving face, his merry laugh and innocent prattle no longer cheer our fireside, and we are lonely without him. But we know he sweetly sleeps in Jesus until the wars and storms of earth are passed, then to arise and ever live where measles, coughs and fevers will no more prey upon his little frame.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Continental news is of slight importance.

The screw steamer Spartan, bound for Halifax with military stores, etc., was lost.

In the House of Commons on the 7th, Mr Gregory called attention to the blockade of the Southern ports, and moved for a copy of any correspondence on the subject subsequent to the papers already before the House. He expressed, in the strongest terms, his deep sympathy with the struggle for independence now going forward in the Confederate States, and declared that a separation of the South from the North, and a reconstruction of the Union, were the only means by which we could hope to see slavery abolished in America. He contended that the efficiency of the blockade was a question of great importance to England and Europe.

Mr G. Bentinck thought his Hon. friend had established a clear case as to the inefficiency of the blockade. The only prospect of bringing about a conclusion of the war was a recognition on the part of this country and of the great European powers of the independence of the Southern States. The reunion of the Northern and Southern States he regarded as an utter impossibility, and the Northern States could not complain of a recognition when they remember that they derived their origin from a successful secession from the government of this country.

Mr. W. E. Foster denied that the blockade was inefficient. He warmly eulogized the conduct of her Majesty's Government in reference to America, and said their forbearance and firmness had been the means of preserving us from one of the most deplorable wars in which it was possible we could be engaged.

Mr. Milnes said he could not believe in the final dissolution of the great American Union, and so long as it existed, he deprecated any active interference by the British Government in the struggle now taking place.

The Solicitor General was of opinion that it was the duty of the Government to maintain, as they had hitherto done, strict, honest and impartial neutrality between the contending parties with regard to the blockade. He entered into a lengthy argument, in the course of which he quoted numerous precedents to show that the present blockade was as efficient as other blockades had been in former years, and that it would be a violation both of international law and of the principles of neutrality to break it.

After some remarks from Lord R. Cecil and Admiral Walcot, the motion was negatived without a division.

Gibraltar advices reported the Sumter still there, and the Tuscarora lying off Algesiras.

Details are also given of the arrest at Tangiers of one of the Sumter's officers and Mr. Thompson, who lately filled the office of United States Vice Consul at Cadiz.

GREECE.—The insurrection in Nauplia is said to have already cost 500 lives.

TURIN, March 9. It is said that the conference between Garibaldi and Ratazzi has had very important results of a nature to exercise great influence over the destinies of the country. The Marquis Villamarino is spoken of for the ministry of Foreign Affairs.

SANDY HOOK, March 24. The steamship Hansa from Southampton 12th, has arrived.

In the House of Lords, on the 12th, Lord Campbell called attention to the inefficiency of the blockade of the Confederate ports, and moved for the correspondence on the subject.

Earl Russell replied to the proofs adduced by Mr Campbell of the inefficiency, and recounted the efforts made by the North to render it effective. He considered the want of cotton in the English markets the best test that the blockade was not an empty one.

He said the renewal of the old feeling between the North and South is impossible, and hoped that the North would consent to a peaceful separation of the States.

Earl Russell further said he trusted that within three months or sooner war would cease, leaving emancipation possible, to be effected by gradual and peaceful means. He said no formal communication had been made by the French to the English government on the inefficiency of the blockade.

The motion was withdrawn.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

THE CAPTURE OF NEWBERN.

Washington, March 19. Gen Burnside, in his official report, says: "I must defer, for want of time, a detailed account of the action. It is enough to say that after an engagement of four hours we succeeded in carrying a continuous line of field works over a mile in length, protected on the river bank by a battery of thirteen heavy guns, and on the opposite flank by a line of redoubts one-half mile in length, for riflemen and field-pieces, in the midst of swamps and dense forests, which line of works was defended by eight regiments of infantry, five hundred cavalry, and three batteries of field artillery, of six guns each.

The position was finally carried by a most gallant charge of our men, which enabled us to gain the rear of all the batteries between this point and Newbern, which was done by a rapid advance of the entire force up the main road and railroad. The naval fleet in the meantime was pushing its way up the river, throwing shot into the forts in front of us.

The rebels, after retreating in confusion, throwing away blankets, knapsacks, arms, &c., across the railroad bridge and country road bridge, burning the former and destroying the draw of the latter, thus preventing further pursuit, and caused a detention in occupying the town by our forces. But the naval force had reached the wharves and commanded it by their guns.

I at once advanced Gen. Foster's brigade to take possession of the town. The city was set on fire by the retreating rebels in many places, but the remaining citizens and the naval officers extinguished the flames with but little damage.

Many of the citizens are now returning, and we are in quiet possession of the city. We have captured a press, and shall at once issue a daily newspaper.

By this victory we have captured eight batteries, containing forty-six heavy guns, three light batteries of six guns each, two steamboats, a number of sailing vessels, wagons, horses, a large quantity of ammunition, commissary stores, forage and the entire camp equipage of the rebel troops, large quantity of rosin, turpentine, cotton and over two hundred prisoners.

Our loss thus far ascertained amounts to 91 killed and 466 wounded, many mortally.

Washington, March 19. Dispatches received at the Navy Department from Flag Officer Dupont, announce that the flag of the Union floats over Fort Marion, at St. Augustine, Florida.

The town was surrendered without fighting, the town authorities receiving Commander Rogers in the town hall, after being assured that he would protect the loyal citizens.

THE BATTLE OF PEA RIDGE. The full accounts of this battle establish it as by far the hardest fought battle of the war. Our forces numbered about 12,000, with 49 pieces of cannon. The rebel force 25,000 strong. They had 82 pieces of cannon, many of them rifled. The rebel troops were mostly Missourians, Arkansans and Texans. The fighting continued three days. The rebel officers fought with great bravery, but the superiority of our rank and file and the skill of our commanders gave us a splendid victory.

PEA RIDGE, ARKANSAS. One of the most terrible and bloody battles of the campaign was fought at this place on the 8th inst., resulting in a complete victory over the rebels, who fled to what is called the Boston mountains. The rebel generals McCulloch and McIntosh, are among the killed. The Federal loss was 1312. The rebel loss as stated by themselves was "2000 killed and wounded."

Washington, March 21. The Times' special dispatch states that the evacuation of Aquia Creek took place on Tuesday evening and Wednesday morning. Our flotilla fired into the depot and buildings as the rebels were leaving, but they succeeded in burning the dock and a few buildings.

It is reported that the rebels are leaving Fredericksburg very fast. A mutiny had occurred in a North Carolina regiment, and many were being marched out of Fredericksburg with their hands tied. The impression was that the rebels were falling back on Richmond, Norfolk and Yorktown.

Winchester, March 23.—10 P. M. We have this day achieved a glorious victory over the combined forces of Generals Jackson, Smith and Longstreet. The battle was fought within four miles of this place. It raged from half-past ten o'clock until dark. The enemy's strength was about fifteen thousand.

The strength of our division was not over 8000. Our loss in killed and wounded is not ascertained, but is heavy. The enemy's loss is double that of ours. We have captured a large number of prisoners, some guns, and the ground is strewn with the arms they have thrown away in their flight. The cavalry is still in pursuit of the retreating rebels.

The particulars cannot be accurately ascertained until daylight.

Washington, March 24. A dispatch from a surgeon in Gen. Shield's army to the Surgeon General in this city says in relation to the battle of yesterday:—"Our loss is from 75 to 100 killed, and 250 wounded. I have seen 275 of the enemy's dead."

Winchester, March 24. The rebels have been driven back to Strasburg. We have captured more than 1000 small arms. Our loss is from 80 to 100 killed, among whom is one Colonel and fourteen Captains and Lieutenants. Two hundred were wounded, among whom are ten officers. The rebels had nearly 500 killed and wounded, and lost 300 prisoners.

St. Louis, March 24. A detachment of the 1st Iowa cavalry had a skirmish with the enemy, killing 2, wounding 1, taking 75 prisoners and over 200 horses; 48 kegs of powder and a quantity of arms were also captured. Our loss was four wounded.

Fortress Monroe, March 21. The steamer Chancellor Livingston arrived from Hatteras Inlet last night.

Immediately after the occupation of Newbern an expedition to Beaufort was started. The place was evacuated, however, before our troops approached. Fort Macon was blown up by the rebels, and the steamer Nashville was burnt on the day Gen. Burnside occupied Newbern. Sixteen thousand troops were on the road between Goldsboro' and Newbern.

St. Louis, March 24. The train from Rolla last night brought in 300 privates and 48 commissioned officers, being the first arrival of prisoners taken at Pea Ridge.

A gentleman just from New Orleans says the rebels are building thirteen gunboats at that place, to be completed soon.

New York, March 22. The World's Washington dispatch says the late gardener of the Executive mansion, Watts, notorious for the part he took in the abstraction of a portion of the President's message, has left for Scotland.

An army correspondent relates the following incidents of the battle at Pea Ridge:

Lieutenant Henne, of Missouri, who had lost his left arm in the Hungarian war, was struck by a cannon ball, which carried away his right leg. He was carried off the field, and when passing Gen. Curtis, the heroic sufferer waved his hand to him, while his face was wreathed in smiles, as if forgetful of his sufferings in the exultation of approaching victory.

A ball struck a tree, shivering it to splinters, one of which, six feet long, hit a Secesh and impaled him to the earth.

Cairo, March 24. An arrival from the Tennessee river says 8000 men under Gen. Wallace, visited Adamsville, where there was understood to be a large rebel force. On arriving there they found the rebels gone.

Armed rebels are concentrating at Corinth, where a stand would be made.

At Memphis all rebel stores are being removed to places of safety, in the event of an attack of the Union forces.

Beauregard is at Jackson, Tenn.

SUBTERRENE DISTURBANCE.—One of the most singular abnormal occurrences of the earthquake order which has recently occurred in this vicinity, has just been related to us by Mr John E. Parry, who lives in Lakeville, four miles east of Myrick's station. Soon after leaving his house last Sunday afternoon, and at about three o'clock, he heard an unusual noise, which at first sounded like the hurried rattling of a carriage over a pavement. After continuing for a moment or two, it ended in a heavy report like the toppling over of a chimney stack. On returning to his house in the early part of the evening, his two children, who were there alone, a daughter of fourteen years and a little child, were in a great fright, fearful that the knell of time had been sounded, and that the day of doom was about to wind up all terrestrial affairs. She stated that when she heard the rumbling sound, she went to the window, and on looking out saw, four rods from the window, the earth undulate like waves of the sea, and as it fell, fire issued from several crevices. On examining the ground, Mr Parry discovered a large hole with ragged edges, which had the appearance of having been scathed with fire. Other persons living in the vicinity were startled by the sound. Domestic animals showed evident signs of fear and trembling. The quiet community living in the vicinity have been greatly disturbed in consequence of this portentous occurrence.—Fall River News.

A Call for Funds.

The publishing committee of the CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, deeply sensible of the fact that the time is short, and that our work must be done soon, or not at all, venture this appeal to those interested in disseminating divine truth through the press.

We purpose to commence at once the publication of Tracts upon important Scriptural topics, of vital interest to the church of God in these times of peril and dismay. We wish to present to the household of faith "meat in due season." We wish to scatter light among the benighted of the earth, and so sound out the word of the Lord.

To do this on a scale answering at all to immediate necessities, we propose to raise at once FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS, ($500) by special contributions, for this object. This money is designed to obtain and publish tracts, new and old, adapted to the times in which we live. We who engage in the work as publishing committee have no salaries or pay whatever for our services, and we mean that every dollar contributed shall tell in the great work. Each tract will be submitted to the careful examination and judgment of our Editorial Committee, H. L. Hastings, H. F. Carpenter and D. T. Taylor, in whose judgment, ability and prudence the churches can safely confide. Only such tracts as they shall approve will be published by the Society. We expect to furnish tracts cheaper than ANY TRACT SOCIETY IN THE COUNTRY, and our surplus, beyond the actual expenses of issuing them, will be devoted to the purpose of furnishing tracts for gratuitous circulation, or wherever they may be needed.

Brethren, will you help us in this work? Will you give us money? Or will you send us $100, $50, $20, or $10, to be repaid in TRACTS, at cheap rates, when you shall choose to order them? We wish this work to move on at once. We therefore call for $500, and pledge ourselves to see it used in a manner that shall tend to accomplish the desired object. We do not wish to divert the funds of the World's Crisis for this work, nor has its treasury sufficient money that can be spared for this purpose. We call upon all interested in publishing and scattering cheap Tracts, to contribute for this object. Will not preachers take hold of it? Will not churches make collections and remit them?

No fear need be entertained that the work will be delayed. As soon as a portion of it is raised, and tracts are prepared, it can begin, and each dollar added will facilitate the object and extend the operations of the society. Come, then, to the work. Send us donations, pledges, or loans, to be repaid in publications, in amounts from a hundred dollars to a widow's mite; and with them let your prayers ascend, that God's blessing may attend our efforts and crown them with success. Monies should be sent to Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts, for six dollars we send them two dollar's worth, for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

The Four Monarchies.—Dan. 7.

BY S. B. [illegible]

In ancient Babylon, upon old Shinar's plain,
There lived a holy man, and Daniel was his name;
In visions of the night he was inspired to see
Four great beasts arise, symbols of monarchy.

The first a Lion bold, upon his back two wings;
A Bear, with three ribs in his mouth, the next in order springs;
A Leopard, with four heads; four wings his back adorns—
Fourth beast most terrible, upon his head ten horns.

The Lion that was seen so noble, strong and bold,
Was ancient Babylon, the once proud head of gold;
The Bear that next arose to power, on one side
Was Medo-Persian kings, that crushed the lion's pride.

The Leopard next in power; magnificent in state,—
It was the Grecian king, called Alexander Great;
The fourth a nondescript before the prophet stood,
The cruelest of all, a monster dyed in blood.

This was Dragonic Rome, that ruled the earth so long
In Pagan and in Papal forms, like iron, exceeding strong;
Long has the Pagan form of Cesars passed away,
Succeeded by the Pope of Rome, he too has lost his sway.

Iron-hearted tyrant, drunk with blood of helpless saints,
A holy God hath heard their prayers and sad complaints;
Their night of weeping past, their dreary time of trouble,
There's wrath in store for thee, a cup filled to the double.

Saints! lift your heads, rejoice! redemption draweth near!
The morn of glory dawns, soon Jesus will appear!
O come, Life-Giver, come, thy face we long to see,
And with thy ransomed saints share IMMORTALITY!

The Day of the Lord.

A LECTURE ON 2 PETER 3: 3–14.

BY JOSEPH A. SEISS, D. D.

"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation," etc.—2 PET. 3: 3–14.

IV. Another point I notice in the text is the statement as to the manner in which "the day of the Lord" shall be ushered in. The apostle says it "will come," notwithstanding the skepticism and the scoffs of men, and that it will come "as a thief in the night." Paul also makes the same statement, in the same words, as a matter well understood by the primitive Christians. (1 Thess. 5: 1.) And the Savior himself has given notice, "Behold, I come as a thief," (Rev. 16: 15;) not, indeed, with the designs of a thief, but in such time and in such manner as the thief comes,—or, as he elsewhere explains it, "in such an hour as ye think not" (Matt. 24: 44.)

That hour will be an hour of "the night," both literally and figuratively. Night is the time when thieves work; and the statement is that he will come "as a thief in the night." When the unembodied Word of God, at the beginning, first came into our world, it was night; for "darkness was upon the face of the deep;" and that Word was, "Let there be light, and there was light." When that same Word became incarnate, and was born into the world as a man, it was in the night,—while shepherds were "keeping watch over their flock by night." And so his coming in the great day shall also be "in the night." Whether it shall be "in the second watch, or in the third watch," whether at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning," we know not. This only we know,—that it shall be "in the night," "while mankind is wrapt in sleep, and worldly fancy feeds on golden dreams." But in the figurative, as well as in the literal, night,—in the darkest hour of the Church and of the world; when there will be but little genuine apostolic faith and life in the earth, and the virgins, both wise and foolish, are slumbering and sleeping; when the powers of darkness have put forth their last and most successful attempts, and unsanctified humanity is most deluded with dreams of security and progress,—then the day of the Lord shall come, and the long absent Jesus be again revealed.

That hour will also be an unexpected hour. The thief comes unexpectedly. He does not tell the good man of the house when he will come. He tries to make his approach with as little intimation of it at the time as possible. And so "of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven." (Matt. 24: 36.) "As in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." (Matt. 24: 38.) Preceding signs there will be,—"signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth, (Luke 21: 25, 26.)—but not such signs as this unbelieving world shall understand and heed, (Daniel 12: 10;) for up to the time of the bursting forth of doom they shall be saying, "Peace and safety." (1 Thess. 5: 3.) The wise, indeed, shall understand, and "are not in darkness, that that day should overtake them as a thief." (1 Thess. 5: 4.) Occupying, watching, waiting, expecting, as the Savior commands, they shall be ready to receive him, and to shout, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord!" yea, and to mount up to meet him as on eagle's wings. (Isa. 11: 31.)

But with suddenness, as well as stealth, shall that hour come. To all whose hearts are overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, it shall "come unawares." The destruction which it is to bring to the guilty will be "sudden destruction." (1 Thess; 5: 3.) But even in the case of those prepared for it, it will come with a degree of suddenness. Upon "all,"—"all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth,"—which would seem to include the devout and watchful as well as the careless and unbelieving, the Savior says, it will come "as a snare" (Luke 21: 35.) Quick as the spark from smitten steel, and sudden as the lightning's flash, shall it break in upon the world. "For as the lightning cometh out of the east and flasheth even unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." (Matt. 24: 27.) "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," says the apostle, (1 Cor. 15: 52,) shall the great translation be effected; and before we know it, "we shall be changed."

There is also this other feature attending the operations of the thief,—that he is usually in the house, and through or well on with his work, before his presence is discovered. We miss what he has taken, we behold the depredations he has wrought, or we are aroused by the crackling of the flames his hands have ignited. And so Jesus will perhaps be here, and doing his work, before we become acquainted with the fact. I suppose that the first evidence the living saints will have of his presence will be contemporaneous with their translation; but there is at least one great transaction connected with the scenes of that hour which shall precede the translation. Paul says, "We that are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not go before them which are asleep;" and that when the Lord shall descend "the dead in Christ shall rise first." (1 Thess. 15 · 17.) Every Christian's grave shall be vacated, and his corruptible body have put on immortality, before one living saint shall be translated. Here, then, will be something carried off before the world shall find out any thing about what has happened; for I suppose that the resurrection of the saints will conform to that of their Lord, and not occur visibly to men in the flesh. So far as we know, nobody saw Christ rise. And it would seem as if the same stealth were to attend the translation also. A man in his bed shall awake, and find his wife gone; and another shall call for his faithful servant, and find him missing; and watchers at the couch of affliction shall look for their patient, and he shall not be, because God has taken him. It is so that Enoch seems to have been stolen away from the earth. (Heb. 2: 5.) Elijah in his ascension was visible to his friend and successor only as a special favor of God which he could not promise in advance. (4 Kings 2. 10.) And with the stealthiness of the undiscovered thief the Savior, it seems, will come and remove his chosen saints without their most intimate earthly friends knowing it, except by what they afterward miss. Hath he not said as much himself? What are his words? "I tell you, in that night there shall be two in one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left." (Luke 17: 34–36.) What are we to gather from this, but that the one shall find the other stolen away from him without his knowing it at the time? The wise virgins met the Bridegroom, and had already entered in with him to the feast, before the foolish ones found it out. "The day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night!" Solemn and affecting truth! "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always," saith your Lord. (Luke 21: 36.)

Human Ghostology.—No. 12.

20. John 6: 5.—"If any eat of this bread, he shall live forever." If this text is so interpreted as to give an undying nature to the soul of the saint, it will just as strongly deny it to the sinner, as the sinner does not eat of this bread in the sense of Christ's interpretation. "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day." John 6: 40. Then saints will live forever.

21. Acts 7: 59;—"Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Not a spirit-entity, for there is no such spirit in man; not the mind, for man's "thoughts perish" at death: but the spirit of life. A more natural prayer under such painful circumstances, could not have been offered. Being stoned, and mangled so that he could not recover, and suffering intensely with no hope of alleviation or mitigation, he prays, Take away the spirit of life, or, Let me die: Receive the spirit of life.

22. Acts 12: 15;—"Then said they, It is his angel." Not his departed soul, for there is no reason to suppose that they conjectured that Peter was dead; but his guardian angel. Christ, in speaking of his living saints, (not of dead ones,) says, "Their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." Matt. 18: 10.

23. Rom. 7: 22;—"I delight in the law of God after the inward man." Paul explains this inward man to be the mind, in the 25th verse; "So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God." They are used interchangeably. But the mind is not an inside ghost. The mind is often insane. Is it an inside ghost that becomes insane? If so, may not heaven and hell be supplied with crazy ghosts? The mind could be "renewed;" could immortal ghosts?

24. 2 Cor. 5: 1, 8;—"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved"—if mortality is dissolved by death for a while—"we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven: if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." The following facts are conspicuous:

(1.) We are not to go to heaven to be "clothed upon with our house;" but this house is "FROM heaven." (2.) We are not to be clothed upon in a disembodied state, for we are to be clothed upon in order "that mortality might be swallowed up of life." This will take place at the resurrection. (3.) As we are to be "clothed upon with our house which is from heaven" IN ORDER "THAT mortality might be swallowed up of life," or immortality, it follows that our house from heaven is simply immortality, in which state we shall dwell eternally. (4.) Our earthly house is to be changed for the house "from heaven; therefore, as our heavenly house signifies immortality, our earthly house must signify mortality. We now dwell in mortality, we then shall dwell in immortality. "We know that if our earthly house [mortality] of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, [immortality] an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens. For in this [house of mortality] we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house [of immortality] which is from heaven: if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked [or unclothed] For we that are in this tabernacle [of mortality] do groan, being burdened not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon [with our house which is from heaven] that ☞ MORTALITY ☜ might be swallowed up of life, [immortal life.] . . . Therefore we are always confident, knowing that while we are at home in the [mortal] body, we are absent from the Lord . . . . willing rather to be absent from the [mortal] body, [by being "clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life," instead of leaving mortality in the grave.] and present with the Lord [in an immortal body; for, "The dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. 4. 17.] Present with the Lord in the resurrected state—not in a disembodied state.

25. 2 Cor. 12: 2, 3,—"Whether in the body I cannot tell, or whether out of the body I cannot tell." This proves the possibility of being out of the body in some sense. But all this transpired while Paul was a living man; hence, it proves nothing concerning a dead man. Paul was often out of the body in mind, or in vision, as in the following instances. "I verily, as absent in body, but present in spirit." (1 Cor. 5: 3.) Again: "Though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit." (Col. 2: 5.) If Paul could not be "out of the body," or "absent in body," in any other sense than having the soul leave the body, then Paul's body must have died several times, (for we frequently read of his being out of the body in some sense,) unless the body can live without a soul, and if it can, what use in having a soul? But before speaking of the possibility of being out of the body, Paul expressly says: "I will come to visions and revelations." (verse 1.) In "vision" he might have been out of the body, in the sense of having his mind transported, in which sense the Revelator was represented as being in heaven while his body was alive in Patmos; or, he might have been transported bodily. It was so real to Paul that he could not tell whether he was mentally or physically transported to the New Jerusalem in the third heavens, which contains the future Paradise of the new earth. But whether transported out of the body [in mind] or in the body [personally], it all relates to a living man, and proves nothing about a dead man.

26. Phil. 1: 21–23, "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. For if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labor: yet what I shall choose I wot [know] not. For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." "To die would be gain" to Paul, as he would thereby escape every species of persecution; "to live" in mortal flesh, would be for the spiritual benefit of his brethren. Which of these two to choose he knew not. He did not choose either of these two things;—DID NOT CHOOSE TO LIVE IN MORTAL FLESH, DID NOT CHOOSE TO DIE; but he did choose a third thing, distinct from these two, namely, to "depart and be with Christ;" therefore, to "depart and be with Christ" implies something distinct from death, for Paul did not choose death. If to "depart and be with Christ" includes death as a means of so doing, then Paul is made to say, "I don't choose to live in mortal flesh, I don't choose to die, but I do choose to die"!!! Paul says not a word about the departing of his soul; but he himself desired to depart, by a translation. He finally arrives at the conclusion that he shall remain with them in mortal flesh. "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. But if I live in the [mortal] flesh, this is the fruit of my labor: yet what I shall choose I wot [know] not. [Why?] For I am in a strait betwixt two [upon the one hand, it would be "gain" to me to die and escape persecution, and be for the benefit of my brethren to live and labor on;—good for me to die, and good for my brethren that I should live: but upon the other hand] having a desire to depart and be with Christ; which is far better [than mortal life, or fearful death.] Nevertheless to abide in the [mortal] flesh is more needful for you. And having this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with you all for your furtherance and joy of faith." Paul desired an immediate translation, but did not expect it. Life, in a mortal state, was filled with innumerable trials; HE DID NOT CHOOSE THAT; death, though it would be a gain in liberating him from his trials, would nevertheless be so gloomy and repulsive, that HE DID NOT CHOOSE THAT: but he had a desire for translation; his choice was to "depart and be with Christ," not by death, but without it.

27. Heb. 12 23;—"Spirits of just men made perfect." If they are made "PERFECT" at death, what need of a resurrection? If made "perfect" without a resurrection, the resurrection would be of no service. But if not made perfect till the resurrection, disembodied spirits are not alluded to; for at the resurrection, spirit and body will be united. The same is true of Paul's remark, "That the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." Spirit and body will then be together. Paul, in speaking of those same just men, says, "They without us should NOT be made perfect." Heb. 11: 40. Hence, there are now no "spirits of just men made perfect;" nor will there be till we come to Mt. Zion, to which will descend the heavenly Jerusalem, and the innumerable company of angels, etc. Our version reads, "We are come to Mt. Zion . . . and to the spirits of just men made perfect." But if these spirits are in heaven, we are not one inch nearer to them now than we have been for thousands of years. Dr. McKnight's Translation reads, "We shall come," etc.

28. 1 Pet. 3. 19;—"Went and preached unto the spirits in prison." If disembodied spirits are here meant, and if Christ went to hell and held a protracted meeting among them, in his disembodied state, since he is no respecter of persons, should he not make another mission there, and preach also to those who have accumulated there since the crucifixion? But the simple truth is, Christ was raised by that same spirit by which the spirits now in death's prison were preached to. Upon the principle of a part being put for the whole, men are often called spirits, as in 1 John 4: 1; "Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they are of God; BECAUSE many false prophets are gone out into the world." "Spirits" and "false prophets" are here used interchangeably. Let us read the context; "For Christ also hath once suffered for our sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened [made alive] by the spirit: by which [spirit] also he went and preached to the spirits in [death's] prison,—which sometime were disobedient,—[when were they preached to? Ans.] when once the long suffering of God waited, in the days of Noah," etc. We read the gospel was "preached to them that are dead"—not that were dead at the time of preaching, but that "are dead" now. 1 Pet. 4: 6. They are now in the "prison" of death.

29. Rev. 6: 9;—"I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain. Disembodied souls are not here meant, for in the 11th verse we read,—"It was said unto them [these souls] that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that should be killed, as THEY were, should be fulfilled." Thus, these souls had been "killed." Again: they cry, "How long . . wilt thou not judge and avenge our blood"—not the blood of our bodies, but "our blood." Can ghosts be killed? Do they have blood? Furthermore, instead of being on seats of glory, they are under an "altar." A queer place to keep ghosts! More than this, they impatiently cry "how long?" Do they want to get out? Don't blame them! But ghost-souls are not meant. Prof. Whiting's Translation reads "persons." Their cry for vengeance, like the voice of Abel's blood, ascends from the Altar of Slaughter. "White robes were given unto every one of them,"—not literal robes, but the "righteousness of saints" was accredited to them; but they were resting in death "for a little season."

30. Rev. 22: 9;—"For I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets." This is claimed as proof that the soul of a prophet visited John. The fallacy of this supposition will be made apparent by reading the context: "I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things. Then said he [the angel] unto me, See thou do it not: for I [the angel] am thy fellow servant, and [fellow servant] of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book." Thus ghostology is routed and scouted from every pillar and post of the Bible, and the declaration, "The dead know not anything," stands unimpeached. Hence, we look to the resurrection for future life and reward. W. SHELDON.

For the Crisis.

"The Coming Struggle."

ABOUT ITS PUBLICATION.

Some months have now passed since I published the design to bring out "The Coming Struggle" in pamphlet form as soon as sufficient aid should be obtained for the work. And as the work has received less encouragement and more opposition from brethren than I had hoped, I have thought best to give through the Crisis to such as are interested the present state of the matter.

The Crisis has acknowledged a receipt of $10.57, and I have the promise of about an equal amount in definite parcels, and promises of aid without definitely specifying the amount. Having been at the expense of getting here lately from the State of Maine, and making some necessary purchases also, I have not been able to do anything on the subscription myself. But, notwithstanding the appearances are less promising than I had hoped to see resulting from the call for aid, I am none the less persuaded that the work ought to, and will come out. I have thus far refrained from saying anything directly urging its publication, out of a feeling of delicacy—a fear that I might be liable to the charge of one "puffing his own wares," and perhaps of presumption. On reflection, however, I am constrained to believe that such can be only a false delicacy, when the object is a good one. I might, rather, be liable to the charge of presumption, and a worse folly, even, if in spending somewhat more than six weeks in writing the work, I had acted without a hope of doing good. I am free to confess that I was prompted by such a prospect in preparing the article. When I sent the work to the paper, I thought it not probable, though possible, that it would be published in pamphlet form. But since I have learned that the work has already been made a blessing to many, and have had letters from a number of brethren urging its publication, I am willing, and so far as it may promise to be useful, am anxious, to have it come out in pamphlet form.

But, as others have written to me urging its publication, and expressing their interest in the same, I will quote from the letters of some of them. A brother, writing from New Jersey, says in a letter written soon after its publication —"If the brethren and yourself think best to publish the Coming Struggle in pamphlet form, I think that I will be able to remit you about $5.00 towards it. We are under constant expense, and purse limited, but we think the work should go to the household, and to the world to some extent."—Another brother, writing from Illinois, says in reference to the publication of the work:—"Now, brother, if I ever offered up a prayer in sincerity, it is that you may meet with the greatest success: and that soon, yea, very soon, you may be enabled to scatter your work, not by hundreds, but by thousands and tens of thousands. I remember how deeply interested I was in reading your articles in the Crisis. I remember, too, how often, and how fervently, I wished they could be published in pamphlet form. Consider me as deeply interested in your object, and willing to aid in circulating the work as much as possible."

A brother, writing from Wisconsin, says: "I sincerely hope you will put the 'Coming Struggle' to press in pamphlet form, and you may put my name down for a small share, at least, of that stock. May God spare you, and crown such an enterprise with success."—Another brother, writing from New Hampshire, says, speaking of the position taken in the Coming Struggle: —"Somebody must take this view of the matter, in order to fulfill Rev. 14: 9–11. You may write the editor to say in the Crisis that a friend subscribes $5.00, and you may look to me for the same."—A sister, writing from New Jersey, says,—after mentioning that she had lost ten dollars through the mail designed for this work, and had made an effort to sell a valued relic of her father's,—"Now, Bro., all this was done for The Coming Struggle; that it might struggle into life and light, and should Satan even get this, I believe the coffers in God's treasury will do it."—Says another sister, writing from N. J. also:—"Having just finished your article, 'The Coming struggle,' I feel like personally acknowledging my gratitude and thankfulness to you. . . . I feel that it is something that must come before the world. I feel like making almost any sacrifice myself for this purpose."—A sister, writing from Canada, says:—"I am glad to learn that 'The Coming Struggle' may be looked to as forthcoming. Shall be glad to obtain several numbers when published. May God set his seal on the little work, and may it prove a safeguard to many souls is my earnest prayer. I trust it will do much good. Would be glad to forward my subscription now had I the means. Hope to sell my watch soon, and glorify God, guessing at the time."

The above extracts are but a fair representation of the feelings of many others whom I have seen, and some others who have written to me. They are earnest and prayerful in their devotions, and I am satisfied that God will hear such in this matter. They are the "poor of this world," but have a rich Father, and one who loves his children. I am well persuaded that the Lord will carry on the work through his own stewards, whoever they are. Therefore let such as feel interested forward as the Lord shall direct, praying that his blessing may attend the work, and pray, though you cannot forward. I. K. LOMBARD.

We hope all the members of the TRY COMPANY will sign the above pledge. Form good habits when young and you will reap a rich reward. By keeping the foregoing pledge you will not only save much money to buy books and other useful articles, but you will enjoy better health, be less likely to be sick, have more patience, and take more comfort. We know this is true from happy experience and observation for nineteen years. Come, ye noble youth, what do you say? Will you sign the pledge? We think we hear a multitude say, YES. That's right. Send us your names. Ask father and mother to sign their's too. Get all you can to sign it. We will keep a list of your names. We wish all the children who have sent their names to the TRY COMPANY, would let us know soon as convenient, whether they wish their names added to the pledge. Of course you do; but we wish you to say so, before we venture to put your names on the list. Come, now, wide awake, for a good work. Let people see what children can do.—G.

Good News.

We have some good news to tell the members of the TRY COMPANY. Little Martin Howard, one of the members of the company, in Danielsonville, Ct., has given his heart to the Savior, and we baptized him Sunday, March 9th. He is happy, and is trying to be good, that he may be ready to meet the Lord when he comes. He spoke in our meetings, and expressed his determination to be a christian. Pray for him. We hope all the members of the TRY COMPANY will be good children, obey their parents, love Jesus, and be ready for his coming.—G.

☞ The questions asked by the Try Company have been correctly answered by Willie B. Stark, ten years old, Jane A. Elmore, Mary Hibbard. The Enigma, No. 1, has been rightly answered by Emily Hadley, Willie Jones, S. O. Parker. We do not have room to publish all the answers in full.—G.

☞ THE ENIGMA sent by D. N. S. has been answered by Nellie F. Dargin, Great Falls, N. H. As the Enigma was imperfect, we do not publish the explanation of it, but the sentence formed, which is, or was meant to be—"In the last days perilous times shall come." If any more send Enigmas, please make them complete, without mistakes.—G.

FROM ALICE E. RATHBUN.

DEAR EDITOR:—I would like to join the Try Company. I will try to answer some of the questions of the last Crisis. The answer to the first question is in Ex. 6: 20. 2d, 1 Kings 18: 13. 3d, "If the righteous be scarcely saved, where will the ungodly and the sinner appear?" I answer, before God; to give an account to him of the deeds done in the body. Answer to question first, by Louisa H. Collins, Job 18. 18. Second question, Amos 2: 6. Third question, "How many feet high was Goliah?" Eleven feet nine inches. Fourth, Deut. 3: 11. First prophecy of Christ, Gen. 3: 15. Answer to question second, by "S.," Judges 3: 22. Third, Gen. 3: 29. Enoch is the oldest man now living.

I would like to ask what became of Jephtha's daughter? What king was sick unto death? Who wept and prayed to God, and be lengthened out his days fifteen years? Who was slain for touching the ark, and why? I hope the Try Company may indeed try to do the will of our Father in heaven, that they may be sons and daughters, and reign with Christ on the earth.

FROM EMILY J. HOWARD.

BRO. GRANT:—I am a little girl eleven years old. I am much pleased with the Try Company, and would like to become a member. I am glad you are making the Crisis interesting for the children. I am disappointed when I look over its columns and do not find any thing for the youth. I will answer the first question by quoting from Prov. 22: 15;—"Foolishness is bound in the heart of a child: but the rod of correction shall drive it far from him." Second question,—I think children best please their parents by obedience. Please read Col. 3: 20. The fourth question you will find answered in Gen. 23: 1,—"And Sarah was a hundred and twenty-seven years old." The fifth question I think you will find in Job 30: 8,—"They were children of fools." Sixth question,—Samson was the author of the riddle. Please read Judges 14: 12–14. The seventh question is answered in Kings 19: 18.

Will some of the Try Company tell us who led the children of Israel into the promised land?

FROM MARTIN L. HOWARD.

BRO. GRANT:—I will answer some of the questions asked in the Crisis of Feb. 25th. You will find the answer to the first question in Prov. 22: 15. The answer to the second question in Eph. 6: 1. Also in Col. 3: 20. You will find the answer to the fourth question in Gen. 23: 1. The answer to the fifth question is in Job 30: 1–4.

One of the Try Company says *Abram was the father of Moses. I do not think that is correct. Will some of the Try Company tell who slew the man that had six fingers on each hand, and six toes on each foot? Who had seven sons hanged?

West Killingly, Ct.

* This was a mistake of the type,—should have read AMRAM instead of Abram.—G.

FROM CHARLES STONE.

DEAR EDITOR:—I want to join your Try Company. I send you the answers to the third and fourth questions. 3, Goliah was six cubits and a span; for in 1 Sam. 17: 4, we find—"And there went out a champion out of the camp of the Philistines, named Goliah of Gath, whose height was six cubits and a span." 4. "For only Og king of Bashan remained of the remnant of giants. Behold his bedstead was a bedstead of iron. Is it not in Rabbath of the children of Ammon? Nine cubits was the length thereof, and four cubits the breadth of it, after the cubit of a man."

FROM WILLIE JONES.

BRO. GRANT:—I am a little boy six years old. I would like to join your Try Company. I do not use intoxicating drink of any kind, or tobacco. I love to pray, and I love to hear about Jesus. I hope to be one that shall stand on the new earth, and I try to do what Christ would have me do, so when he comes I shall live with him forever, and drink of the river of life. I love to think of what Jesus said,*—"I love them that love me, and those that seek me early shall find me."

*Solomon says it of Wisdom. Read Prov. 8: 17.—ED

FROM JOHN H. PRATT.

DEAR EDITOR:—One year ago a Company was formed in this place, called "The Band of Hope." I was one of that company. We progressed finely for a time, our numbers greatly increasing; but secessionists were found in our band, which completely disorganized it. I have remained true to my pledge, and wish to become a member of the Try Company. I have the solution to the Enigma in your last paper. It is found in 2 Tim. 3: 1;—"In the last days perilous times shall come."

Wales, Mass.

QUESTIONS.—I would like to ask the following questions: 1. What king reigned one year in Jerusalem? 2. Where did Moses die, and by whom was he buried? 3. Who placed their hands on Saul, that he might receive sight? 4. By whom, and where, was Christ baptized?

ELLA S. DRAKE, aged ten years.

The Four Monarchies.—Dan. 7.

BY S. B. BROWN.

In ancient Babylon, upon old Shinar's plain,
There lived a holy man, and Daniel was his name;
In visions of the night he was inspired to see
Four great beasts arise, symbols of monarchy.

The first a Lion bold, upon his back two wings;
A Bear, with three ribs in his mouth, the next in order springs;
A Leopard, with four heads; four wings his back adorn—
Fourth beast most terrible, upon his head ten horns.

The Lion that was seen so noble, strong and bold,
Was ancient Babylon, the once proud head of gold;
The Bear that next arose to power, on one side
Was Medo-Persian kings, that crushed the lion's pride.

The Leopard next in power; magnificent in state,—
It was the Grecian king, called Alexander Great;
The fourth a nondescript before the prophet stood,
The cruelest of all, a monster dyed in blood.

This was Dragonic Rome, that ruled the earth so long
In Pagan and in Papal forms, like iron, exceeding strong;
Long has the Pagan form of Cesars passed away,
Succeeded by the Pope of Rome, he too has lost his sway.

Iron-hearted tyrant, drunk with blood of helpless saints,
A holy God hath heard their prayers and sad complaints;
Their night of weeping past, their dreary time of trouble,
There's wrath in store for thee, a cup filled to the double.

Saints! lift your heads, rejoice! redemption draweth near!
The morn of glory dawns, soon Jesus will appear!
O come, Life-Giver, come, thy face we long to see,
And with thy ransomed saints share IMMORTALITY!

The Day of the Lord.

A LECTURE ON 2 PETER 3: 3–14.

BY JOSEPH A. SEISS, D. D.

"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation," etc.—2 PET. 3: 3–14.

IV. Another point I notice in the text is the statement as to the manner in which "the day of the Lord" shall be ushered in. The apostle says it "will come," notwithstanding the skepticism and the scoffs of men, and that it will come "as a thief in the night." Paul also makes the same statement, in the same words, as a matter well understood by the primitive Christians. (1 Thess. 5: 1.) And the Savior himself has given notice, "Behold, I come as a thief," (Rev. 16: 15;) not, indeed, with the designs of a thief, but in such time and in such manner as the thief comes,—or, as he elsewhere explains it, "in such an hour as ye think not." (Matt. 24: 44.)

That hour will be an hour of "the night," both literally and figuratively. Night is the time when thieves work; and the statement is that he will come "as a thief in the night." When the unembodied Word of God, at the beginning, first came into our world, it was night; for "darkness was upon the face of the deep;" and that Word was, "Let there be light, and there was light." When that same Word became incarnate, and was born into the world as a man, it was in the night,—while shepherds were "keeping watch over their flock by night." And so his coming in the great day shall also be "in the night." Whether it shall be "in the second watch, or in the third watch," whether at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning," we know not. This only we know,—that it shall be "in the night," "while mankind is wrapt in sleep, and worldly fancy feeds on golden dreams." But in the figurative, as well as in the literal, night,—in the darkest hour of the Church and of the world; when there will be but little genuine apostolic faith and life in the earth, and the virgins, both wise and foolish, are slumbering and sleeping; when the powers of darkness have put forth their last and most successful attempts, and unsanctified humanity is most deluded with dreams of security and progress,—then the day of the Lord shall come, and the long absent Jesus be again revealed.

That hour will also be an unexpected hour. The thief comes unexpectedly. He does not tell the good man of the house when he will come. He tries to make his approach with as little intimation of it at the time as possible. And so "of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven." (Matt. 24: 36.) "As in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." (Matt. 24: 38.) Preceding signs there will be,—"signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth, (Luke 21: 25, 26,)—but not such signs as the unbelieving world shall understand and heed, (Daniel 12: 10;) for up to the time of the bursting forth of doom they shall be saying, "Peace and safety." (1 Thess. 5: 3.) The wise, indeed, shall understand, and "are not in darkness, that that day should overtake them as a thief." (1 Thess. 5: 4.) Occupying, watching, waiting, expecting, as the Savior commands, they shall be ready to receive him, and to shout, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord!" yea, and to mount up to meet him as on eagle's wings. (Isa. 11: 31.)

But with suddenness, as well as stealth, shall that hour come. To all whose hearts are overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, it shall "come unawares." The destruction which it is to bring to the guilty will be "sudden destruction." (1 Thess; 5: 3.) But even in the case of those prepared for it, it will come with a degree of suddenness. Upon "all,"—"all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth,"—which would seem to include the devout and watchful as well as the careless and unbelieving, the Savior says, it will come "as a snare" (Luke 21: 35.) Quick as the spark from smitten steel, and sudden as the lightning's flash, shall it break in upon the world. "For as the lightning cometh out of the east and flasheth even unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." (Matt. 24: 27.) "In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," says the apostle, (1 Cor. 15: 52,) shall the great translation be effected; and before we know it, "we shall be changed."

There is also this other feature attending the operations of the thief,—that he is usually in the house, and through or well on with his work, before his presence is discovered. We miss what he has taken, we behold the depredations he has wrought, or we are aroused by the crackling of the flames his hands have ignited. And so Jesus will perhaps be here, and doing his work, before we become acquainted with the fact. I suppose that the first evidence the living saints will have of his presence will be contemporaneous with their translation; but there is at least one great transaction connected with the scenes of that hour which shall precede the translation. Paul says, "We that are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not go before them which are asleep;" and that when the Lord shall descend "the dead in Christ shall rise first." (1 Thess. 15: 17.) Every Christian's grave shall be vacated, and his corruptible body have put on immortality, before one living saint shall be translated. Here, then, will be something carried off before the world shall find out any thing about what has happened; for I suppose that the resurrection of the saints will conform to that of their Lord, and not occur visibly to men in the flesh. So far as we know, nobody saw Christ rise. And it would seem as if the same stealth were to attend the translation also. A man in his bed shall awake, and find his wife gone; and another shall call for his faithful servant, and find him missing; and watchers at the couch of affliction shall look for their patient, and he shall not be, because God has taken him. It is so that Enoch seems to have been stolen away from the earth. (Heb. 2: 5.) Elijah in his ascension was visible to his friend and successor only as a special favor of God which he could not promise in advance. (4 Kings 2: 10.) And with the stealthiness of the undiscovered thief the Savior, it seems, will come and remove his chosen saints without their most intimate earthly friends knowing it, except by what they afterward miss. Hath he not said as much himself? What are his words? "I tell you, in that night there shall be two in one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, and the other left. Two shall be in the field; the one shall be taken, and the other left." (Luke 17: 34–36.) What are we to gather from this, but that the one shall find the other stolen away from him without his knowing it at the time? The wise virgins met the Bridegroom, and had already entered in with him to the feast, before the foolish ones found it out. "The day of the Lord cometh as a thief in the night!" Solemn and affecting truth! "Watch ye, therefore, and pray always," saith your Lord. (Luke 21: 36.)

Human Ghostology.—No. 12.

20. John 6: 5.—"If any eat of this bread, he shall live forever." If this text is so interpreted as to give an undying nature to the soul of the saint, it will just as strongly deny it to the sinner, as the sinner does not eat of this bread in the sense of Christ's interpretation. "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day." John 6: 40. Then saints will live forever.

21. Acts 7: 59;—"Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." Not a spirit-entity, for there is no such spirit in man; not the mind, for man's "thoughts perish" at death: but the spirit of life. A more natural prayer under such painful circumstances, could not have been offered. Being stoned, and mangled so that he could not recover, and suffering intensely with no hope of alleviation or mitigation, he prays, Take away the spirit of life, or, Let me die: Receive the spirit of life.

22. Acts 12: 15;—"Then said they, It is his angel." Not his departed soul, for there is no reason to suppose that they conjectured that Peter was dead; but his guardian angel. Christ, in speaking of his living saints, (not of dead ones,) says, "Their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven." Matt. 18: 10.

23. Rom. 7: 22;—"I delight in the law of God after the inward man." Paul explains this inward man to be the mind, in the 25th verse; "So then with the mind I myself serve the law of God." They are used interchangeably. But the mind is not an inside ghost. The mind is often insane. Is it an inside ghost that becomes insane? If so, may not heaven and hell be supplied with crazy ghosts? The mind could be "renewed:" could immortal ghosts?

24. 2 Cor. 5: 1, 8;—"For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved"—if mortality is dissolved by death for a while—"we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven: if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." The following facts are conspicuous:

(1.) We are not to go to heaven to be "clothed upon with our house;" but this house is "FROM heaven." (2.) We are not to be clothed upon in a disembodied state, for we are to be clothed upon in order "that mortality might be swallowed up of life." This will take place at the resurrection. (3.) As we are to be "clothed upon with our house which is from heaven" IN ORDER "THAT mortality might be swallowed up of life," or immortality, it follows that our house from heaven is simply immortality, in which state we shall dwell eternally. (4.) Our earthly house is to be changed for the house "from heaven; therefore, as our heavenly house signifies immortality, our earthly house must signify mortality. We now dwell in mortality; we then shall dwell in immortality. "We know that if our earthly house [mortality] of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, [immortality] an house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens. For in this [house of mortality] we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house [of immortality] which is from heaven: if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked [or unclothed.] For we that are in this tabernacle [of mortality] do groan, being burdened: not for that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon [with our house which is from heaven] that ☞ MORTALITY ☜ might be swallowed up of life, [immortal life.] . . . Therefore we are always confident, knowing that while we are at home in the [mortal] body, we are absent from the Lord . . . . willing rather to be absent from the [mortal] body, [by being "clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life," instead of leaving mortality in the grave,] and present with the Lord [in an immortal body; for, "The dead in Christ shall rise first: then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." 1 Thess. 4: 17.] Present with the Lord in the resurrected state—not in a disembodied state.

25. 2 Cor. 12: 2, 3;—"Whether in the body I cannot tell, or whether out of the body I cannot tell." This proves the possibility of being out of the body in some sense. But all this transpired while Paul was a living man; hence, it proves nothing concerning a dead man. Paul was often out of the body in mind, or in vision, as in the following instances: "I verily, as absent in body, but present in spirit." (1 Cor. 5: 3.) Again: "Though I be absent in the flesh, yet am I with you in the spirit." (Col. 2: 5.) If Paul could not be "out of the body," or "absent in body," in any other sense than having the soul leave the body, then Paul's body must have died several times, (for we frequently read of his being out of the body in some sense,) unless the body can live without a soul; and if it can, what use in having a soul? But before speaking of the possibility of being out of the body, Paul expressly says: "I will come to visions and revelations." (verse 1.) In "vision" he might have been out of the body, in the sense of having his mind transported, in which sense the Revelator was represented as being in heaven while his body was alive in Patmos; or, he might have been transported bodily. It was so real to Paul that he could not tell whether he was mentally or physically transported to the New Jerusalem in the third heavens, which contains the future Paradise of the new earth. But whether transported out of the body [in mind] or in the body [personally], it all relates to a living man, and proves nothing about a dead man.

26. Phil. 1: 21–23; "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. For if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labor: yet what I shall choose I wot [know] not. For I am in a strait betwixt two, having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." "To die would be gain" to Paul, as he would thereby escape every species of persecution; "to live" in mortal flesh, would be for the spiritual benefit of his brethren. Which of these two to choose he knew not. He did not choose either of these two things;—DID NOT CHOOSE TO LIVE IN MORTAL FLESH, DID NOT CHOOSE TO DIE; but he did choose a third thing, distinct from these two, namely, to "depart and be with Christ;" therefore, to "depart and be with Christ," implies something distinct from death, for Paul did not choose death. If to "depart and be with Christ" includes death, as a means of so doing, then Paul is made to say, "I don't choose to live in mortal flesh, I don't choose to die, but I do choose to die"!!! Paul says not a word about the departing of his soul; but he himself desired to depart, by a translation. He finally arrives at the conclusion that he shall remain with them in mortal flesh. "For to me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. But if I live in the [mortal] flesh, this is the fruit of my labor: yet what I shall choose I wot [know] not. [Why?] For I am in a strait betwixt two [upon the one hand, it would be "gain" to me to die and escape persecution, and be for the benefit of my brethren to live and labor on;—good for me to die, and good for my brethren that I should live: but upon the other hand] having a desire to depart and be with Christ; which is far better [than mortal life, or fearful death.] Nevertheless to abide in the [mortal] flesh is more needful for you. And having this confidence, I know that I shall abide and continue with you all for your furtherance and joy of faith." Paul desired an immediate translation, but did not expect it. Life, in a mortal state, was filled with innumerable trials; HE DID NOT CHOOSE THAT; death, though it would be a gain in liberating him from his trials, would nevertheless be so gloomy and repulsive, that HE DID NOT CHOOSE THAT: but he had a desire for translation; his choice was to "depart and be with Christ," not by death, but without it.

27. Heb. 12: 23;—"Spirits of just men made perfect." If they are made "PERFECT" at death, what need of a resurrection? If made "perfect" without a resurrection, the resurrection would be of no service. But if not made perfect till the resurrection, disembodied spirits are not alluded to; for at the resurrection, spirit and body will be united. The same is true of Paul's remark, "That the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." Spirit and body will then be together. Paul, in speaking of these same just men, says, "They without us should NOT be made perfect." Heb. 11: 40. Hence, there are now no "spirits of just men made perfect," nor will there be till we come to Mt. Zion, to which will descend the heavenly Jerusalem, and the innumerable company of angels, etc. Our version reads, "We are come to Mt. Zion . . . and to the spirits of just men made perfect." But if these spirits are in heaven, we are not one inch nearer to them now than we have been for thousands of years. Dr. McKnight's Translation reads, "We shall come," etc.

28. 1 Pet. 3: 19;—"Went and preached unto the spirits in prison." If disembodied spirits are here meant, and if Christ went to hell and held a protracted meeting among them, in his disembodied state, since he is no respecter of persons, should he not make another mission there, and preach also to those who have accumulated there since the crucifixion? But the simple truth is, Christ was raised by that same spirit by which the spirits now in death's prison were preached to. Upon the principle of a part being put for the whole, men are often called spirits, as in 1 John 4: 1; "Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they are of God; BECAUSE many false prophets are gone out into the world." "Spirits" and "false prophets" are here used interchangeably. Let us read the context; "For Christ also hath once suffered for our sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened [made alive] by the spirit: by which [spirit] also he went and preached to the spirits in [death's] prison,—which sometime were disobedient,—[when were they preached to? Ans.] when once the long suffering of God waited, in the days of Noah," etc. We read the gospel was "preached to them that are dead"—not that were dead at the time of preaching, but that "are dead" now. 1 Pet. 4: 6. They are now in the "prison" of death.

29. Rev. 6: 9;—"I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain. Disembodied souls are not here meant, for in the 11th verse we read,—"It was said unto them [these souls] that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants also and their brethren, that should be killed, as THEY were, should be fulfilled." Thus, these souls had been "killed." Again: they cry, "How long . . wilt thou not judge and avenge our blood"—not the blood of our bodies, but "our blood." Can ghosts be killed? Do they have blood? Furthermore, instead of being on seats of glory, they are under an "altar." A queer place to keep ghosts! More than this, they impatiently cry "how long?" Do they want to get out? Don't blame them! But ghost-souls are not meant. Prof. Whiting's Translation reads "persons." Their cry for vengeance, like the voice of Abel's blood, ascends from the Altar of Slaughter. "White robes were given unto every one of them," —not literal robes, but the "righteousness of saints" was accredited to them; but they were resting in death "for a little season."

30. Rev. 22: 9;—"For I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren the prophets." This is claimed as proof that the soul of a prophet visited John. The fallacy of this supposition will be made apparent by reading the context: "I fell down to worship before the feet of the angel which showed me these things. Then said he [the angel] unto me, See thou do it not: for I [the angel] am thy fellow servant, and [fellow servant] of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book." Thus ghostology is routed and scouted from every pillar and post of the Bible, and the declaration, "The dead know not anything," stands unimpeached. Hence, we look to the resurrection for future life and reward.

For the Crisis.

"The Coming Struggle."

ABOUT ITS PUBLICATION.

Some months have now passed since I published the design to bring out "The Coming Struggle" in pamphlet form as soon as sufficient aid should be obtained for the work. And as the work has received less encouragement and more opposition from brethren than I had hoped, I have thought best to give through the Crisis to such as are interested the present state of the matter.

The Crisis has acknowledged a receipt of $16.57, and I have the promise of about an equal amount in definite parcels, and promises of aid without definitely specifying the amount. Having been at the expense of getting here lately from the State of Maine, and making some necessary purchases also, I have not been able to do anything on the subscription myself. But, notwithstanding the appearances are less promising than I had hoped to see resulting from the call for aid, I am none the less persuaded that the work ought to, and will come out. I have thus far refrained from saying anything directly urging its publication, out of a feeling of delicacy—a fear that I might be liable to the charge of one "puffing his own wares," and perhaps of presumption. On reflection, however, I am constrained to believe that such can be only a false delicacy, when the object is a good one. I might, rather, be liable to the charge of presumption, and a worse folly, even, if in spending somewhat more than six weeks in writing the work I had acted without a hope of doing good. I am free to confess that I was prompted by such a prospect in preparing the article. When I sent the work to the paper, I thought it not probable, though possible, that it would be published in pamphlet form. But since I have learned that the work has already been made a blessing to many, and have had letters from a number of brethren urging its publication, I am willing, and so far as it may promise to be useful, am anxious, to have it come out in pamphlet form.

But, as others have written to me urging its publication, and expressing their interest in the same, I will quote from the letters of some of them. A brother, writing from New Jersey, says in a letter written soon after its publication:—"If the brethren and yourself think best to publish the Coming Struggle in pamphlet form, I think that I will be able to remit you about $5.00 towards it. We are under constant expense, and purse limited, but we think the work should go to the household, and to the world to some extent."—Another brother, writing from Illinois, says in reference to the publication of the work:—"Now, brother, if I ever offered up a prayer in sincerity, it is that you may meet with the greatest success: and that soon, yea, very soon, you may be enabled to scatter your work, not by hundreds, but by thousands and tens of thousands. I remember how deeply interested I was in reading your articles in the Crisis. I remember, too, how often, and how fervently, I wished they could be published in pamphlet form. Consider me as deeply interested in your object, and willing to aid in circulating the work as much as possible."

A brother, writing from Wisconsin, says: "I sincerely hope you will put the 'Coming Struggle' to press in pamphlet form, and you may put my name down for a small share, at least, of that stock. May God spare you, and crown such an enterprise with success."—Another brother, writing from New Hampshire, says, speaking of the position taken in the Coming Struggle:—"Somebody must take this view of the matter, in order to fulfill Rev. 14: 9–11. You may write the editor to say in the Crisis that a friend subscribes $5.00, and you may look to me for the same."—A sister, writing from New Jersey, says,—after mentioning that she had lost ten dollars through the mail designed for this work, and had made an effort to sell a valued relic of her father's,—"Now, Bro., all this was done for The Coming Struggle; that it might struggle into life and light, and should Satan even get this, I believe the coffers in God's treasury will do it."—Says another sister, writing from N. J. also:—"Having just finished your article, 'The Coming struggle,' I feel like personally acknowledging my gratitude and thankfulness to you. . . . I feel that it is something that must come before the world. I feel like making almost any sacrifice myself for this purpose."—A sister, writing from Canada, says:—"I am glad to learn that 'The Coming Struggle' may be looked to as forthcoming. Shall be glad to obtain several numbers when published. May God set his seal on the little work, and may it prove a safeguard to many souls is my earnest prayer. I trust it will do much good. Would be glad to forward my subscription now had I the means. Hope to sell my watch soon, and glorify God, greeting at the time."

The above extracts are but a fair representation of the feelings of many others whom I have seen, and some others who have written to me. They are earnest and prayerful in their devotions, and I am satisfied that God will hear such in this matter. They are the "poor of this world," but have a rich Father, and one who loves his children. I am well persuaded that the Lord will carry on the work through his own stewards, whoever they are. Therefore let such as feel interested forward as the Lord shall direct, praying that his blessing may attend the work, and pray, though you cannot forward.

Pledge OF THE TRY COMPANY.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED, HEREBY PLEDGE OURSELVES TO ABSTAIN FROM TEA, COFFEE, TOBACCO, AND ALL INTOXICATING DRINKS AS A BEVERAGE.

We hope all the members of the TRY COMPANY will sign the above pledge. Form good habits when young and you will reap a rich reward. By keeping the foregoing pledge you will not only save much money to buy books and other useful articles, but you will enjoy better health, be less likely to be sick, have more patience, and take more comfort. We know this is true from happy experience and observation for nineteen years. Come, ye noble youth, what do you say? Will you sign the pledge? We think we hear a multitude say, YES. That's right. Send us your names. Ask father and mother to sign their's too. Get all you can to sign it. We will keep a list of your names. We wish all the children who have sent their names to the TRY COMPANY, would let us know soon as convenient, whether they wish their names added to the pledge. Of course you do; but we wish you to say so, before we venture to put your names on the list. Come, now, wide awake, for a good work. Let people see what children can do.—E.

Good News.

We have some good news to tell the members of the TRY COMPANY. Little Martin Howard, one of the members of the company, in Danielsonville, Ct., has given his heart to the Savior, and we baptized him Sunday, March 9th. He is happy, and is trying to be good, that he may be ready to meet the Lord when he comes. He spoke in our meetings, and expressed his determination to be a christian. Pray for him. We hope all the members of the TRY COMPANY will be good children, obey their parents, love Jesus, and be ready for his coming.—E.

☞ The questions asked by the Try Company have been correctly answered by Willie B. Stark, ten years old, Jane A. Elmore, Mary Hibbard. The Enigma, No. 1, has been rightly answered by Emily Hadley, Willie Jones, S. O. Parker. We do not have room to publish all the answers in full.—E.

☞ THE ENIGMA sent by D N S has been answered by Nellie F. Dargin, Great Falls, N. H. As the Enigma was imperfect, we do not publish the explanation of it, but the sentence formed, which it was meant to be—"In the last days perilous times shall come." If any more send Enigmas, please make them complete, without mistakes.—E.

FROM ALICE E. RATHBUN.

DEAR EDITOR:—I would like to join the Try Company. I will try to answer some of the questions of the last Crisis. The answer to the first question is in Ex. 6: 20. 2d, 1 Kings 18: 13. 3d, "If the righteous be scarcely saved, where will the ungodly and the sinner appear?" I answer, before God; to give an account to him of the deeds done in the body. Answer to question first, by Louisa H. Collins, Job 18: 18. Second question, Amos 2: 6. Third question, "How many feet high was Goliah?" Eleven feet nine inches. Fourth, Deut. 3: 11. First prophecy of Christ, Gen. 3: 15. Answer to question second, by "S.," Judges 3: 22. Third, Gen. 3: 29. Enoch is the oldest man now living.

I would like to ask what became of Jephtha's daughter? What king was sick unto death? Who wept and prayed to God, and he lengthened out his days fifteen years? Who was slain for touching the ark, and why? I hope the Try Company may indeed try to do the will of our Father in heaven, that they may be sons and daughters, and reign with Christ on the earth.

Cordova, Illinois.

FROM EMILY J. HOWARD.

BRO. GRANT:—I am a little girl eleven years old. I am much pleased with the Try Company, and would like to become a member. I am glad you are making the Crisis interesting for the children. I am disappointed when I look over its columns and do not find any thing for the youth. I will answer the first question by quoting from Prov. 22: 15;—"Foolishness is bound in the heart of a child: but the rod of correction shall drive it far from him." Second question,—I think children best please their parents by obedience. Please read Col. 3: 20. The fourth question you will find answered in Gen. 23: 1,—"And Sarah was a hundred and twenty-seven years old." The fifth question I think you will find in Job 30: 8,—"They were children of fools." Sixth question,—Samson was the author of the riddle, Please read Judges 14: 12–14. The seventh question is answered in Kings 19: 18.

Will some of the Try Company tell us who led the children of Israel into the promised land?

FROM MARTIN L. HOWARD.

BRO. GRANT:—I will answer some of the questions asked in the Crisis of Feb. 25th. You will find the answer to the first question in Prov. 22: 15. The answer to the second question in Eph. 6: 1. Also in Col. 3: 20. You will find the answer to the fourth question in Gen. 23: 1. The answer to the fifth question is in Job 30: 1–4.

One of the Try Company says *Abram was the father of Moses. I do not think that is correct. Will some of the Try Company tell who slew the man that had six fingers on each hand, and six toes on each foot? Who had seven sons hanged?

West Killingly, Ct.

* This was a mistake of the type,—should have read AMRAM instead of Abram.—E.

FROM CHARLES STONE.

DEAR EDITOR:—I want to join your Try Company. I send you the answers to the third and fourth questions. 3, Goliah was six cubits and a span; for in 1 Sam. 17: 4, we find—"And there went out a champion out of the camp of the Philistines, named Goliah of Gath, whose height was six cubits and a span." 4. "For only Og king of Bashan remained of the remnant of giants. Behold his bedstead was a bedstead of iron. Is it not in Rabbath of the children of Ammon? Nine cubits was the length thereof, and four cubits the breadth of it, after the cubit of a man."

FROM WILLIE JONES.

BRO. GRANT:—I am a little boy six years old. I would like to join your Try Company. I do not use intoxicating drink of any kind, or tobacco. I love to pray, and I love to hear about Jesus. I hope to be one that shall stand on the new earth, and I try to do what Christ would have me do, so when he comes I shall live with him forever, and drink of the river of life. I love to think of what Jesus said,*—"I love them that love me, and those that seek me early shall find me."

*Solomon says it of Wisdom. Read Prov. 8: 17.—Ed.

FROM JOHN H. PRATT.

DEAR EDITOR:—One year ago a Company was formed in this place, called "The Band of Hope." I was one of that company. We progressed finely for a time, our numbers greatly increasing; but secessionists were found in our band, which completely disorganized it. I have remained true to my pledge, and wish to become a member of the Try Company. I have the solution to the Enigma in your last paper. It is found in 2 Tim. 3: 1;—"In the last days perilous times shall come."

Wales, Mass.

QUESTIONS.—I would like to ask the following questions: 1. What king reigned one year in Jerusalem? 2. Where did Moses die, and by whom was he buried? 3. Who placed their hands on Saul, that he might receive sight? 4. By whom, and where, was Christ baptized?

ELLA S. DRAKE, aged ten years.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For the Crisis.

Humility.

Lead on, oh God, down in the vale,
Where wisdom always dwells,
For we would learn more perfectly
Whate'er our Father wills.

We know He rules in right with all,
In justice every way;
Perfect and true are all his ways,
And none may answer nay.

He leads in ways we know not of—
Perhaps through gloomy vales;
But oh! how good that we may know
That faith in Him prevails.

A trust, an humble trust in Him,
Is all that he requires;
Though clouds be dark, and storms may rise,
He'll banish all our fears.

And for the clouds He'll sunshine give,
E'en brighter than before,
And for a storm a calm ensure,
And soundness for the sore.

There is one Father, God in heaven,
Who rules in earth and sky,
Who cares for each, who cares for all,
Who'll ransom, though they die

Who sways the hearts of all who yield
Their utmost tribute due,
In acts of faith, in works of love,
In all they have to do.

The Work of the Lord.

AN EXHORTATION.—BY H. L. HASTINGS.*

Delivered at Campville, Conn., at the close of Bro. C. Goodrich's Sermon on 1 Cor. 15: 58, Dec. 28th, 1860.

They say "down east," among the sailors, "Obey orders if you break owners." If a man disobeys orders, he takes all the risk of the results on himself; if he obeys orders, he has no risks. Now then the Lord says to us, "Go to work." When he says, "Be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord"; when he tells us this, and exhorts us to be diligent, our business is to do it, to go to work, to obey orders, to listen to the voice of the great Captain of salvation, and be saved. And then if our hearts fail, if our courage fails, if around us all sorts of discouragements and all shades of gloom gather, we may take the words that have been rehearsed in our ears as our comfort:—"Be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

It is not a matter of doubt; it is not a matter of dispute; it is not an unsettled question: it is settled as a fact, that when a man labors for God, his "labor is not in vain." I do not care how dark his present prospects may seem to be—his labor is not in vain. Little may appear to be done, but when the grand results are summed up in the day of God, there will be something done, and every effort made by God's command will be found to have contributed to it. Every stroke of the oar brings the boat nearer the landing. Every step of the journey brings the traveler nearer to his rest. If you go and look down into the ocean depths, and see the insects building up mountains and islands of coral, you will say it is very slow work. But it is not in vain. At last it rears itself above the wave, and is an island or a reef. And so the work that we do, and the work that others have done, when it comes to be revealed at last, will find its position and importance in the great plan and purpose of God.

Who would have thought, when John was put on the Isle of Patmos, that he could do any good, or get any good, or be of any service to anybody? Nero probably thought him safe in that place; but there God gave him that revelation that has ever since been as a chart to us and to the church in various ages. Old John Bunyan went about the country, tinkering up tin ware and preaching the gospel. They liked his tinkering it seems, but did not like his preaching; and so they shut him up in Bedford jail. But he kept toiling on, making shoe laces with tin tags on the ends for a living, and wearing out the weary years of his life in that old prison. When his wife went to plead in the presence of the mighty for his deliverance, and besought that he might be set free, they said, "If he will stop preaching he may go out." But he would not do that, and when they made him the offer he said, "No; I will stay till the moss grows over my eyebrows, if God spares my poor life so long, before I will quit preaching the word of God." So he lay in jail, and to beguile the hours and to amuse himself he wrote, and having written, he gave us the "Pilgrim's Progress," which leads a man all the way from the "City of Destruction" to the "City of the living God," clearly pointing out the path. And this book probably has been scattered more widely than any other uninspired volume ever written. Far and near, among multitudes of different tongues, it has gone the world over to guide pilgrims to glory. Bunyan thought perhaps that it was very hard to stay there in jail; but if he had been permitted to go out, he would have been simply the "Tinker Preacher," and would perhaps have died and been forgotten. But now his name goes the world over, and his work is not done, nor will it be till the last pilgrim of God passes through his last trial, and shining ones welcome him to the holy city.

By all such circumstances, we see how little we can tell what God really wants of us by what we want to do ourselves. There was a man named De Sacy committed to prison in the old Bastile in France, and there he went to work translating God's Bible. He toiled day after day, and month after month, till he got it finished, and the next day they let him out. That Bible is perhaps the best translation of the Scriptures into the French language in the world, and it was prison work. And no doubt he did five times as much for God's cause there in that gloomy prison as he could have done if he had been running up and down every where, just as he pleased. For the Lord takes the furnace of affliction to boil a man down in, and get the real strength of him all out. When he goes scattering his tracks all over creation, it is like throwing chips on the water. And so God sometimes puts a man down underneath, like a foundation in building up stone abutments.

Out on the river yonder is a boy throwing on the water a spoonful of oil, a peck of shavings, or a basket of chips. They make a large display, but what does that do towards making a solid foundation? Yonder is a company of men building a bridge. They work all day; you go there at night, and you cannot see anything they have done. They work the next day, yet you can see no progress. They work a month, and still you do not see what they have accomplished. And still they keep at work. Perhaps they are sinking spiles, driving them down, walling up the enclosure, and then laying the abutments. By and by they get them up out of the water. By and by you look, and behold! a structure which will stand for ages. Yet they have not made so much show as the boy with his chips or shavings. In one case it is surface work, in another it is work beneath the current. Great fires and great heats are not those that make the most blaze and smoke, you know. A tar barrel will make a great deal more smoke than a charcoal-pit, yet there is more heat in the charcoal-pit, a hundred times over, than in the tar barrel. A barrel of shavings will make a wonderful blaze in the world, and that is all there is of it. A peck of stone coal has fifty times as much heat in it. So the great work in this world is frequently done without any parade or show. The mightiest forces under heaven are the forces that operate quietly, yet powerfully, for the glory of God and the good of man.

You look out in the Spring, and lo! everything appears stripped, and barren, and desolate. You wait a week, and the buds swell; a fortnight, and the leaves put out; a month, the blossoms burst; two months, and the whole forest is covered with a mass of verdure, and beauty, and glory; and the land brightens with fertility and splendor, as from the hand of God. Who blew the trumpet when this was done? Who made a tumult when the fruit was put on the trees? There is more notice taken of trimming up a church for Christmas than of all this. The great forces of Nature, the might of God in the world, are all quiet, yet almost almighty so far as power is concerned. Just see! from hill to valley, from mountain to plain, from the river to the ends of the earth, God clothes the fields with grass, the valleys with verdure, the hills with corn, the trees with foliage, and everything with fruit. And who made a noise when it was done? Who cried out and said, "See here, I am going to hang apples on that tree! Look! I am coming with chestnuts and walnuts for this forest." No such thing occurs. All goes on quietly. A man casts the seed into the earth; it grows; "first the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear."

Now what we need to learn by this is, to work, to be like the great forces of Nature which keep at work, mind their own business, and do not stop to inquire whether they have done anything or not. The roots never send up a committee to know whether the leaves are unfolding. The sun never stops to see whether the trees were profited by his shining yesterday, but goes on as a strong man running a race, rolling splendor over the land. So God would have us let our light shine, whether men see it or put their eyes out; whether they are willing to profit by it or not. We are to do right, "be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord."

Sometimes the Lord has to hide from our eyes the good that he does through us, lest we become vain and proud. Sometimes he causes us to be afflicted, discouraged. Elijah goes down to Mt. Horeb, and God says to him, "What doest thou here, Elijah? What business have you here?"

"What doest thou here, Elijah?" That is the point. "What are you here for?"

"They have killed the prophets of the Lord, and I alone am left."

"No, you are not left alone. I have reserved unto myself seven thousand men who have not bowed the knee to Baal."

And so men in these days sometimes go off and hide, thinking faith is extinct, and righteousness expiring. And the voice of God comes to them, "What are you doing here? Go out and show yourself to Ahab, and do what I bid you." And thus in the depths of the humility, weariness and woe of the pilgrim life, God prepares men for the triumphs of great and mighty faith; yea, for "the chariots of Israel and the horsemen thereof," which take them to the land of rest. How sorely discouraged Elijah was. On one occasion he said, "Let me die"; just when he had prayed, and the fire had come down from heaven, and the rain had made glad the earth, then, at the threat of the ungodly Jezebel, he was ready to give up all and die. He concluded he was no better than his fathers, and if he could only die, he was ready to give up all his hopes of going to heaven in a chariot of fire. Then he fell asleep—I suspect he cried himself to sleep—and while asleep God sent an angel down to get him something to eat. When he had eaten he felt better. After sleeping he ate again, felt better still, and went on his way.

We are to learn then not to let our hopes depart, though we may at times wish to die, thinking that we are alone, forgetful of the angels that have charge concerning us, and supposing that all our works amount to nothing. But that is none of our business. God sends out warriors. It is their business to stand by, hear the great Captain of their salvation, and when the order comes, "Don't give up the ship," they are to stand by as long as there is a plank left. They are not to flee, not to strike their colors, not to give up. They are not their own; they belong to Christ. They must obey him.

Let us then take these things as consolations, remembering that God does not reckon up his business every Saturday night, does not balance everything when New Year comes. There are a great many outstanding matters which he will bring up by and by, which will tell on the grand result. He knows when the cup of cold water was given to a disciple; he knows where those dwell who feed the hungry ones. And at the day of Christ they shall not be forgotten. He will remember it all. He will be able to point out every circumstance.

Sometimes by those things of which we are ashamed, and in view of which we are so utterly discouraged that we are ready to hide our heads in the dust, by such means, and at such times, God does his work, that no one may take the glory unto himself. I have had some experience in this matter myself. I know what it is to sneak away from a place where I had been trying to preach the gospel, and be ashamed to be seen there for months afterwards. And I have reason to think that I did twice as much good as in some time when I was confident of success. So God teaches those who trust in him to do the work, mind their own business, and let him take care of the consequences. We are to stand wherever our place may be, inside or outside, high or low, only just where God wants it to be. Though we may be buried deep in the foundations of his building, or though we may be perched on the top, where we fear no one will ever know of us, though we are where no one will ever behold us, we will still do our work. Be sure God is wise and we are foolish, and the sooner we find it out the better. Says one, "If I could do like this one, I could be satisfied to work." That would be very convenient. Did you ever see a boy go into a hay field to spread hay, who did not want to take hold of a man's scythe and mow? Did you ever see a boy go to pick up chips in a carpenter's shop, who did not want to handle the plane, the adze, the saw, the augur, and the chisel? And so it is eternally; every body is neglecting what they can do, and trying to do something that they cannot do.

You will find that idea to hold just as true in the work of the Lord as anywhere else. God says to the weak, "Go do this." He says, "I cannot." God puts him in a place of danger, and says, "Stand there!" The man trembles, and fears, and almost desponds, till the Captain's voice reassures him, and then he goes through.

You have heard of the boy who was hanging far up aloft amid the rigging of the vessel. His foot had slipped, and he was clinging to a single rope, and vainly trying to regain his footing. He was looking down towards his feet, at the deep beneath, and his head reeled with the sight of danger, his hand trembled, and he was about to fall. The captain was on deck, and looking up, beheld his peril and cried out, "Look aloft, you sneaking lubber! Look aloft!" and the boy heeded his word, and with his eye fixed on the blue sky above, with no further fear or trembling, he found his footing and was saved. So if we would learn wisdom when we are in danger, let us listen to the voice of our Father saying, "Look aloft", and fixing our eye on Christ, be reassured by the smile of his countenance, and the light of his eye, and say with the apostle, "I can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth me."

The Opening of the Sixth Seal.

NUMBER SIX.

"And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?"—REV. 6: 12-17

We must bear in mind that John continues to describe what he saw represented upon the roll of the book as the Lamb opened the seals, not things which literally transpired on the earth. He was called up to heaven in the Spirit, chap 4, and there beheld in vision a representation of the kingdom of God on a larger scale than that which measured his view in company with Peter and James on the mount of transfiguration. Matt. 16: 27, 28, 17: 1-13. Here he saw in vision, while under the illuminating influence of the Spirit, not Moses and Elias appearing in glory, but four and twenty elders, representatives of the heads of the twelve tribes of Israel, and the twelve apostles of the Lamb, Rev. 21: 12-14, who appeared in glory, sitting round about the throne of God upon four and twenty seats or thrones, clothed in white raiment, and having on their heads crowns of gold; verse 4. And when the Lamb had taken the book out of the right hand of him that sat on the throne, these four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odors, (or incense, margin) which are the prayers of saints. "And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests: and we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. 5: 7-10. The golden vials full of incense representing the prayers of the saint, shows the whole to be emblematical, and representative of a kingdom to be established on the earth where the saints were to reign, whose prayers were represented by the incense in the golden vials of the elders. Hence the whole vision of the fourth and fifth chapters is representative of the kingdom of God which the saints pray for as often as they repeat, "Thy kingdom come"; and hence the scene was not a reality existing in heaven, but a more extensive view of the kingdom of God than the three disciples were favored with on the mount of transfiguration. John was a spectator both here, and also on the mount; but he is to be an actor in the scene when the kingdom shall come, and the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory to regenerate, or "make all things new." Matt. 19: 28; Rev. 21: 5. This vision John had before the Lamb commenced to open the seals of the book. "While these seals were being opened, he describes what he saw depicted upon the roll at the opening of each seal unfolded a symbol significant of the scene to transpire during the time to which the seal referred. The symbolical language of the sixth seal can be properly applied to but one scene in all the history of the past; and it is typical of but one scene foretold by the prophets in all the future; viz: the destruction of Jerusalem, and the end of the Jewish nation; and the destruction of antichrist, and the end of the kingdoms of this world; and to the destruction of Jerusalem we have now come rolling back the leaves of that wonderful book which "no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth was able to open." 5: 3.

We may regard this seal as commencing with the death of Christ, when there was a literal earthquake, and a darkening of the sun from the sixth to the ninth hour; but the symbolical earthquake is more, which shook Jerusalem from its foundation, and the Jewish state and nation from its position as the kingdom of God by promise, taking it from them, and giving it to another nation, because they, the builders, rejected the stone which is to become the head of the corner in the building of the temple of the new Jerusalem. Eph. 2: 19-22. "Therefore I say unto you, The kingdom of God shall be taken from you, and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof. And whosoever shall fall on this stone shall be broken: but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. And when the chief priests and Pharisees had heard his parables, they perceived that he spake of them." Matt. 21: 42-45. See also his other parables beginning at verse 28. The revolution which brought this change of the kingdom, was the symbolical earthquake in our text. Jerusalem became a scene of blood in answer to that awful prayer, "His blood be on us, and on our children."—Matt. 27: 25. "The children of the kingdom" were then "cast out into outer darkness." Matt. 8: 12. Their sun, the emblem of holy light, Rev. 12: 1, "became black as sackcloth of hair", and the feasts of their new moons became as blood; for they had shed innocent blood, therefore God gave them blood to drink, Rev. 16: 4-6. "The stars of heaven," emblem of God's ministers, Dan. 12: 3, Rev. 1: 20, "fell unto the earth", the priests ceased to offer the daily sacrifice.

Commentators generally regard this seal as marking the revolution from Paganism, and the judgments poured out upon pagan Rome in that revolution under Constantine. Says Bishop Newton, "The great lights of the heathen world, the powers, civil and ecclesiastical, were all eclipsed and obscured. The heathen emperors and Cæsars were slain; heathen priests and augurs were extirpated. The heathen officers and magistrates were removed. The heathen temples were demolished, and their revenues were appropriated to better uses'" Thus this learned writer makes "the sun became black as sackcloth of hair," to represent the eclipsing of the great lights of the heathen world, the civil and ecclesiastical powers, but he has given no proof that the sun is ever used in Scripture to represent these powers. If the "woman clothed with the sun," Rev. 12: 1, denotes the Christian Church arrayed in pure and heavenly light, then the sun cannot in the same book properly be made to represent the opposite heathenism. Again. If the stars are emblems of the ministers of Jesus Christ, then they cannot be emblems of heathen priests. The woman in Rev. 12 had upon her head a crown of twelve stars, which are admitted to be emblematical of the twelve apostles or first ministers of Christ. Should the ministry apostatize, or become a corrupt order of men, then they might properly be termed stars fallen from heaven. But there is no proof that the heathen priests sprang from a heavenly ministry; but the Jewish priests did so spring, and became corrupt; and therefore "the stars of heaven fell to the earth," would properly represent them. They "fell to the earth even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind." The fig tree is an emblem of the Jewish nation. Joel 1: 6, 7,—"For a nation is come up upon my land, strong and without number, whose teeth are the teeth of a lion, and he hath the cheek teeth of a great lion. He hath laid my vine waste, and barked my fig tree: he hath made it clean bare, and cast it away; the branches thereof are made white." Briers and thorns represent the nation by whom the Jewish nation was laid waste. Isa. 5: 6, 7,—"And I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned nor digged; but there shall come up briers and thorns: I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it. For the vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Judah his pleasant plant." Therefore, if briers and thorns represent the Gentile or heathen nations by whom Jerusalem is trodden down, the fig tree would not be introduced as an illustration in a comparison representing the fall of heathen priests, "as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs"; for men do not gather grapes of thorns, nor figs of thistles. Matt. 7: 16. Hence a good tree would not be introduced to illustrate the corrupt fruit of an evil tree. "Wherefore, by their fruits ye shall know them," verse 20, and know which to use as an illustration in making a comparison. Christ strictly adhered to this rule; for when he was about to pronounce a curse upon the Jewish nation for their unfruitfulness and unbelief, he cursed a barren fig tree as an illustration, Mark 11: 12-21, and when the Jewish nation should show signs of a revival, he introduced the parable of the fig tree shooting forth, to represent the sign by which we may know when the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Luke 21: 29-31. Here it is proper to notice verse 32,—"Verily I say unto you, This generation shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled." That is, this generation of whom I am now speaking, this people mentioned in verses 23, 24.—"For there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people, and they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." This is the curse pronounced upon the barren fig tree. Will it ever revive after withering away under such a curse? Let the Lord himself answer this question Jer. 30: 11,—"Though I make a full end of all the nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee" (the Jewish nation). My fig-tree which the "nations have barked, made clean bare, and cast away until the branches thereof are made white" (Joel 1: 7,) shall yet revive." Verily I say unto you, this nation, this people, this generation that shall fall by the edge of the sword, and be led away captive into all nations, shall not pass away, till all be fulfilled. "For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee." After the tribulation of those days (Matt. 24: 29 to the end), my fig-tree shall revive; and when his branch is tender, and putteth forth leaves, when the Jewish nation begin to show signs of life, then "know ye (my people who shall live at that day and see this sign), that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Luke 21: 31. This application of the term generation to the Jewish nation is not made without Scriptural authority. Jer. 7: 29,—"Cut off thine hair, O Jerusalem, and cast it away, and take up a lamentation on high places; for the Lord hath rejected and forsaken the generation of his wrath." These considerations compel me to reject the application of Rev. 6: 12, 13, to Pagan Rome by Bishop Newton as unscriptural. J. C. ROGERS.

Flesh and Blood.

"Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God"—1 Cor. 15: 50

The above is often quoted to prove that the resurrection is not a resurrection of the body of flesh and blood, but of the spirit; while some endeavor to harmonize it with Paul's teaching of a literal resurrection, by saying that there will be flesh in the kingdom, but no blood, and for proof of the position argue that, as the righteous are to have bodies like Christ's after his resurrection, the spirit will take the place of blood, assuming that Christ poured out his blood on the cross and was raised from the dead without blood, and for proof of the assertion contend that, as the blood is the seat of disease, if the righteous have blood in the resurrection they would be subject to disease.

In order to understand a writer or speaker, it is necessary that we understand the use and meaning of terms employed to convey his idea. Let it be observed that Paul does not say that flesh and blood cannot enter the kingdom, but that flesh and blood cannot INHERIT the kingdom. The word inherit is not a synonym for ENTER, consequently Paul could not have any reference to the nature of the body that should enter the kingdom, but had reference to the relationship that the natural man sustains to the kingdom of God.

Let us now consider the terms that Paul uses. What does he mean by flesh and blood? If he has reference to the nature of the body that shall enter the kingdom, he as clearly declares that flesh shall not enter, and we apply it in that light would make Paul contradict himself in verses 42 and 43, where he says that "it (the body of flesh and blood) is sown in corruption, and raised in incorruption." The same (it) that is sown is the same (it) that is raised; consequently if flesh and blood constitute the body sown, it will the body that is raised. "Flesh and blood" sometimes has reference to the corrupt nature of man; see Rom. 7: 5; 8: 9, 12; 13: 14. Flesh in the above evidently has reference to the operation of the fleshly nature. It also has reference to human nature and lineage. See Heb. 2: 14,—"Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same: for verily he took not on him the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham." That is, Christ is a descendant of Abraham in the lineage of flesh and blood. See Rom. 9: 5,—"Whose are the fathers, and of whom as concerning the flesh Christ came." Let it be borne in mind that Paul in his labors endeavored to show the Jews that they could not be heirs of the kingdom by virtue of being Abraham's descendants through flesh and blood, but they could become heirs, or inherit the kingdom of God, by faith in Christ; from the fact, such only were reckoned as the seed of Abraham. See Rom. 9: 8,—"That is, they which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God, but the children of the promise are counted for the seed." Thus we learn by Paul's argument that flesh and blood has reference to the lineage, and that flesh and blood cannot be heir to the kingdom by virtue of being descendants of Abraham or any other good man.

The term "INHERIT," used in connection with "flesh and blood," sustains me in the position I have taken. To inherit anything is to be a legitimate heir by relationship to the individual from whom we receive the inheritance; hence, I understand Paul to mean that flesh and blood sustains no relationship to God, through which they can be heirs or inherit the kingdom of God. "Flesh and blood cannot INHERIT the kingdom of God." It was upon this point that the Jews stumbled. They claimed to be the descendants of Abraham through flesh and blood, and consequently heirs to the kingdom promised to Abraham and his seed. Paul corrected this error by saying that if they were Christ's, they were Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise; hence if not Christ's, they were not heirs, for "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom." Viewing the text from this stand-point, we see that Paul did not mean that flesh and blood could not enter the kingdom, but that flesh and blood could not inherit it through relationship to those that had the promise of the kingdom. This presents the truth of the text, and is in harmony with the gospel that makes no difference between Jew or Gentile, but offers the kingdom to all that are Christ's. They became Christ's by faith, consequently heirs to the inheritance; hence flesh and blood may enter the kingdom, being made heirs, not through flesh and blood, but through Christ.

What evidence is there in the Scriptures that blood will not enter the kingdom in connection with the flesh? When Job spake of his hope of a resurrection, did he mean that his blood was not a part of himself, when he said he should see God for himself? If so, then blood is not a part of man, and the Lord made a mistake when he said that the blood was "the life." It must be something else than a part of man, for man, all there is of him that is buried, is to be raised incorruptible. If man, constituted of flesh and blood, can be an heir to the kingdom through faith in Christ, will the same man get the inheritance? If so, then flesh and blood will enter the kingdom.

We now pass to notice some of the objections that are raised against flesh and blood entering the kingdom.

1. It is said that we are to have bodies like Christ's body after his resurrection, and that as Christ had no blood, but the spirit to take the place of the blood, therefore the righteous will have spirit in place of blood. Who knows that Christ had no blood after his resurrection? Reasoning after the manner of men, it would be impossible to draw all the blood from his system through the wounds he received. The premise is assumed without proof, and contrary to reason, consequently weighs nothing in the argument.

2. It is said that blood is corrupt, and if the righteous have blood it would produce disease. Paul says, "We shall be changed"; and the same power that changes the body to incorruption will change the blood as a part of the body. If the position is taken that the body cannot be quickened to life without the spirit of God to take the place of the blood, then it would follow that all that are raised must have the spirit of God to course through their veins instead of blood; and the result is this, that the wicked will live forever or never be raised. Both are wrong from the fact the premise is wrong. The wicked are raised from the dead as really as the righteous, but having no relationship to Christ by faith, they have no inheritance in Christ, consequently they do not have the change to incorruption. Notes by the Way.

Beloved Brn. and Srs:—Since my last, I have been doing what has appeared to be duty, in order to win a bride for my Master.

Nov. 14, I commenced a meeting at Port Perry. Found things in a bad condition. Church disbanded, meetings at low water mark, and not enough assembled to say we with emphasis. However, as soon as it was noised abroad that I was in Port, more came out than could get into our house of worship. I remained till I gave them twenty-six sermons. Saints were stirred up to duty, and sinners were led to embrace Jesus as the Life Giver. I had the happiness of retiring to the Scue-Gog Lake four times, for the purpose of inducting souls into the Christ, by a burial in water. Eleven mortal souls I had the honor of baptizing into the Christ for the remission of sins. One of them had been a Methodist class-leader and exhorter. Meetings established. Gave four discourses in Columbus to attentive congregations.

Dec. 9, I commenced a meeting in Cartwright. A new field, and full of bigots. However, many came out to hear. The excitement was great. A preacher was sent for to protect their creed, which resulted in a discussion. Truth gained a perfect victory; but God shall have the glory. Onward we moved among the foaming elements; till a union was brought about between the four sectarian churches and the worshipers of Bacchus and Mars. Then a meeting was held by two of their preachers, in which they endeavored to place us and the doctrine we teach on a par with the French infidels. I gave them a challenge to discuss the doctrine which they called infidel, stating that all testimony should be drawn from the Bible, giving them the liberty to call on all the clergymen in the Province to assist them if they thought themselves not qualified to manage their side. But like dishonest men and cowards, they backed down, and advised the people to lock the door upon us—which was the strongest argument they had to bring against the doctrine we taught. But a private house was opened, and we continued our meetings till we gave nineteen discourses. Baptized five mortal souls into the Christ for the remission of sins. A church was established consisting of seven members—two of them having been baptized by myself last June, at our annual conference, which was held in Darlington. Others will go forward. Held a meeting with the church in Darlington, where I gave twelve discourses. Our meeting was good. The brethren in D. are strong, and well informed upon the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of his Anointed. I gave ten discourses in Clark to good congregations; and I trust good was accomplished. Brethren came into gospel order so far as to establish a stated meeting on the first day of the week.

Jan. 16th and 17th I visited the brethren at Port Perry, and gave them four discourses. Found them in a prosperous condition. Thursday, the 21st, started for Port Dover, being drawn by steam and horse power, and after a tedious journey of two nights I succeeded in reaching P. D., and to my astonishment landed among a swarm of Uuniversalists. Had a discussion with their champion on the kingdom. He was perfectly vanquished. I was to have preached to his people according to arrangement, on the morning of the 26th, but he filled the pulpit. I passed off in the afternoon to a place called Black Creek, where I got up a meeting. Gave three discourses on the reign of Christ, to attentive congregations. On the 30th I started for this place. Stopped at Port Riasa with a Bro., who was brought into the truth by reading the "Harbinger." Preached in the evening to a house well filled with attentive hearers. The next day I reached this place. Have preached five times. Have had the best of attention given to the word. R. V. Lyon, Evangelist.

"The Silver and the Dross;" or, some things I like, and dislike, in the Crisis.

A Short Sermon.—Text, Prov. 25: 4.

As "all is not gold that glitters," so among the silver of these times, there is some dross, at least. The author of our text observed the same state of things in his day; and instead of teaching us to let these two elements stand together, he has commanded us to separate the one from the other, and the result will be good indeed.

As sermons are preached about almost everything else, it may not be amiss to preach a short one to the Crisis.

In order to present my ideas in the shortest way, I will speak of some things I do like, and also of some I do not like in the Crisis, believing one to be the "silver," and the other the "dross."

And 1st. I do like the Crisis, because it is our paper; by which I mean that it is the medium through which we can talk together lovingly, as brethren and sisters in the Lord.

2d. I like the paper, because it seems to be correct, as a general thing, on the great truths that distinguish us from others, and it fearlessly advocates those truths.

3d. I love it, because it ever greets me with a loving spirit, and seeks to cheer me up on my pilgrimage to the heavenly country.

4th. I like it, because it brings to me heart-cheering messages from many of Father's family,—from despised outcasts, of whom I should otherwise know nothing.

5th. I like the paper because it is a faithful chronicler of the signs of the times; and as I read, I can look up and rejoice, knowing that our redemption draweth nigh.

6th. I love it, because I believe its conductors to be men of God, and who have the good of the cause at heart.

There are several other "silvery" things about it, but, as "open rebuke is better than secret love," I pass to consider some of my dislikes.

1st. I do not like to see in the paper some articles that look as though their authors were urging upon us some bobby to ride; even at the sacrifice of all good feeling, and also at the loss of the love and reunion of the body.

2d. It is not very lovely to see the paper burdened with such huge names as are sometimes hitched on to some of our preachers, as Rev., A. B., B. L., B. A., A. P. B., &c., &c. If the Bible warrants such titles, use them; if not, forbear; it is "dross."

3d. I do not really relish so much that is said about what we shall not eat and drink, till the whole catalogue of eatables and drinkables is gone by the board, and we left to starve; unless some good brethren and sisters will pray us down manna from heaven, or something else that will keep us alive.

4th. I do not admire some articles in the paper that throw away what good there is in certain systems of medical practice, and pour in upon us such torrents of Hydropathy that some of us are nearly submerged in their freezing depths.

5th. I do not like to see the course of some countenanced in the paper, when such ones are "sowing discord," and have no fellowship with the paper.

There may be some more dross with the silver, but I will seek for no more now. Let what there is be taken away, and the last part of our text, together with 2 Tim. 2. 21, will be the blessed result. Amen.

Mistranslation and Misquotation of 2 Thess. 1: 9.

A short time since I discovered, by means of some discussion of the subject in the Catholic Quarterly Review (Dr. Brownson's), that the Latin or Vulgate version of 2 Thess. 1: 9 is palpably inaccurate. Instead of the phrase, "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction," it reads: "Who shall suffer everlasting punishments in destruction," (Qui pœnas dabunt in interitu æternas.) And the older Latin version gives the same reading with the slight difference: "of destruction" for "in destruction." Thus the adjective is transferred to another noun, and with the new noun is changed to the plural number—a twofold error. Now, while numerous orthodox writers allow that extinction would be eternal punishment, no one would undertake to show that it is "eternal punishments." So the Romish authority on this passage of Scripture is unquestionably orthodox.

The fact is important for this reason. We are often asked how the common view could have prevailed as it has, if it be an error. The prevalence of it is more than half accounted for as soon as this wrong translation is accounted for. The Vulgate was paramount and almost supreme authority in the church for a full thousand years. And when for so many centuries the pulpit thundered "punishments eternally," and not one man in a hundred thousand knew enough to appeal to the Greek for correction of the error, we need not wonder if the Reformation found the Church too thoroughly permeated with the notion of deathless misery to be freed from it for a few generations longer. And the mistranslation is readily accounted for, when once the soul had begun to be called immortal. Moreover, there is a proneness almost in human language to give the plural for the singular. An important error of this kind is stereotyped in the condensed edition of Cruden's Concordance, where, under the word "persuade," the phrase in 2 Cor. 5: 11 is given with the plural, "terrors."

And Protestants have reached a stereotype misquotation of 2 Thess. 1: 9, hardly less serious than the Romish mistranslation of it. The "Bible Text Book," published by the Boston American Tract Society, (which issues that kind and gentle distribe on "Sadduceeism,") under the word "Death," informs us that "eternal death" is "described as banishment from God" in 2 Thess. 1: 9. Let us not anathematize the compiler for this grave inaccuracy. I have heard the passage quoted as speaking of "everlasting banishment" full fifty times. Let one hear this said a hundred times and he must be a very dull hearer if he does not begin to believe it. Both the Romanist and the Protestant errors are instructive instances of the mischief of a beginning of evil; it is like the letting out of waters. This breach widens, and the very means of correction may be carried away in a general ruin. We suggest to the Tract Society a correction of its stereotype plate.

The World's Crisis
AND
SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Wednesday, April 2, 1862.

☞ Please remember to write all NAMES of subscribers, and POST OFFICES, in a VERY PLAIN MANNER.—G.

The War.

The American war looks as bloody as ever, with a dark future. We see no prospect of peace at present; yet we are aware that many think the struggle with carnal weapons will soon be concluded by a reconstruction of the Union, and a restoration of former prosperity; but we see no such signs,—we have no such expectations. But we do look for a government, ere long, the officers of which will be under the control of demons, who will dictate through the laws of the nation. We know this is the purpose of the Devil and his angels, because their programme has been made known to some of their familiars, and a copy of it has fallen into our hands. Their plan of operations is the most cunningly devised system ever presented to the natural man, and must be very popular, when the time arrives for action; and, consequently, must succeed, unless stopped by Divine interposition; but we think the prophetic Scriptures point out their success for a short time, just before the coming of Christ; yet, we think that the matter will be managed with so much skill and cunning, that the masses will not discover the wire-pullers,—will not see that the whole system is satanic and opposed to the coming and kingdom of Christ. It will be the last effort of wicked men, aided by demons, to govern our planet.

We are now, most evidently, in the hour of preparation; when all "the mighty men, . . . all the men of war," are getting ready for the last struggle in the support of the corrupt systems of this world. Their implements of war, prepared for the awful scene in the closing drama of earth's history, are nearly ready. Truly, it is now sublime to be living. We shall soon be at the point where we can "stand still and see the salvation of the Lord." Soon the faithful children of Zion's King will receive eternal deliverance from their enemies. Let us, then, stand firmly for the right; let us quit ourselves like men of God; for we see no room to doubt that the hour is at hand for the everlasting triumph of the saints. Praise the Lord for the glorious prospect.—G.

"Costly Array."

How little regard is paid in these days to the Bible instruction in relation to dress. Nearly all of the professed followers of Christ seem to be acting as though the Scriptures said, be sure and keep in the fashion of the world, even if you are deprived of the comforts of life. Most appear to bow to the diabolical sentiment, that one "may as well be out of the world as out of the fashion." It is rare that we see one who pays respect to that portion of the Bible which says to every woman who would honor the christian religion:—"I will . . . that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works."—1 Tim. 2: 8–10. Most seem to have forgotten that the word of the Lord says in relation to their adorning,—"Let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel, but let it be the . . . ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."—1 Pet. 3: 3–4. Who is willing to do that which is highly esteemed by God instead of that which pleases a wicked world? How can we hope to be acquitted in the day of judgment if we do not try to please God, instead of the world? If we go directly contrary to his instruction, will he say, "well done?" We are aware that the cross connected with this subject is not light: but if borne, the blessings that follow are of more value than the good opinion of the whole world without them. We hope all who wish to be at "the marriage of the Lamb," will remember the ornament that will be pleasing to the Bridegroom, and lay aside the fooleries of fashion that are forbidden by the word of the Lord. Come, let us be christians in earnest.

The following shows the progress of the American people in these "last days:"—G.

"The American people spend more money on the adornment of their persons than any nation in Christendom or out of it. Broadway swarms with clerks and shopmen, the price of whose gorgeous array, on occasions, would equal the sum of their yearly revenues. Young ladies whose fathers have not a dollar beyond their scanty salaries, sweep radiantly by, in silks, and furs, and diamonds, whose cost, with ten years' investment, would cover the house rent. That such practices exist here is one of the evils, among the many advantages, of our Democratic institutions. In older countries, where classes and positions are distinctly defined, no one has anything but ridicule to gain by constantly endeavoring to appear what he is not. The lions are all too well known and acknowledged, to admit of our extensive demand for their skins. If, in America, only those persons used silk and champagne who can really honestly afford it, French goods and panics would become proportionably rare. By a strange inconsistency, while we assert universal equality, we are all struggling to seem elevated above the common level. Idealizing the dignity of labor, we aspire to be regarded as anything else than laborers."—Courier and Enquirer.

The Keys of Heaven.

The theology of the day causes poets to write some strange things. The following from the Diapason, will justify the fore going remark:—

"There is a land immortal,
The beautiful of lands;
Beside the ancient portal
A sentry grimly stands.

He only can undo it,
And open wide the door;
And mortals who pass through it
Are mortals never more.

That glorious land is heaven,
And death the sentry grim,
The Lord therefore has given
The opening keys to him,

And ransomed spirits, sighing,
And sorrowing for sin,
Do pass the gates in dying,
And freely enter in."

According to these popular lines, Christ has given back the keys to death, which he purchased with his own blood, thus leaving his children for ever in the cold embrace of "the king of terrors!" Jesus instructed the angel to say to John, "I . . . have the keys of hell (hades—the grave) and of death." According to the Scriptures, death is man's enemy; but if it opens the door to let us into "heaven" then surely it is a friend. If men pass to heaven in dying, why have a resurrection afterward in order that they may enter the kingdom of heaven? It is strange that any one, who believes the Bible, should ever indorse such an unscriptural doctrine as the one contained in the poetical lines just quoted, but so long as ministers teach that dead men are alive, we must not be surprised at the wildest theories and fables that human imagination can invent.

We feel very thankful that Christ has taken the keys to the grave out of the hands of death, and that he is soon coming to unlock the charnel house, and let the captives go free. We welcome him as death's conqueror.—G.

Southern Feeling.

Some people think that the South will soon yield to the North, and that, consequently, our national troubles will quickly be wound up in peace under the present constitution. However much this may be desired, we apprehend that such a result will never be witnessed. We do not expect it will ever be more appropriate to speak of the United States than at present.

The following resolution, presented in the Confederate Congress, March 3d, '62, gives the state of feeling in the South:—G.

"Resolved, That this Congress do solemnly declare and publish to the world, that it is the unalterable determination of the people of the Confederate States (in humble reliance upon Almighty God) to suffer all the calamities of the most protracted war, but that they will never, on any terms, politically affiliate with a people who are guilty of an invasion of their soil and the butchery of their citizens.

The yeas and nays upon this resolution were called, and it was unanimously adopted."

Policy of the South.

The following, from the Norfolk (Va.) Day Book, of March 3d, will show the reader the policy of the southern Confederation. It will be seen that they have no thought of coming back into the Union again. It will explain the reason for some of their singular movements, in withdrawing their forces from certain points, where it was expected they would give battle.—G.

"Let us at once change our policy. Let us contract our lines of defence, so as to make them as solid and as compact as possible, and with the immense resources at our command, let us defend them to the last. Let us put every pound of cotton and tobacco in such a position that it can be easily destroyed by our forces when in danger of falling in the hands of the enemy, and let us raise no more of either of these articles than we want for our own consumption, while the war lasts. Let us raise nothing but what is wanted for home consumption. Let the balance of the productive labor of the South be turned into manufacturing such articles as are necessary for our use.

This war gives every evidence of being a long one, and if the will—the earnest determination—of the people to be free is seconded properly by their rulers, we cannot be conquered."

The Conference in this city, which closed Sunday evening, was a much larger gathering than was expected, and upon the whole was a meeting of considerable interest. The exparte character surmised by some was not realized; all parties were represented, and seemed to sit together with general good feeling. About thirty preachers were present,—said to be a larger number than assembled last year, with a good representation from the churches. Particulars next week.—M.

Danielsonville.—Since the labors of Bro. Grant in this place, which were reported in the Crisis a week or two since, he has returned to accomplish further labor there, of which the Transcript of Danielsonville says:—M.

"The revival with the Advent Church in this village still continues. Several have expressed a desire to be christians during the past week. Elder Grant, of Boston, preached here four evenings last week, and on Friday afternoon baptized three persons by immersion."

The Standard of Religious Enjoyment.

Nothing is more common than the fact that persons desirous of elevating the standard of true piety, are perpetually in danger of falling into the use of standards of their own creation; or, as St. Paul says, "Measuring themselves by themselves, and comparing themselves among themselves." And although having the assurance of inspiration that in this they are "not wise," yet the fact is witnessed in almost every christian community in the land. The result of this is, the one part is discouraged because they do not at once attain to the uniform heavenly-mindedness, or it may be the peculiar moods or ecstasies of the other; while again the more zealous are in danger of Satan's perversions, and come to be unconsciously pharisaic; while others again, critically inspecting the faults of the more zealous, are satisfied with little more than a name to live while they are dead.

But the manner of rectifying these faults is not to say that Christianity is good enough, simply considered in its externals or moral precepts; nor by saying that because moods are so variable and diverse, therefore it must suffice us that we comply simply with the letter of the truth. The spirit of the truth must be drunk in and entered into, or else the end of inspiration is not realized. The true way of correcting this perversity, is to seek the elevation of the standard God has given us, and in the manner prescribed. Nothing short of the wisdom from above is sufficient to educate and train a soul for the service and glory of God, and the world to come.

So long as people differ in their mental conformation, in their modes of thought, their knowledge of the gospel, and in the circumstances surrounding them, so long their religious enjoyments must vary. One may have a better instructed and better disciplined mind than another; may be naturally of a larger understanding, a broader apprehension, a more generous nature; or a more simple, uniform and loving nature; or it may be of a nature that can discern and drink in more of the divine in things that are beautiful and sublime than another. Indeed it is perhaps not going too far to say, that it is probable some people are more naturally religious (in the nominal sense at least) than others. But all this does not militate against the fact that there is a uniform standard by which every person should try themselves, and to whose maximum of excellencies they should desire to attain. The fact to which we make reference is but an item in that divine economy wherein is seen—Diversity in unity and unity in diversity.

Whatever may be the faults of those who would be good, but yet charge themselves (and perhaps are charged by others) with many short-comings, the fact remains indubitable that the very nature and intent of the religion of the Bible is to elevate, purify, bless, and make Christ-like the depraved. Every help in this direction is to be cherished, while every effort or influence calculated either to pervert or hinder this divine work is to be avoided, if not rebuked, whether from the high or low, men of great religious pretensions or of none. "Verily I say unto you, that the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you"—who say, I go, sir, and go not. Religious failures are common to all, that salvation may be of grace and not of merit independent of Christ. "Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are."

But with all the infirmities, short-comings, and errors of christians, it is required that every one should go forward in the divine life—"abound more and more"—"grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." In fine, "Love the Lord thy God with all thy soul, might, mind and strength." "Perfect love"—love to God and love to man, inspired by God and aspiring toward him—is that, and that only which will bide the divine test. Such loving natures are to be the inhabitants of "The world to come": while without are "Haters of mankind," "Proud," "Envious," "Evil surmisers," "Heady, high-minded," "Covetous," "Contentious," "Dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters, and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." "But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." "The fullness of Him that filleth all in all."

Such then being the measure prescribed by the Scriptures, who should say aught of any efforts made by any of the perishing children of men to attain thereto. Yea, more. Who can be guiltless and not strive in their innermost being to attain this divine standard of religious enjoyment? My dear christian friend, seek for it. God will help you. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

"Be as holy and as happy, and as useful here below,
As it is your Father's pleasure;—Jesus only, Jesus know.
Wake up, brother; wake up, sister; seek, oh seek this holy state;
None but holy ones can enter through the pure celestial gate."—M.

Edward Irving.—Concluded.

In about the year 1830, there appeared a new phenomenon among certain of the Presbyterians of Scotland, which, excepting the "tongues," seems not to vary essentially from what was witnessed among the early Methodists, and more recently in the notable revivals of Ireland, and to some extent in some of the West India Islands. This Mr. Irving looked upon as the work of the Holy Ghost, answering to the "latter rain." He accordingly gave thanks to God for what he saw, published his sentiments on the subject from his pulpit, and shortly had the pleasure of seeing the same thing in his congregation, at London. Whatever might have been the nature of this work, we shall leave the reader to judge for himself. Mr. Irving honestly believed it to be a divine work; considering the utterances of those who professed to be "filled with the divine afflatus" as having the gifts which were exhibited in the primitive Church in consequence of having received the Holy Ghost. From some account furnished by one Mr. Baxter, who at one time was deeply interested in this matter, but afterward abandoned his faith and wrote a "Narrative of Facts, characterising the supernatural manifestations in members of Mr. Irving's congregation, and other individuals in England and Scotland, and formerly in the writer himself," we take the following items.

Of himself he says:—"I was myself seized upon by the power; and in much struggling against it, was made to cry out, and myself to give forth a confession of my own sin in the matter for which we were rebuked; and afterwards to utter a prophecy that the messengers of the Lord should go forth, publishing to the ends of the earth, in the mighty power of God, the testimony of the near coming of the Lord Jesus." He shortly adds that he became "anxious and distressed lest he should mistake the mind of God in the matter, that I might not stumble in the way. In the midst of my prayer, the promise in Mal. 4: 5, coupled with Luke 1. 17, was brought before me, and it was written upon my mind by a power wholly new to me, 'The Lord is now pouring out upon the church the spirit and power of Elias, to prepare for the second coming of Jesus.' . . . From this period, for the space of five months, I had no utterances in public; though when engaged alone in private prayer, the power would come down upon me, and cause me to pray with strong crying and tears for the state of the church." Of another prayer, he says, it "was forced from me by the constraint of the power which acted upon me, and the utterance was so loud that I put my handkerchief to my mouth to stop the sound, that I might not alarm the house." At another time, being called upon to read and pray in a morning prayer meeting,—he adds, after the reading, "When I knelt down to pray, I was carried out to pray in the power for the presence and blessing of God in the midst of the church; in all this I had great joy and peace, without any of the strugglings which had attended my former utterances in power." And again—"I was made to speak; and for two hours or upwards, with very little interval, the power continued upon me, and I gave forth what we all regarded as prophecies concerning the Church and the nation. On the Church, the denouncements against the unfaithful pastors were most fearful. These prophecies were mingled with others most glorious and gracious, as they appeared to us—declaring the Spirit should be abundantly poured forth, and a faithful and mighty people should be gathered in this land—the presence of the Lord in the midst of of them, as of old time; . . . that the Lord was at hand,—the morning star arising among us, and the signs of his coming all around us."

The following, found in Mr. Baxter's "Narrative," purports to be from a clergyman at Oxford:—"On the last Sunday in last November, I received the Spirit, since which time he has entered into or exercised powerful influence upon as many as between fifty and sixty of my flock, as I should suppose, the power under the word preached having been so great, that I have had, on two occasions, nearly twenty people carried out of church, completely overthrown by it. Some, under (seemingly) the most wonderful convictions of sin, the tears streaming in perfect torrents from their eyes; others apparently so full of joy as to be completely like drunken men, so as to seem to open to me the words in Acts 2,—"These men are full of new wine"; others clapping their hands together, and crying out, "Glory, glory.' Four children, between the ages of eight and twelve, were brought into such a state as would melt the heart of any beholder—their arms stretched out—their eyes overflowing—a supernatural cry for sin and for mercy—and such wonderful liberty of prayer, as is surprising."

"Mr. Irving's church numbered upwards of nine hundred communicants; not so many as twelve attained to the utterance, which is very remarkable. Mr. Irving himself had never received the power, nor attained to any supernatural utterances, though no one more earnestly sought after it." It was for suffering these things in his church, and preaching the peculiar theological notions already indicated, that the Presbytery and General Assembly, to whose jurisdiction Mr. Irving was subject, saw fit to withdraw from him the hand of fellowship.

In the "Biographical Sketch" referred to, we find the following:—"It is not surprising that such a man as Irving should excite the sneers and the scoffs of the cold-hearted infidel, the hireling corruptionist, and the half-doubting lukewarm believer. These men, not believing or not feeling as he feels and as he believes, make brief work of him, and call him mad. But he is a man, like the Puritans, the Covenanters and Cameronians of other times, not to be put down by scoffs and sneers,—not to be shamed from the field by a contemptuous laugh." He himself said, "Condemnation is not proof, nor is ridicule argument."

Mr. Irving died in 1834, aged 42, saying, "In life and in death, I am the Lord's." A sermon was preached on the occasion at the Scotch Church, Crown Court, Covent Garden, London, on the 14th of December, 1834, by Rev. John Cumming, from Heb. 11: 4; in which he severely criticised Mr. Irving's character and course, but in the mean time said:—"I am anxious, as a watchman upon the walls of Zion, to improve all passing occurrences, and, among the rest at this time, the death of one who has made a deeper sensation among the religious public than any other minister since the days of Luther and of Knox, and who being dead speaks volumes. I mean the death of the Rev. Edward Irving. . . . He held, I know, the alone foundation, Christ Jesus, and adorned the doctrine he professed by every Christian virtue." "No man ever possessed a mind of higher range, and a greater power of fervent and impressive oratory."

Dr. Chalmers called him one of "the nobles of nature," and said, "His talents are so commanding that you could not but admire him, and he was so open and generous that it was impossible not to love him. . . . He was the Evangelical Christian grafted on the old Roman; with the lofty, stern virtues of the one, he possessed the humble graces of the other. The constitutional basis of his character was virtue alone; and notwithstanding all his errors and extravagances . . . . he believed him to be a man of deep piety."—M.

A Proposition.—Please notice.

I desire to put to press in a few days a tract, containing in a condensed form our reasons for looking for the immediate coming of the Lord. I am prompted to this, not only for the reason that we are frequently called upon for such a tract,—which we have not got,—but from a sense of duty. After nearly twenty years careful study of the subject of prophecy, I have not the shadow of a doubt that the Lord is at hand. Once more then we ask our brethren, Will you aid in giving to your neighbors and friends, in the most available form, the reasons for this faith? It is a tract that should be scattered by tens of thousands. Who desires to aid in such a work? Will our Advent brethren write us immediately what number they will take. All such shall have them at cost prices, which cannot now be definitely stated; this will depend in part upon the number printed. How many will you take? Direct your orders to P. B. Morgan, Crisis Office, Boston, Mass.

For the Crisis.

Scattering.

Christ says some gather, others scatter. I suppose it always will be so, more or less; but I think we ought to be on the lookout for the little flocks we have labored to gather. Many times we have worked hard days and nights to gather a little flock together to serve God, and been obliged to go to other fields to labor; and soon news comes that some wolf in sheep's clothing has heard of the work; they always are prowling about to take advantage of other men's labors, to sow tares among the wheat. Such have a certain work they will perform. First, be very good, and clever, and zealous, visit, get acquainted with the right kind of dispositions or soil for their seed to catch on, then privately introduce their all-important hobby. Soon it comes into meeting and wakes up a discussion. The scattering begins, and this goat works until the flock is torn and scattered, and he runs out to hunt up another place; and so on, living by killing others. These land sharks have been suffered to go where they pleased without restraint, and those that had been to work gathering for years, have got discouraged by seeing a month's work destroyed in a few days. Such ought to be exposed and rejected publicly, as they were in the apostles' times. We have suffered about enough by throwing our doors of charity wide open to every one that pretends to be good. I think our brethren ought to know what kind of a man is coming, or has come, before they co-operate with him. To reject floaters would be a mercy until they could show a reference of their good character, and aptness to teach and gather with Christ, not to a hobby god.

There is another class that do not seem to gather, recognized among us. Their character is good, but they do not accomplish any thing,—live wholly on flocks that others have gathered. These may be the Lord's poor preachers, that have not got the faculty to gather; if so, we must put up with it; but it does seem to me if God calls a man to the work, he can do something that will tell for God's cause in the way of gathering, instead of running a congregation down and scattering one half of the flock, while the other half get tired of his preaching, and dread to have him come again. There is something wrong. Either he has mistaken his calling, or may be trying to do something that he can't do. This is up-hill business. God don't help him. God always helps us in the work he sets us about.

Antidote. Bro., don't kick or pry doors open to preach for the sake of getting rid of working with your hands for a part of your bread. Instead of journeying around to get a living out of the little flocks somebody else has gathered, go to work until the Lord opens you a door, and if he does, and you pretend to be an evangelist, have a meeting every day. Work. Do something. You can if God has called you. The sheep will follow if you have got food for them. If you have worn your throat out by preaching long sermons, stop long enough to raise two acres of corn, and you will get better. HIRAM MUNGER.

Noah's Dove.—A Sonnet.

PEACE—like the gentle dove
Sent forth from Noah's ark,
When waters rolled above
The earth, and all was dark—
Has spread her wings for flight
Over this christian land,
But finds no place to light,
No spot where she can stand.
O God! what does it mean?
Has PEACE forever fled?
On Thee my soul would lean,
And hear what Jesus said:—
"The peace-makers" who follow me,
"The children of the Lord shall be."

Correspondence.

From C. Hill.

BRO. GRANT:—May I be permitted to acknowledge, through the Crisis, the reception of two packages of books and tracts from Brother Hastings? Precious pages! honored messengers of mighty truths. As my eyes scanned them one by one, noting words of sound doctrine, counsel, earnest exhortation, and heart-melting appeals, I felt a deep, grateful satisfaction in possessing them, knowing that these could speak where nothing else could. I felt also to thank God that he had put it into the hearts of his servants thus to labor for him. O! is there a sight in this sin-cursed world so sublime as that presented by one who, turning a deaf ear to all the whisperings of earthly ambition, ease and pleasure, by a faith divine sets his hope in the eternal future, and, moved by a love stronger than life, devotes wealth, health, mental and physical energy to the last degree, precious life, seeking to induce his fellow man to come up to the same sublime heights upon which his feet are planted; that his eyes may behold the same glorious prospect, and his heart be made to leap and rejoice with the same unspeakably glorious hope. O that we might each, in our measure, be enabled thus to live, labor, die!

When we see the errors that are working at the present time, carrying with their deep and strong currents so many into mists, fogs, and finally, "the blackness of darkness forever," how it deepens our love for a pure gospel—our desire to have its divine light shine with an increasing splendor upon our pathway ever! And in proportion to our estimate of it, will be our desire and efforts to bring others to a saving knowledge of the truth; for notwithstanding men grow increasingly bold and confident in infidelity, and the love of so many who have known the better way waxes cold, yet the commands, "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand," "Occupy till I come," etc., still stand good—a privilege we may well feel, as well as command. And when weary in our labors, sad and faint, then we can flee into the citadel of Hope, and refresh ourselves with those great and precious promises left there for our especial consolation. And you who have power with God, pray for us lone ones, that we may be made strong in him, and be enabled to improve even the one talent to his glory, and finally receive the plaudit, "Well done."

So. Sodus, Feb. 24, 1862.

From Bro. W. H. Mitchell.

BRO. GRANT:—The Crisis is truly a welcome visitor to our family from week to week, especially so, as it is so much comfort to my poor suffering mother, who, for the past twelve years, has been a great sufferer, and for the past five years has been entirely helpless, and within three weeks has been seized with erysipelas of the worst form, which terminated in mortification of her left foot, which is literally rotting off. All this she bears with the greatest patience. The Crisis is to her a very choice treasure, as it comes laden with its stirring epistles and comforting words to the afflicted ones; and often has been the time I have sat down to read its contents, and she has not been satisfied until I have read every article; and sometimes would wish some of them re-read.

My cares are many; as I have to look after her, and dress her mortified limb several times a day; and care also for my father, who is confined to the house, prostrate with disease; besides speaking from Sunday to Sunday to the "little flock" in our place; but I feel God's supporting arm beneath me, without which I must surely fall. O, how uncertain are all earthly things! how fleeting this transient life! When will the sons of men learn to think of this present life as they ought, and seek for that permanent, abiding life, which is obtained only through Jesus Christ our Lord? I am glad sin and suffering are almost at an end, and that God will soon have a clean universe, purified from all stains of sin.

Obituary Notices.

Died, at Woodstock, N. H., Jan. 11th, '62, Sister ELLEN M. JACKMAN, aged 26 years.

Her disease was diphtheria, canker rash and scarlet fever. She was teaching school; and, on a visit home, it being a vacation of a few days, after an illness of three days, fell asleep in Jesus. As she had spent her days in usefulness, and for the last ten years been a devoted christian, we may well judge what would be the closing hours of life. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace."

In perusing her journal, I found it to abound with the deepest sentiments of piety, showing that she lived in constant communion with the Savior. Being a firm believer in the personal coming of Christ, her writings abound with the strongest desires for his glory to be revealed. Her parents had depended on her kind attentions in their declining years, but their prospects are blighted and Ellen sleeps in her quiet resting-place, awaiting the breaking of the morning. Her voice that cheered the family circle and added so much to the choir, will next be heard among the redeemed millions, singing the new song, where death can never intrude, or aught disturb their harmony.

Her acts of kindness were extended to all around, and the entire community feel her loss. She made a point of giving one-tenth of her income for charitable purposes, and performed it with the greatest delight. She has left a bright evidence of her consecration to God, which is very comforting to her numerous relatives and friends.

Her funeral sermon was preached by the writer of this notice Jan. 26th, from 1 Cor 13 12. I. H. SHIPMAN

Died, in Hartford, Ct., March 18th, 1862, GUSTAVUS F. DAVIS, son of James P. and Emily Davis, aged 19 years.

This was an amiable young man whom we baptized in Danielsonville, Ct., about four years since. He was highly esteemed by those who enjoyed his acquaintance. His parents reside in Abington, Ct., and are among those who love the appearing of Jesus, and sorrow not as those who have no hope. Their son was sick but one night. He was brought home for burial. The funeral was in the Congregational meeting-house in Abington, and attended by the writer, assisted by Dr. T. Huntington of Brooklyn, and Bro. Smith, the Congregational minister in A.

Asleep in Jesus, the young man was laid in the silent grave, while mourning friends wept around. No storm, no battle cry, nor tempter's wiles, can disturb his calm repose. May the peace of God rest on the afflicted family till Jesus comes to gather them to their happy Eden home.—G.

Died, in Island Falls, Aroostook, Me., Nov 9th, 1861, JOHN M. WEBBER, son of Sr. Mary Webber of Yarmouth, Me.

Suddenly has this dear son finished his career on earth, and now sleeps in the "dark, cold grave," far away from the resting place of his father and other beloved ones. Although an afflicted mother and other surviving friends cannot now visit the spot where he rests in death, yet angels will watch the soft repose till the voice of the Son of God shall awake the sleepers and bid them arise. May the consolations of the gospel hope ever sustain our often bereaved sister. R. R. YORK.

Yarmouth, Me., March, 1862.

Died, in Hydeville, Vt., Jan. 17th, 1862, Mrs. SALLY JOHNSON, aged seventy years and nine months.

Our Sister was converted in the winter of '54, and was baptized by Eld. S. B. Munn; since then she has been a faithful one in the cause of Christ. She has left a husband and nine children to mourn her loss. Her funeral sermon was preached by Eld. Couch. A. PHILLIPS.

ARRIVAL OF THE CHINA.

Sandy Hook, March 26. The proposed amendment of the Liberals in the French Legislature to the paragraphs relative to American affairs in Prince Napoleon's address was withdrawn.

During the debate on the vote for mail subsidies, Mr Barton showed the losses of the system, and advocated a reduction of subsidies as the contracts fall in. He opposed any new contract for America, favored open competition and the discontinuance of subsidies. Mr. Peel admitted they were a great burden, but were not thrown away, and said as the contracts fell in, every care would be taken to reduce them. The vote of £995,000 was agreed to.

The London Morning Herald thinks it is a pity the Federals do not make use of the first auspicious occasion presented by the recent successes for concluding peace, and says the Federals have it now in their power to retire from the desperate strife with something like honor.

The Daily News argues that by simply refusing any sort of participation in the slavery question, the Federal Government will practically doom slavery to extinction.

The French Corps Legislatif continued to debate the address. The paragraph relating to Mexico was adopted after some opposition. The amendment of five liberal members to the paragraph relating to America had been withdrawn, on the ground that part of it was rendered unnecessary by the decisive declaration of the Government in favor of neutrality.

Additional troops were being sent to Mexico, and a new brigade was to leave Toulon on the following week. The camps at Chalons and Lyons were to be opened earlier than usual.

ITALY.

Great precautions were being taken by the Austrian Government on the Venetian frontiers. Advanced posts had been doubled and their garrisons augmented. Troops also had been posted along the line of the Po. The Emperor had gone to Vienna.

GREECE.

All the cannon of the insurgents had fallen into the hands of the royal troops. The small garrison at Syra had been captured and order restored at that place. The insurgents at Nauplia had asked an amnesty, and an armistice of twenty-four hours was granted.

TURKEY.

Constantinople advices say a corps of observation, consisting of 20,000 Turkish troops had been dispatched to the Grecian frontier.

ROME, March 18. The Pope has been ill for the last week, and his strength is much prostrated. He has suspended audiences.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

St Louis, March 30. The army correspondent of the Republican, writing under date of Cairo, March 29th, says the firing on Friday at Island No 10 was quite heavy, the rebels opening from a new battery, mounting, it is supposed, 128 pounders. The enemy could be seen cutting away trees and rapidly pushing forward other means of defence. They seem to have no idea of evacuating at present, and are daily getting more cannon in position. Word reached the fleet last night that four rebel gunboats, partly clad with railroad iron, appeared below Point Pleasant, but as Gen Pope's batteries extend in almost a continuous line for fifteen miles, it is not supposed they can force a passage.

There is nothing important from Tennessee to-day. An arrival from Memphis reports that there is a general despondency there, and that but little confidence is felt even in the large force concentrating at Corinth, Miss.

Cincinnati, March 30. A special dispatch to the Commercial from Indianapolis says that Gen. Buel has assumed command of our forces, and at the latest advices was within fifteen miles of Beauregard at Corinth, Miss.

Morgan's rebel cavalry captured another train on the Louisville and Nashville railroad, on Friday. Col Curran Pope of Kentucky was taken prisoner, with a few other Federal officers. The locomotive was run into a ditch and the cars destroyed.

Parson Brownlow is expected this week. The hospitalities of the State have been extended to him.

Fortress Monroe, March 29. All is quiet here. There have been no new demonstrations on the part of the Merrimac as yet.

The steamer Suwannee has arrived from Newbern. All was quiet there. Gen Burnside had gone to Beaufort and taken quiet possession of the place. There was no resistance whatever and no burning of property. Fort Macon was still occupied by the rebels, numbering from 300 to 500, but they were entirely cut off and must surrender soon.

The steamer New York had sailed.

On Friday evening the rebels threw a ball from one of the rifled guns at Sewall's Point, which came within about three hundred yards of the shipping.

During the blow last night the steamer Flushing had a hole knocked in her side, and now lies on the bar careened over, and in a somewhat dangerous position if the storm should continue.

The Lincoln gun has been mounted, and this morning was tried in order to test the carriage. Only ten shots were fired. The second shot was a splendid ricochet shot. The immense ball, weighing 437 pounds, after making three plunges and renewed flights, finally sunk away off near Sewall's Point. If the Merrimac can stand one of these Lincoln pills, she is proof against all appliances of modern gunnery.

There were some signs of activity toward Norfolk this morning. A steamtug came down to Sewall's Point, and the smoke from a large vessel could be seen off above Craney Island. A propeller, apparently a gunboat, also came down James river, within about three miles of Newport News, and after reconnoitering, apparently, returned up the river. The present high wind and low water, however, forbids all expectation of the appearance of the Merrimac until the storm is over.

Rolla, Mo., March 29. Reliable persons just from the army in the southwest, say the rebels, numbering some 35,000, under Generals Van Dorn and Price, have retreated entirely across the Boston mountains, and are now at Van Buren and Fort Smith, receiving supplies from Memphis and Little Rock via the Arkansas river, which is high.

The Texas troops are much disheartened by the death of Ben McCulloch, and the Arkansans feel the loss of McIntosh very severely. The rebels are badly off for clothing and shoes. Pike's Indians have mostly returned to the Indian Nation. They were not formidable in battle, they being panic stricken at the effect of our artillery.

Price received his Major General's commission in the Confederate service on the 16th inst.

One regiment of Texas troops reached Van Buren on the 15th inst., to reinforce Van Dorn, and more were expected from Louisiana. The whole rebel reinforcement in the next six weeks will not exceed 6000 men.

Lieut. Col. Meron of the 9th Iowa Regiment, who was taken prisoner, was in the hands of the rebels two weeks. The rebels were badly frightened and retreated very rapidly, and for the first three days of their flight had nothing to eat. Their cannon and baggage train might have been easily captured.

The army of Gen. Curtis fell back to Keitsville, Arkansas, to secure forage, being entirely out. Our forces are now encamped at the head of Cross Timber Hollow, where forage and water are plenty. Our pickets extend into Arkansas, and the pickets of the rebels come north to the top of the Boston Mountains. Fayetteville is unoccupied by our forces. Very little Union feeling has been developed in Arkansas.

New York, March 29. The Herald's Washington dispatch says an advance was made by the centre of our army of the Potomac on Thursday upon the rebels, 10,000 strong, on the road between Warrenton Junction, driving them several miles toward Gordonsville. The bridges and tracks on the railroad were all destroyed and torn up, but our troops were pursuing the enemy as rapidly as circumstances would permit.

A large force of the enemy was driven in from the Warrenton Railroad Junction by Gen. Sumner to-day. There has been a fall of snow to-day.

New York, March 30. The Empire City brings intelligence that Pensacola has been evacuated, including Forts Barancas and McRea, and the rebels announce the entire abandonment of Florida.

ITEMS.

Baltimore, March 31. A steam boiler explosion occurred this afternoon at the Baltimore House of Refuge. A boiler attached to the bake-house was blown two hundred feet in the air. Taking an easterly direction, it exploded again, falling directly on the roof of the school building, carrying with its slate roof, rafters, beams and plaster and plunging into the school-room where there were nearly seventy boys. Although the entire floor was covered with ruins only two children were killed and seven wounded.

Philadelphia, March 29. Jackson's pyrotechnic factory, on Tenth and Reed streets, exploded early this morning. Four or five persons were killed, including a son of Jackson. The head of one of the victims was blown nearly two squares. The fragments of human bodies scattered about the ruins make a shocking sight. Ten or twelve others, girls and boys, were seriously injured.

The Senate committee agreed yesterday to reduce the tax upon newspaper advertisements proposed by the bill before Congress from five to three per cent., and decided to establish an ad valorem tax of three per cent. upon paper, instead of the proposed tax of three mills per pound.

VERMONT ITEMS. A correspondent at East Bethel, under date of 27th, writes "The snow is wasting rapidly in this vicinity, having settled nearly two feet during the past week. It will yet average three feet deep in this valley, and and on the high lands more.

Such of our farmers as possess the requisite energy and perseverance, have commenced sugaring, on a very limited scale, however, the great depth of snow preventing any extensive operations in that line.

In Windsor and Washington counties, from ten to eleven feet of snow have fallen the past winter, by actual measurement."

Fugitive slaves of rebel masters are flocking to Washington from Eastern Virginia in large numbers. They are now secure from the summary arrest and imprisonment to which they were formerly subjected on arriving there.

The Russians have adopted steel barrels for their army rifles. No less than 250,000 of them are being made by Krupp, at Essen, Prussia. They are to be made solid, then bored out.

It is said that the commission appointed by the War Department to adjust the claims of contractors have so reduced their bills as to save the Treasury some millions of dollars.

Washington, 29. It is reported that Bayard Taylor will be appointed Secretary of the Legation to Russia.

Col. Charles Devens, Jr., of the Massachusetts Fifteenth Regiment, has been appointed Brigadier General.

Married.

Particular Notice.

As I have removed my residence from Providence, R. I., I would request that all letters, orders or remittances designed for me, should be directed thus:—H. L. HASTINGS, "Crisis Box," Boston, Mass.

A Call for Funds.

The publishing committee of the CHRISTIAN PUBLICATION SOCIETY, deeply sensible of the fact that the time is short, and that our work must be done soon, or not at all, venture this appeal to those interested in disseminating divine truth through the press.

We purpose to commence at once the publication of Tracts upon important Scriptural topics, of vital interest to the church of God in these times of peril and dismay. We wish to present to the household of faith "meat in due season." We wish to scatter light among the benighted of the earth, and so sound out the word of the Lord.

To do this on a scale answering at all to immediate necessities, we propose to raise at once FIVE HUNDRED DOLLARS, ($500) by special contributions, for this object. This money is designed to obtain and publish tracts, new and old, adapted to the times in which we live. We who engage in the work as publishing committee have no salaries or pay whatever for our services, and we mean that every dollar contributed shall tell in the great work. Each tract will be submitted to the careful examination and judgment of our Editorial Committee, H. L. Hastings, H. F. Carpenter and D. T. Taylor, in whose judgment, ability and prudence the churches can safely confide. Only such tracts as they shall approve will be published by the Society. We expect to furnish tracts cheaper than ANY TRACT SOCIETY in the COUNTRY, and our surplus, beyond the actual expenses of issuing them, will be devoted to the purpose of furnishing tracts for gratuitous circulation, or wherever they may be needed.

Brethren, will you help us in this work? Will you give us money? Or will you send us $100, $50, $20, or $10, to be repaid in TRACTS, at cheap rates, when you shall choose to order them? We wish this work to move on at once. We therefore call for $500, and pledge ourselves to see it used in a manner that shall tend to accomplish the desired object. We do not wish to divert the funds of the World's Crisis for this work, nor has its treasury sufficient money that can be spared for this purpose. We call upon all interested in publishing and scattering cheap Tracts, to contribute for this object. Will not preachers take hold of it? Will not churches make collections and remit them?

No fear need be entertained that the work will be delayed. As soon as a portion of it is raised, and tracts are prepared, it can begin, and each dollar added will facilitate the object and extend the operations of the society. Come, then, to the work. Send us donations, pledges, or loans, to be repaid in publications, in amounts from a hundred dollars to a widow's mite; and with them let your prayers ascend, that God's blessing may attend our efforts and crown them with success. Monies should be sent to Miles Grant, Editor of the World's Crisis, Boston, Mass.

For the Crisis.

Lines.

Jesus, to thee my bleeding heart
Turns in its agony and woe;
O! wilt thou now thy peace impart,
Thou, who didst tears and anguish know.
For midst heaven's light and love untold,
Thy tenderness unchanged hath kept,
Since by the grave in days of old
Thy followers marked how "Jesus wept."

O Weeper! by the tomb of love,
Look on me now with pitying eye;
Let thy compassions for me move,
And bring me comfort from on high.

Great Advocate! before the throne
On me thy sympathy bestow;
Who thou hast earthly sorrow known,
So make me heavenly joy to know;

And grant when sorrows all are o'er,
And pains and deaths and partings cease,
That I with loved ones gone before
May meet and rest in endless peace.

The Day of the Lord.

A LECTURE ON 2 PETER 3: 3–14.

BY JOSEPH A. SEISS, D. D.

"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation," etc.—2 PET. 3: 3–14.

V. Still another point I notice in the text is the terrific conflagration which is to take place when Christ comes. It is remarkable that great fires are everywhere spoken of in connection with the day of Christ's revelation. Paul says, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance upon them that know not God and that obey not the gospel." (2 Thess. 1: 7, 8.) Even in the Old Testament it was prophesied, "Behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up." (Mal. 4: 1.) Yea, saith the Lord, "I will show wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke." (Joel 2: 30.) And so we also read, in the text, of fire, and very great heat, and melting, and burning in the air and in the elements, in the earth and in the things on the earth. More, however, has been made of these fires than, I think, is warranted by Scripture. The most explicit passage on the subject in all the Bible is this from Peter, which is rather strongly translated, and so worded in our version as to lead off the reader's imagination beyond what I believe to be the apostle's meaning.

He speaks of "the heavens being on fire," and as to "pass away" and "be dissolved." People read this, and begin to think of the regions of the sun, moon, and stars, and so mount up among the orbs and systems of creation, until the words before them become a picture of the entire wreck of the whole material universe. But I am satisfied that there was nothing of the sort in the mind of Peter, or of the Holy Ghost by which he wrote. The word rendered "heavens" means simply the atmosphere which surrounds the earth, and does not carry us any further than the regions of the clouds and winds,—"the air," (Matt. 8: 20; Rev. 19: 17,) "the sky," (Matt. 14: 8,) the realm of the clouds, (Matt. 24: 30; James 5: 18.) The word rendered "being on fire" simply means inflamed, made fiery, and may be considered as having its import in this place exhausted by a condition of the atmosphere in which it is heated, filled with fiery volcanic emissions, and lit up with lightnings. The word rendered "shall pass away" does not mean, to cease to exist.* It means to pass, as from one place or state to another, as where we read, "that no man might pass by that way," (Matt. 8: 28,) "Jesus of Nazareth passeth by," (Luke 18: 37.) As applied to the atmosphere, it expresses a change implying motion, and that very violent and boisterous, as the accompanying word, rendered "with a great noise," also indicates.† The additional word rendered "dissolved" is of the same general import. It means to loosen, unbind; as where the Savior says of the colt, "Loose him;" and of the apostles, "Whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." It is used in Acts 27: 41 with reference to the breaking away of the hinder part of the ship in which Paul was wrecked. It refers here to the rupture of those influences which now hold the various parts of the physical world in quiet,—to a freeing of the elements to rush and dash about in destructive fury, just as the Psalmist describes the scene:—"Our God shall come; a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him." (Ps. 1: 3.) This is the whole extent of the terms concerning the fate of "the heavens."

And even in what is said of "the earth" the word does not necessarily mean the entire globe on which we dwell. We often speak of the earth without meaning the whole planet. When any violent upheaval or agitation of the surface of the earth occurs in a particular district or country, we say, "the earth shook, and call it an earthquake,—when really it was only the crust of the earth, and that in one limited locality. In the night-time we say, the earth is wrapped in darkness, when it is less than one half of the earth that is so enshrouded. The same word is also frequently translated land, country; as, "the land of Gennesaret," (Mark 6: 53.) "His fame went abroad in all that country," (Matt. 9: 31,)—where the original is, all that earth. And when we here read of the burning of the earth, we are by no means warranted in jumping at the conclusion that it means the reduction of the entire globe to chaos, ashes, or nothingness. The earth may be vastly and terrifically subjected to the action of fire and yet many sections of it experience no inconvenience whatever. The phrase "burnt up" is also rather expressive for the original, which means simply to be burned. The idea of total consumption is often attached to it, but not necessarily. A very great degree of burning is doubtless expressed by it in this place, but not so much as alone to convey the idea, so often presented, that the whole organized structure of the earth is to be reduced to liquid fire, converted into cinders, or swept out of existence. Terrific as these judgment fires will doubtless be, and fearful as will be the desolations they shall spread among the enemies of righteousness and upon the armies of antichrist, and great as shall be the changes they are to work in earth, air, and sea, I find nothing whatever in this or any other portion of Scripture to induce the belief that they will extend further than the particular sections and localities where Christ shall first be manifested.

By "the elements," of which the apostle speaks, we are to understand the substances or component parts of the physical world. They do not include every thing embraced in the constitution of the earth, except as every constituent element of the earth is found in any given portion of it, just as we find the element of the ocean in any drop from the ocean. The reference, plainly, is only to such fusible and inflammable substances as may be subject to the action of the judgment-fires, without determining any thing as to the extent of the conflagration. The word rendered "shall melt" is very much the same as that just before translated "dissolved," and is nearly everywhere else in the Scriptures translated loosed. The additional word rendered "with fervent heat" is the participle of a verb signifying to be heated, set on fire, inflamed. The plain grammatical meaning of the phrase is, that certain elementary substances of the earth shall become loosed and disintegrated by being heated and set on fire, as in the case of great and violent volcanic eruptions, when vast floods of fire and lava are ejected from the earth, filling whole countries with darkness and destruction.

And in such a condition of things we can easily conceive what is meant by the other phrase, "the works that are in the earth shall be burned." Our version reads, "all the works," but this word all, upon which some lay so much stress in this connection, is not in the original. It is an addition of the translator. There is no reason to believe that all the works that are in the earth shall be burned. Of course, as far as the earth itself is burned, and as far as the heated storms and floods of loosed and melted elements shall extend, so far all the works of man shall be consumed and destroyed. But, as there is nothing to show that the burning and fusing of the earth is to be universal, so there is no reason to believe that this destruction of the works that are in it is to be universal: the one is commensurate with the other, and in neither case do the words imply universality. . . .

Nor are these judgment-fires then first to be created. They already exist, stored away in the mysterious constitution of nature. Our version speaks of "the heavens and the earth which are now," as "kept in store, reserved unto fire." But many translate the apostle's words to mean that it is the fire that is stored.* According to this rendering, this passage furnishes a remarkable illustration of how the Scriptures have anticipated the discoveries and inductions of modern science. All the elements around us are full of latent fire. The earth we tread on is a globe of imprisoned fire. For every fifty feet you penetrate into its interior you have the temperature a degree warmer than at the surface. If you were to bore on inward towards its centre, you would not reach the depth of one hundred miles before coming to an intensity of heat which would fuse the hardest substances of which the earth is composed.* Scientific men, accordingly, assure us that under a thin crust, proportioned to the whole mass about as the tire to the wheel of a wagon, there seethes a whole world of fires, struggling for vent, and here and there showing themselves from volcanic craters. And it is simply the letting loose of these, with the tempests, and earthquakes, and convulsions in earth and air which must needs attend such an event, that the apostle here sets before us. Whilst the descending Savior shall be revealed in clouds, thunder, and terrific lightnings from above, the fiery flood from beneath shall break open its prison-doors, and a war of loosed elements ensue, at which the whole earth and heavens shall shake, the sun be darkened, and the moon become as blood, whilst earth's rightful King shall ride upon it all, sweeping out before his dread chariot-wheels the culminated strength of hell's monstrous usurpations!

* I cannot but feel astonished that any serious and intelligent man should have his mind fettered with the common—I might call it the vulgar—notion of a proper destruction of the earth. Some seem to extend the notion to the solar system, applied to the idea of an extinction of it and reducing to nothing; and this notion has been general, and thus it has gained so strong a hold upon the feelings of many pious persons that they have made it an article of faith. But I confess myself unable to find any evidence for it in nature, reason, or Scripture.—John Pye Smith, D. D., F. R. S.: Geology and Revelation, p. 101.

* Dr. E. B. Elliott, author of the admirable work called Horæ Apocalypticæ, (vol. iv. p. 192, 4th edition,) makes the following note on this point:—

"The heavens and the earth which now are (i. e. contradistinctively to those that were overwhelmed by the flood) are by the same word stored with fire, (so I understand the phrase,) 'being kept unto the day of judgment,' etc. It is only by this rendering of the tethes-aurismenoi puri that the apostle's evidently intended antithesis can be expressed, between the old world stored with water, by which, as the instrumentality, it at its appointed time perished; and the present world stored with fire, by which it, in its time, is also to perish. Besides that, in the received sense, tethes-aurismenoi is a word not merely superfluous, but inappropriate; 'stored up' being a phrase used of things laid aside from present use, which certainly our present earth and atmosphere are not. Compare, as to the water, Ps. 33: 7, (Sept.,) tithens en thesaurois abussous, and, as to the fire, Job 20: 26, rendered by the Chaldee, 'Beneath the earth is Gehenna.' Also Isa. 30: 33: 'Tophet is ordained of old: for the king it is prepared: he hath made it deep and large: the pile thereof is fire, and much wood: the breath of the Lord, as a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it.'"

* "Wherever, in Europe and America, the temperature of the air, the waters, and the rocks in deep excavations has been ascertained, it has been found higher than the mean temperature of the climate at the surface, and the experiment has been made in hundreds of places. It is found, too, that the heat increases rapidly as we descend below that point in the earth's crust to which the sun's heat extends. The mean rate of increase has been stated by the British Association to be one degree of Fahrenheit for every forty-five feet. At this rate, ALL KNOWN ROCKS WOULD MELT AT THE DEPTH OF ABOUT SIXTY MILES. Shall we hence conclude that all the matter of the globe below this thickness is actually in a melted state? Most geologists have not seen how such a conclusion is to be avoided."—Prof. Hitchcock's Lecture on the Future Condition and Destiny of the Earth.

"Watchman, what of the Night?"

(To Sr. Mary Mayhew.)

Watchman, what of the night?
Dost see a token of morning bright?
'Tis long since I kissed my darling babe,
And on earth's bosom with tears I laid
Her to sleep; and she does not awake.
I've waited long for the day to break,
The Balm of Gilead eased the smart,
But a void remains in a mother's heart.

* * * * * * *

The strong man wept when the baby died,
Then he grew weary, and by her side
I left him to rest, and watched for the light,—
I've strained my eyes for its beauty bright,—
I smoothed his hair on his forehead high,
And marveled that he in his youth must die.
The frosts have withered my brightest flower,
'Twill bloom no more in an earthly bower;
But I'm sure when morning shall tint the skies,
Like an angel fair will my husband rise,
When the rightful Heir shall be crowned a king,
When the victor's song shall begin to ring,
When earth is renewed like a sparkling gem,
With the prophets of old I shall greet him again.
Now Charlie, too, is asleep, how drear
Has the night become! is the morning near?
I list for the sound of the little feet,
For the murmured "Mother" so soft and sweet,
But the cold winds sigh, and the night is still,
The sleep of the loved one's unbroken still.

* * * * * * *

The SINLESS has suffered the lost to save,
He holds the keys of death and the grave;
He bought the field with its precious pearl,
Which could not be purchased with silver or gold,
But his blood a ransom was found complete,
And earth with its heirs it shall renovate.
The night of tears has been dark and long,
Echo still answers, oh God! how long?
'Tis a night of perfidy, crime and pain,
Hearts are crushed 'neath the bondman's chains,
I'm waiting still for the loved to wake,—
Watchman, oh! when will the morning break?

For the Crisis.

The Horrors of War.

In the Russian campaign of 1812, there perished one million soldiers in six months. The wars of Napoleon sacrificed six millions, and all the wars consequent upon the French Revolution, some nine or ten millions. The Spaniards destroyed twelve millions of Americans in forty-two years. The wars in the time of Sesostris sacrificed fifteen million lives; those of Semiramis, Cyrus, and Alexander's successors, twenty millions. In the Grecian wars fifteen millions perished; in Jewish wars, twenty-five millions; in the wars of the twelve Cæsars, thirty millions; in those of the Romans before Julius Cæsar, sixty millions; in those of the Roman Empire, and of the Saracens and the Turks, sixty millions each; in those of the Reformation, thirty millions; in those of the Middle Ages and the nine Crusades, in two hundred years, forty millions each; in those of the Tartars, eighty millions; and in those of Africa, one hundred millions. "The distinguished Edmund Burke estimates the total loss of life in war, in all past ages, at thirty-five thousand millions, which is more than three and a half times the present population of the globe, and about twelve hundred times more than the present population of the United States. If only one person on the earth died each second, it would take twelve hundred years for this vast multitude to die!"

How cruel and wicked then is war. How surprising to think for a moment what fearful havoc of human life it has wrought! But who, I ask, is to be responsible for those days of blood?

Blackstone, Mass. C. G. CARTER.

☞ The Scriptural penny was worth in the time of Christ about one hundred and fifty of our cents. A penny a day therefore for working in the vineyard was tolerable wages.

Report

Of the Eastern N. Y. and Western Mass. and Conn. Second Advent Conference, held at Bristol, Ct., Feb. 6th to 9th, 1862.

Thursday evening, Bro. J. K. Bellows preached from Matt. 5: 48. Showed what christian perfection is, and the way to attain unto it. Friday, at 9 A. M., met for business. Opened with prayer by Bro. Brazee. The minutes of last conference were read and accepted. It was then voted that the manner of receiving preachers and delegates should be by a vote of yea and nay. Bro. Brazee and Babcock were appointed a committee to examine credentials. Voted, that Bro. S. S. Brewer be admitted to this conference by his signing the Constitution. Bro. Luther Tuttle was admitted as a delegate from the church at Bristol, Ct.; also Bro. James T. Cornell from the church at Plymouth Hollow, Ct.; and Bro. Stephen B. Munn from the church at Pawling, N. Y. The christian character of each of the preachers present was examined and passed. Adjourned till one o'clock, P. M.

Met according to adjournment. Opened with prayer by Bro. Bellows. Bro. Munn then tendered his resignation as President of the conference upon the following reasons: First, I think there are others in the conference more competent to fill the office of President than myself. Second, I do not feel at liberty to sit in the President's chair while there are older and more competent men in the conference. Voted to accept the resignation of Bro. Munn. Voted to proceed to ballot for President. As the result, Bro S. S. Brewer was declared elected and took the chair. Brn. S. S. Brewer, S. B. Munn and Geo. L. Teeple were appointed as a committee to prepare an address to the churches. The preachers then made their report concerning their labors and the state of the cause.

Bro. Brazee stated that his labors had been mostly near home. He thought the cause of God, although low in some places, yet as a whole was advancing. Bro. Teeple stated that his labors had been in N. Y., Mass. and Conn.; had had good times, and felt that the good were growing better and the bad worse. Bro. Munn stated that his labors had been near home, and felt that they had not been in vain. Bro. Canfield stated that he had done what he could since the last conference, although but little. The cause in some places he thought was low, in other places on the gain. Bro. St. John said he thought he was the only Advent preacher in the country where he resides; that there was a large field of labor. He could keep several in the field if they could be supported. He should do what he could, although he felt incapable to perform the work. Had scattered tracts, etc. Bro. Bellows stated that in most places where he had labored there was an interest to hear—thought the cause was advancing—was determined to do all he could. Bro. Babcock said he felt like doing all he could in preaching the gospel, should leave the result to be made known at the judgment. Bro. Gardner was young in the work, and felt like doing what the Lord would have him. Bro. Brewer said he had had some good hard times in the past. He thanked God that his soul had been refreshed on account of the harmony manifested in the conference.

In the evening Bro. Teeple preached from Heb. 9: 28. He spoke of the coming of the Lord, our relation to it, and the salvation at the end.

Met Saturday morning, at 9 o'clock, A. M. Opened with prayer by Bro. Babcock. Voted, that no delegate shall be received hereafter into this conference entitling him to vote without bringing a certificate from the church. Voted, that a preacher sent by a church as a delegate, being a member of that church, shall be entitled to act for himself and the church he represents. The delegates then made their report. Bro. Tuttle, from Bristol church, said that many had moved away, and therefore the church was dwindling down. Had had preaching once in two weeks—thought they should have to take up with less in the future. Should leave it with others to decide about their spirituality. Bro. Cornell, from Plymouth Hollow, said that for many years past there had been no head, but all confusion; but since they had adopted a covenant had stood better. Had prayer meetings once a week and Sundays when there was no preaching. The church was determined to live while there were many obstacles in the way. Bro. Munn, from Pawling, N. Y., said the church there was in a good condition. On account of many wicked ones in the church heretofore, there had been a necessity for organizing into a church, and obey the gospel, having no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. The church now were laboring and praying for a deeper work of grace. They meet every Saturday evening for love feast, and it had worked for their good. They felt like growing in favor with God.

Adjourned to meet at North Adams, Mass., May 8th, 1862, at seven o'clock, P. M. Preaching at 2 P. M. by Bro. Munn, from 1 Pet. 4: 13. He showed how the church participated in the sufferings of Christ, and also in the glory to be revealed. In the evening Bro. Brazee preached from Dan. 7: 18. He showed by what means the saints became prepared for the kingdom of God. Sunday morning Bro. Babcock preached from James 4: 10. He spoke of our humbling ourselves, and love as the result. In the afternoon Bro. Brewer preached from Rev. 16: 15; also in the evening, from Matt. 6: 10. He showed us that we are down in the exhausted state of prophecy, and that we might very soon expect the coming of the Lord.

Thus closed the conference. Peace and harmony reigned among its members all the way through. I trust the result will be good, and God be glorified.

Facts and Fables.

The fables of these latter days
Are not a whit behind
The far-famed legions of the past,
That led our fathers blind.

The soul's immortal, says the creed
Of churches, low and high;
Thus man denies God's word, that says,
"The soul that sins shall die."

"Death is the gate to endless life,"
Our modern teachers say,
Yet God declares there's no reward
Until the judgment day.

This serpent's egg is hatched at last
By orthodox old hen;
The cockatrice is growing fast,
As all the world may ken.

Should this pet chicken prosper still
From one year to another,
'T will not be long before he may
Eat up his own old mother!

Familiar spirits walk the earth
In the broad light of day,
And challenge all, both great and small,
These arrant ghosts to lay.

Thus, if the blind will lead the blind,
Both in the ditch must fall;
Teacher and taught will come to naught,
Unless on God they call.

His word alone can save from death,
And set the prisoner free,
Can give him an immortal crown
Of life and victory.

"Beyond the realms of time and space!"
Above the spangled sky!
Hold on, my friend, and clip your wings,
Nor dare to soar so high.

On earth, baptized, restored, made new,
The saints will dwell and reign,
With Christ their King, on Zion's hill,
With Him who once was slain.

To whom it may Concern.

Question 1st. If man is immortal, why is it said in 1 Tim, 6: 15, 16, that God "only hath immortality?"

2. May we by mere inference set aside such a positive declaration that God "only hath immortality?"

3. Is it not inferred, rather than anywhere clearly stated, that man was created in the image of God in respect to immortality?

4. Of what other attribute beside immortality may it be said we are made in God's image?

5. Can it be properly said that we are made in the image of God in respect to attributes, unless we are so in respect to all of them?

6. If an artist in taking our likeness should get no proper proportion of our features than man holds of the attributes of God, could it be called our likeness?

7. Is it not first necessary to prove that man is immortal, before it can be claimed for him that he was thus made in the image of God?

8. If man was created immortal, what need of the angel with the flaming sword to prevent man's eating of the tree of life and living forever? Can immortality die?

Notes of Labor.

I preached to a goodly number at East Boston, Jan. 19th. It was a stormy day, and there was some misunderstanding about the meeting, some want of coherent power in the church; some little trouble with a faction, who have gone off on a tangent; claiming a share of time to hold their seasons of "power" and the "gifts;" but, upon the whole, we had a profitable meeting, and also on Feb. 17th. It is my opinion that the friends who remain firm at East Boston (and there remains a handful of the old stock of Adventists) will get by their troubles as to the house and prosper, because they are sincere and earnest.

Jan. 26th, I preached to the church in Salem (Union St.), under the pastoral care of Bro. R. Wendell. It was a very solemn and interesting meeting. Prosperity attends the church in Salem, and there is reason for this. They unite upon the great object, and strive for its accomplishment. They unite with the preacher who has charge; go for order in the house of God, and for all the "ways and means" that should be employed by a church for prosperity. I do not see that the pastor's views upon the question of "Life only in Christ," have produced any derangement in the condition of the church, or hindered the onward movement to the objects of a church. Rather, his labors must be successful. Every brother does not wish to be master there.

Feb. 2d, I preached at Fairhaven, Mass. There are a few of the old class of Adventists here. They are, as a general thing, "strong in faith, giving glory to God." Their number has been reduced by removals and death, and with long waiting; but those who remain stand firm. They look for the coming of Christ, and rejoice in the prospect of his heavenly kingdom. Their testimony is constant and clear for the truth. I was happy with them. The meetings were interesting. Being reduced as a people by the general depression, they still do wisely in keeping up their meetings in a good place of worship, with what occasional preaching can be supplied. God bless the tried and faithful flock in Fairhaven.

Feb. 9th, I preached in New Bedford. I need not dwell upon the condition of this people. My reception was cordial. I labored freely, and trust I was enabled to make some good impressions upon the great and important truths of the gospel. There is a degree of prosperity, but some questions which may require wisdom and prudence, with grace, in a happy solution. There is but little of the spirit of secession among them,—a spirit which I find in some instances among our people. It is hard to control. Indeed, it admits of no control. It is the real, simon pure thing, that will not quietly leave, but will have its course to the extent of its capacity, by any and every means, then all it wishes "is to be let alone."

Feb. 23d, I preached at Chapman Hall, Boston. The congregations were full, the interest good. There appears, at present, a prospect of a good work, and the gathering of a larger congregation than heretofore. I hope they may succeed well in their efforts to labor in gospel form.

My labors at Lowell are elsewhere noted. I should not fail to mention a visit to White Factory, where I preached two evenings. The few who still attend there are firm, good and true. Being very much isolated, as to the labors of the Advent cause, they hail with gladness the discourses which enlighten and feed, in relation to the coming of our Lord and his glory.

Fulfillment of Prophecy.

Gen. Wise, in one of his speeches a short time since, exhorted the people of the South to burnish up their rusty shot-guns and fowling pieces, if they had no muskets, and give them to the soldiers, manufacture swords out of wheel tires, and knives out of reaping hooks, and make a general search of all rebeldom for weapons to beat back the invaders. His injunction seems to have been literally obeyed, if the arms captured here are any indication, for a more incongruous collection could hardly be got together.—New York Herald.

Now look at the prophecy of Joel 3: 9, 10;—"Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles. Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near, let them come up. Beat your ploughshares into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears, let the weak say I am strong." Is not this another weight in the scale of evidence that we are drawing very near the great day of the Lord? Every day brings new light, and gives additional clearness and power to those sacred utterances of holy men as they were moved by the Holy Spirit, and Faith casts anchor more firmly and reliably upon the unyielding rock of Jehovah's immutable word.

He who takes the chart of divine truth for his guide, is watching the movements of nations from a stand-point differing widely with those of the mere politician, or worldling of whatever stamp. There is a clearness to his perceptions, an acuteness in his observation, and harmonizing of all that transpires, which they know not, nor appreciate. A "Day-star" is beaming upon his pathway, that gives clear promise of a morning about to dawn; while they who have not yielded their faith to the Divine oracles, are groping their way in midnight darkness; no light, no chart, no anchor, no hope, save the forlorn one gathered from human appearances. We pity them—deeply, earnestly pity them, and are constrained to weep as our Savior did over Jerusalem, exclaiming, O that thou would'st know, in this thy day, the things that belong to thy peace! We mourn, yet rejoice. Mourn over the groans of wounded and dying ones, and all the horrors of the terrible scourge that is sweeping over our land and world, and rejoice, in that we almost hear the footsteps of the Prince of Peace, who will soon take the sceptre and reign supreme over the entire earth, and that the "wickedness of the wicked will come to an end." Well may the weeping church of God cry out in her earnest longing, "Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus!"

GOOD LOGIC.—A poor man who fell into bad habits on being rescued, reformed and converted, often spoke of himself as a "brand plucked from the burning."

"What do you mean by that?" asked one of his former associates. "Come, go with us and have one more drink."

"Look here," answered the man, "you know there is a great difference between a brand and a green stick. If a spark falls on a brand that has been partly burnt, it will soon catch fire again. Not so with a green stick. I tell you I am the brand plucked out of the fire, and I dare not venture in the way of temptation for fear of being set on fire again."

THE BIBLE is the christian's store-house of all supplies; his museum of the greatest rarities and curiosities; his sanctuary and hiding-place; his glass, through which are seen all objects, both of time and eternity, and in which the sinner may ever see reflected the moral image of the soul.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Keep the Brain fallow in Childhood.

When we are considering the health of children, it is imperative not to omit the importance of keeping the brain fallow, as it were, for several of the first years of their existence. The mischief perpetrated by a contrary course, in the shape of bad health, peevish temper, and developed vanity is incurable. Some prodigy, which is a standard of mischief throughout its neighborhood, misleads them. But parents may be assured that this early work is not, by any means, all gain even in the way of work. I suspect it is a loss; and that children who begin their education late, as it would be called, will rapidly overtake those who have been in harness long before them. And what advantage can it be that a child knows more at six years old than his compeers, especially if this is to be gained by a sacrifice of health, which may never be regained? There may be some excuse for this early book work in the case of those children who are to live by manual labor. It is worth while perhaps to run the risk of some physical injury to them, having only their early years in which we can teach them book knowledge. The chance of mischief, too, will be less, being more likely to be counteracted by their after life. But for a child who is to be a brain-work for the first twenty-one years of its life, what folly it is to exhaust in the least its mental energy, which, after all, is its surest implement.

A great Work—Glorious!

Bro. Trask is still in his Master's service—battling away. Hear him.

Do you love neatness? Do you love a pure atmosphere? Do you love virtue? Do you love sobriety? Do you love decency? Do you love a home, a church, or an office free from the stench of tobacco? Do you love your family? Do you love yourself? Do you love your God? Then will you do something to stay this mighty flood, and fire, and smoke caused by the use of tobacco in our land and throughout the world. It is flooding our youth down the road to destruction. It is smoking out their brains. It is burning out their consciences. It is degrading and stupefying their whole beings, and fitting them for drunkards and drunkards' graves. If you can do nothing more, will you subscribe for the Anti-Tobacco Journal, published by Rev. George Trask, Fitchburg, Mass? One dollar per year.—Golden Rule.

DIET OF NAPOLEON.—The frugality of Napoleon was such, that his taste gave the preference to the most simple and the least seasoned dishes. At dinner he ate little, and always of wholesome things. Thus his head was always clear, and his labor easy, even when he rose from table. Gifted by nature with a healthy stomach, his nights were as calm as those of an infant; nature, also, had bestowed on him a constitution so admirably suited to his station, that a single hour of sleep would restore him after twenty-four hours fatigue. In the midst of the most serious and urgent events, he had the power of resigning himself to sleep at leisure, and his mind enjoyed the most perfect calm, as soon as directions were given for the necessary arangements.

TREATMENT OF EARACHE.—M. Emile Duval, of Lyons, France, says that he has, in person, found relief in severe earache, after other means had been tried in vain, from the use of a mixture of equal parts of chloroform and laudanum; a little being introduced on a piece of cotton. The first effect produced is a sensation of cold; then there is numbness, followed by a scarcely perceptible pain and refreshing sleep.—Scientific American.

COLD FEET.—For cold feet, immerse them morning and evening in cold water, rub them with a rough towel, and run about your room till they are warm. All these red pepper and mustard applications are like rum to the stomach, relieve you to-day, but leave you colder to-morrow.

REMOVING SUNBURN.—If our lady friends would like to know what will take off tan and sunburn, let them take a handful of bran, pour a quart of boiling water on it, let it stand one hour, then strain. When cold, put to it a pint of bay rum. Bottle and use it when needed.

Inquiries.

Hast thou a tear to shed
Beside the lonely bed
Whereon a sufferer lies?
And with the falling tear
Hast thou a word to cheer
His heart before he dies?

Hast thou a mind to pray
For those who go astray
From virtue's narrow path?
Hast thou sweet words to win
Them from a life of sin,
And save from coming wrath?

Hast thou the hungry fed,
And kindly o'er them spread
The garment new and warm?
If so, how blest thou art,
With sweet peace in thy heart,
And sunshine overhead.

Just turn with me and read
A precious Psalm indeed,
Its number, forty-one;
With such a pledge to you
Of what thy God will do,
Go on as thou hast done.

The Opening of the Sixth Seal.

NUMBER SIX.—(Concluded.)

"And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?"—REV. 6: 12–17.

Another learned writer, E. Smith, in his "Key to the Revelation," says, "This scene prefigured the revolution in the Roman empire (which took place in the fourth century, commencing about A. D. 320) from paganism to Christianity, under the Christian emperor Constantine. We have here an avenging of the blood of the martyrs indeed; and given in language borrowed from the great judgment day, at the end of the world." Let us examine this application of the sixth seal by the Bible rule. The martyrs were to rest, until their fellow-servants and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled; and there is no intimation that their blood should be avenged, until the days of their rest should be fulfilled. They were to rest until the last martyr is slain; for so we must interpret the language. Many more martyrs have been slain since the fourth century than previous to that time, commencing with the Christian era; consequently the avenging of their blood could not take place before they were slain. Christ applies the days of vengeance immediately to the destruction of Jerusalem, Luke 21: 20–22. Also Matt. 23: 35, 36. "That upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel, unto the blood of Zacharias, son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar. Verily I say unto you, All these things shall come upon this generation." Here the word "generation" evidently means the Jewish nation to whom the Lord sent prophets and teachers, verse 34; and we cannot restrict it to the men then living, without restricting verse 39 to them also,—"For I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." And he went out, and departed from the temple, after pronouncing this curse upon the barren fig-tree, which soon withered away. At the hand of the Jewish nation God took vengeance upon them for all the righteous blood they had shed; but the day of vengeance for the blood of the martyrs of Jesus will be when the Lord cometh out of his place, to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity; and the earth shall disclose her blood, and no more cover her slain."—Isa. 26: 21.

The position of the souls under the altar pertaining to the Jewish worship, shows that vengeance was to be taken upon that nation as the procuring cause; upon that people who clamorously demanded the crucifixion of Christ when Pilate the Roman governor pronounced him innocent, Matt. 27: 24, 25, and who stirred up the people against the preachers of his gospel wherever they went, as we learn from the Acts of the apostles. The Romans crucified Christ because the Jews demanded it; and therefore God made them the executioners of his vengeance upon the Jewish nation; and their mournful condition is graphically described by a very appropriate figure representing all the heavenly luminaries as clad in mourning and their light extinguished. "The sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood, and the stars of heaven fell." But Smith applies this figure to the revolution which resulted in the fall of Pagan Rome, and says, "The figures in our text to denote this revolution are prophetic and appropriate. The sun is a prophetic emblem of emperors and kings, or of first rulers. The moon here is a figure of their armies. The stars, of the various subordinate officers of a government. Hence the darkening of the sun, the turning to blood of the moon, and the falling of the stars, denote the various terrors of a revolution." Granting that a revolution is symbolized by this prophetic figure; should not the emblems correspond to the nature and character of the revolution, and its effects? According to the history given by Bishop Newton, things were made better by that revolution under Constantine. But the figure plainly indicates the transition from a prosperous, to a most deplorable condition. "They said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?"

Concerning this language Smith remarks, "That revolution was a great day of God's wrath to the Pagan empire; and the abettors of paganism were not able to stand." But Christ says, Luke 23: 28–31, "Daughters of Jerusalem, weep not for me, but weep for yourselves and for your children. For behold, the days are coming in the which they shall say, Blessed are the barren, and the wombs that never bare, and the paps which never gave suck. Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us, and to the hills, Cover us. For if they do these things in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry?" The prophet Hosea also has the same language with reference to the same people, Hosea 10, when they shall say, "We have no king," verse 3, and when "the thorn and the thistle, (verse 8, emblems of paganism and idolatry,) shall come upon their altars; and they shall say to the mountains, Cover us; and to the hills, Fall on us." Thus Christ applies this prophecy to the Jewish nation, and not to Pagan Rome; and therefore I must reject the application of Smith as unscriptural. Every careful reader of the Bible must know that Christ so blended the prediction of the destruction of Jerusalem, Matt. 24, with that of the end of the world, that it is very difficult to distinguish them, as the latter was evidently the antitype of the former; and therefore the figures in our text will apply to both. They had their primary fulfillment at the end of the Jewish dispensation, when vengeance was taken upon that nation for their iniquity; they will have their secondary fulfillment at the end of the Christian dispensation, when vengeance will be taken upon all nations. Isa. 34: 2, 8,—"For the indignation of the Lord is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies: he hath utterly destroyed them, he hath delivered them to the slaughter. For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion." Isa. 63: 4,—For the day of vengeance is in my heart, and the year of my redeemed is come."

Thus we learn that the day of vengeance upon all nations, of which that upon the Jewish nation was a type, will be simultaneous with the deliverance of the Lord's redeemed. Hence the Revelator gives the scene of redemption immediately after the sixth seal, chap. 7; and by referring to chap. 14, where the same scene is presented, we find the order reversed. The 144,000 redeemed from the earth are first noticed; then follows the day of vengeance typified by the sixth seal. This shows that the opening of the seals gives events the reverse of the chronological order.

CONCEAL THE INJURY.—A man strikes me with a sword, and inflicts a wound. Suppose, instead of binding up the wound, I am showing it to everybody, taking off the bandage and examining its depth, making it fester till my limb becomes inflamed; is there a person in the world who would not call me a fool? Now, such a fool is he who, by dwelling upon little injuries or insults, causes them to agitate or inflame his mind. How much better were it to put a bandage over the wound, and never look at it again.—Jamieson.

For the Crisis.

"Preach the Word."

There are comparatively few complying with this requisition,—many preferring to preach popular fables,—and among the few who are preaching the word of truth, we find some who preach it in a wrong way, much to the injury of the cause of Christ.

1st. Some preach it in an irritating, aggravating way, thus unnecessarily awakening a fighting spirit among unbelievers. This may be rather amusing to some for a while; but where men preach with a design to provoke the spirit of controversy, it ultimately results disastrously to the cause. Should we not rather preach in a winning way, with a pure, heartfelt desire to instruct the unenlightened? Is it wisdom to purposely arouse the spirit of combativeness, and get men committed against a sentiment before they have fully seen the arguments in support of it? Do people love to have their toes trodden upon, and then be dared to help themselves? Would it not be better to preach in a way that would carry the impression to every heart that our desire is to benefit them, rather than to triumph over them? Is it not both policy and duty to "be wise as serpents and harmless as doves"?

2nd. Some preach it in a denunciatory way, interspersing their discourses with condemnatory remarks; thus endeavoring to drive people by sour censure to change their belief. It more frequently drives people out of the hearing of our arguments. Intellectual men are not apt to believe that we are their judges. Would it not be better to use hard arguments in the spirit of kindness? Have not other people feelings as well as we? And do they love to be denounced better than we? Should we not put forth more exertion to save them, and less to damn them in advance? Is it wisdom to put out a man's eyes because he does not at once see the same thing that we do? Would that help him to see better afterwards? Would it not be better, if a man fails to see a thing from one standpoint, to gently lead him to another standpoint, and persuade him to look again?

3rd. Some preach nothing but theory, theory, from the beginning to the end of the year. This course will starve a church to death. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." If you have nothing but theory in your heart, God help you to get filled with the practical element also, and then feed the flock with that which will keep them alive and healthful.

4th. Some preach merely to combat error, and never to save sinners. Did not the great Teacher come "to save sinners," as well as to rebuke error; and should we not possess his spirit? How many of this stamp preach years without bringing a single soul into the fold of Christ.

5th. Others get an item of truth, and reduce it to a hobby, and ride it till the sight of them is repulsive. Some select "life and death," (a precious truth in its time and place) and can see nothing else. Others get some hobby of error; and thus the cause is cursed with hobby-horses. God have mercy on the narrow, contracted riders.

6th. A few preach the truth in kindness, rebuke error in love, enforce practical godliness, and warn sinners. Under their labors churches rise and flourish, sinners are converted, and the cause of God is advanced. They are God's laborers, with hearts as well as heads engaged in the work.

Patience under Affliction.

Study patience under affliction. It is the common path and beaten road to the kingdom. Behold the print of the footsteps of all the cloud of witnesses in this road. "To you it is given, in behalf of Christ, not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake." Jesus Christ, the Son of God, passed through severe afflictions, yet he was always patient, and ever beloved by the Father. "He was despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." He was oppressed, he was afflicted,—he was brought "as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth." "When he was reviled, he reviled not again,—when he suffered, he threatened not."

Job was an example of patience. When he was stripped of all earthly comforts, and deeply afflicted, he calmly submitted, and in his trouble he bows before God, and says, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." And when his foolish wife said to him, "Dost thou retain thine integrity? Curse God and die," he says to her, "What; shall we receive good at the hand of the Lord, and shall we not receive evil? In all this did not Job sin with his lips." Consider the patience of David, when he was driven from his throne, from his house and from his sanctuary, and all this by his own son; yet how submissive to God! "Behold, here am I; let him do to me what seemeth him good." And when Shimei cursed him and threw stones at him, he was patient, and would not suffer his persecutor to be injured. And then, again, the patience of Eli, when the judgments of God were about to be inflicted upon his house, and his two sons must die in one day, the news of which causes the ears of every one to tingle; yet he said, "It is the Lord; let him do what seemeth him good." We see also the patience of Aaron. When fire went out from the Lord and devoured his two children, Nadab and Abihu, and they died before the Lord, he held his peace.

Other worthies have endured trials of mockings, scourgings, bonds, imprisonments, and have been stoned, tempted, destitute, afflicted, tormented, not accepting deliverance, that they might obtain a better resurrection. "Take my brethren, the prophets, who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of affliction and patience. Behold, we count them happy which endure." The apostle Paul could glory in tribulation, knowing that tribulation worketh patience.

God often graciously manifests himself to his children in affliction. "For, as the sufferings of Christ abound in us, so our consolation aboundeth by Christ." Paul and Silas did never sing more joyously, than when they were in the inner prison, with their backs torn with scourges, and their feet fast in the stocks. When Jacob was in destitute circumstances, obliged to lie in the open field with the heavens for his canopy, and the stone for his pilow, he saw the angels of the Lord ascending and descending upon the ladder that reached from heaven to earth. When the Hebrew children were in the furnace, suffering for the cause of God, one like the Son of God appeared with them. Ezekiel, when sitting in his solitude by the river Chebar, in the land of his captivity, had a vision of God. John, when on the Isle of Patmos, had a glorious vision of Christ. Stephen, when being persecuted even unto death, saw the heavens open, and Christ sitting at the right hand of God pleading for him.

The example of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Apostles and Martyrs, teaches us that God's promise is sure,—"My grace is sufficient for you." When the children of God exercise patience under affliction, it contributes much to the conviction of the ungodly, that there is a reality in the religion of the gospel, and great efficacy in the grace of God which bears them above the trials of this life. Soon patience will not be needed, for the trials and afflictions of God's children will be ended. Soon it will be said, "Come, my people, enter into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast."

For the Crisis.

Thoughts on Death.

"Death," says the poet, "is the gate to endless joy"; but while multitudes acknowledge the assertion true, they either prove their faith defective, or are seemingly inconsistent in manifesting such dread of entering the way that leads to this state which is so desirable. The idea of death being "the gate to endless joy," or the way to immediate happiness, is contrary alike to common sense and revelation. The common-sense view of death is, that it is the opposite of life, and that dying is simply ceasing to live; and this seems to be the import of the Scriptures. If Lazarus, the brother of Mary and Martha, in dying had passed immediately into a state of conscious happiness, it does not seem as though they, had they thus believed, would have so deeply lamented his death; neither would the Savior have been willing to have called him back from such a state, into a life that is so much alloyed with unhappiness as is the present, for the purpose of consoling the bereavement of these sisters of his; but would have advised them of his true condition, and thus have assuaged their mental anguish. But the plain teaching of the Scriptures warrants us in the conclusion that the Christian does not enter into the joy of his Lord, or receive his reward, which is eternal life—Matt. 25: 31, 46; John 10: 28—until Christ, the great Life-giver, comes the second time and brings it with him.—Rev. 22: 12.

When the Christian dies he passes from the conscious to the unconscious state, which is represented under the beautiful figure of sleep; and being unconscious, is insensible of the passage of time. And as the little child who falls asleep in the evening and sleeps soundly until morning is virtually at morning when he falls asleep; so is the Christian, who falls asleep in Christ and is laid away in the grave, virtually at the resurrection morning, when he falls asleep in Christ. And does not here come in the very commonly received error that Christ comes to the person who dies, instead of the dead person remaining unconscious until the time that they be judged,—Rev. 11: 18?

But there is still further beauty in the figure of the Christian asleep in Christ. It is that he is to wake up in the morning; that he is to have part in the first resurrection, and come forth to life at the commencement of the Millennial Sabbath; while those of the opposite character will not have their resurrection until evening, or the close of the Sabbath, until the thousand years, that intervene between the first resurrection and the time of the living of the rest of the dead, have passed.—Rev. 20: 5. Hence, I conclude that death to the christian is a state of unconsciousness during the interim between the time of his death and the morning of the resurrection, when Christ comes to wake him up from his sleep, to call, him forth from his dusty bed, to dress him up in the habiliments of everlasting day, and reward him with endless life; while death to the opposite character is a state of unconsciousness during the time intervening between his death and the evening of the Millennial Sabbath, at the end of which he is called forth to receive his reward, which is the "second death," or everlasting destruction in its literal sense.

Who does not desire life rather than death? Who had not rather wake up in the morning and behold the dazzling splendor of the newly risen Sun of Righteousness, and enjoy the glories of the bright and blessed Sabbath of Millennial rest, than sleep in silence and unconsciousness during this blessed and glorious period, and finally come forth at the close of the day, to be consigned to everlasting oblivion?

The Day of the Lord.

BY JOSEPH A. SEISS, D. D.

"Knowing this first, that there shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation," etc.—2 PET. 3: 3–14.

VI. But I pass to notice another topic. The apostle speaks of "new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" He seems to be delivering himself upon this point in the name of all his fellow-apostles. He speaks of this new order of things as the common christian expectation. I receive it, therefore, as a doctrine of christianity, that there are to be "new heavens and a new earth." Nay, the apostle goes further; he says that God himself has promised "new heavens and a new earth." Nor will it be hard to find the record of that promise. The word of the Lord, by Isaiah the prophet, (65: 17; 66: 22,) long ago was, "Behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create." "For the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord." There has been a strong disposition in men, somehow, to spiritualize and explain away this promise, as every thing else relating to the kingdom to come. Some tell us that it is nothing but poetic figure. Let me assure you that it is literal reality. Peter quotes it as literal reality. When he speaks of "the heavens and the earth which are now," he means the literal heavens and earth. The burnings and loosenings of which he would have his readers stand in awe are literal burnings. The changes that he predicts are changes that are to occur in the material earth we stand on, and in the air we breathe, with no more figure about them than about the waters of the flood. And directly from these saddening desolations he passes to the subject of their reparation, connecting the promise of the new heavens and earth with the breaking down of the present heavens and earth, and fortifies himself against regrets over the one by the excellencies which he anticipates in the other. And if he is not speaking with equal literalness of both, it is useless to confide in the certainty of language. Besides, what are figurative heavens and earth in the place of the literal and real ones? and what can a spiritual reparation do for a natural desolation? Will a sweet word in the ear mend a rent in a garment? From all the terms, surroundings, and common laws of speech and association belonging to the case, the apostle can mean no other than a literal new heavens and earth. And what prophets announced, and Peter looked for, John in vision saw, not in symbol, but also in literal reality. Following immediately upon his description of the judgment-scenes we find this record:—"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away." (Rev. 21: 1.) I claim, therefore, that these new heavens and earth are to be, and that it is one of the consolations of a christian to expect them.

Nor are we to suppose that they will be quite other heavens and earth than those we have at present. Great changes are to be made, but not a new creation, separate and distinct from that which now is. Peter says of the world before the flood, that it "perished." But it was not the earth that perished. It was only the order and constitution of things upon it. It was the same earth after the flood that it was before, though somewhat altered in its configuration and inhabitants. And as the perishing in the one case is cited as corresponding to the dissolution and passing away in the other, I cannot but take the new heavens and earth to be, simply, the present heavens and earth renewed; that is, made new again,—brought back to their original excellence. The same law will, doubtless, hold alike in all departments of redemption, and the method in one be the same in all. Redemption has three territories: the soul, the body, and the material world, of which the body forms a part. In two of these, at least, it is not God's method to destroy the old and to put an entirely new creation in its place. "The new man" is simply the old man renewed, the same heart brought under new influences and put into a new condition. The risen and glorified body is the same corrupt and dying body we put into the grave, only transfigured and fashioned to another pattern, with new attributes. It is the same soul after regeneration that it was before regeneration, with the same inherent constitution. We call it "a new creature." We say, "old things have passed away, and behold all things have become new." But it was the same Paul after the scenes of Damascus as before; at least, as to all the elements of his constituent nature. The risen body of Christ was the same that was crucified, with even the nail-prints and the side-wound which it carried with it to the grave. It had new qualities and adaptations, but it was the same body. It is "this corruptible" that must put on incorruption, and "this mortal" that must put on immortality. And as in these two departments I conclude it will be in the only remaining one,—that the new heavens and earth are to be nothing more nor less than the present heavens and earth, subjected to new and regenerating influences, evolving new qualities, and adapting them to be the fit abode of the redeemed. Redeemed men can hardly be considered redeemed without that redemption being extended to the material world with which they are by essential nature so closely related. But I cannot conceive of a redeemed material world other than as of a redeemed man, in which the continuity of essential nature is simply modified, not broken. The Savior himself has also dropped a word upon this subject which sets it in a very clear light. It is found in Matt. 19: 28. He there refers his followers, for the reward of their sacrifices for his sake, to the time "when the Son of man shall sit in the throne of his glory." The Son of man is never spoken of as sitting, or to sit, on the throne of his glory, except at his coming at the end of the present order of things, usually called "the end of the world." And yet he calls this session upon his throne, and ending of the present world, and his administrations in that connection, "THE REGENERATION,"—the palingenesia—the renovation—the making of things new again. You know what this word regeneration means when applied to an individual and his personal experiences in christianity. It is the re-establishment of the reign of God in his heart, by the introduction of a new order of things into the one common nature which is the same under both. And such, according to the Savior, are to be the new heavens and earth: the old heavens and earth regenerated—made new again—by the introduction of another order of things. The regenerated man is the man in whose soul redemption has become effective; and the new heavens and earth are simply that condition of the material universe in which the groanings and travailings brought upon it by sin shall be relieved, and "the whole creation," that now is in pain, "delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." (Rom. 8: 19–23.) Regeneration is not only for the soul, but for the body too; and also for the tainted air and suffering earth, which share with man the sad consequences of the fall. (Gen. 3: 17–19.) The regeneration of the soul we have now, by the power of the Holy Ghost. The regeneration of the body we shall have in the resurrection of the just. And the regeneration of the heavens and the earth is when Jesus shall enter upon his sublime dominion at his second coming, and shall bring about that "restitution of all things," of which all the prophets have spoken. (Acts 3: 21.)

And glorious and blessed heavens and earth they shall be. Not some dim ethereal realm, a mere gauzy nothing; not some cold dream-land, where all sensation is attenuated into a spiritual meagreness totally destitute of attractions for mortals; not a mere state, made up of certain unearthlinesses, of which no one can conceive and with which no one can sympathize; but a literal and material world, firm and ponderable as now, girthed and clothed with similar heavens, adorned with sunshine and showers, birds, trees, streams, melody, and flowers, where can be felt the grip of a friendly hand, the kiss of loving lips, and the warmths of living communion, the same as in that garden of beauty and innocence in which God and angels held converse with man, and nature, in the glow and perfection of its undamaged youth, did but mirror the goodness and glory of approving Heaven.

Nor do I hesitate to say that in these glorious heavens and earth shall all the ransomed have their happy home, with Jesus their Master dwelling in his own tabernacle among them, (Rev. 21: 34,) and filling out, by his grand and beneficent adminstrations there, the reality of that Golden Age which has been flitting up and down in the imaginations of good men, prophets, and poets of every period and every clime.

VII. There is yet another point contained in the text, to which I will briefly allude: I mean the practical effect which the prospect of these great things of the day of the Lord should have upon us. Some speak of inquiry into these subjects as mere speculation, wasteful of the energies and usefulness of the men who give attention to them, and productive of more mischief than good. Such people know not what they say. These subjects are the very heart and substance of evangelical prediction; and to turn away from them, is to take away largely from the Book of God, from the glory of our hopes, and from the life of christianity in the earth. The Scriptures everywhere rank them among the great potencies of the gospel, intended to subserve the most important practical results both as to the personal sanctification of believers and the success of the truth with the careless and the skeptical. Of this the text is an ample illustration. "Seeing then," says the holy apostle, "that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God?" What awakening and animating power he here ascribes to these contemplations. What adaptedness he thus assigns to these doctrines to give circumspection and softness to the steps of the saints, to purge levity and unholiness from their words, to inspire them for all the duties of godliness, and to carry their anticipations out among the scenes of that life of blessedness to which this world is but the vestibule! But he goes further than this. He not only beholds and acknowledges this great power in these themes to search and shake the soul, but he proceeds to put that power to practical use, as the mightiest instrument in his possession with which to ply his readers for their greater security and more certain salvation. Pointing to this great and terrible day of the Savior's coming, to the scenes of desolation which are to attend its introduction, and to the glories which it is to bring to the believing and faithful, and drawing from these the considerations with which to make his admonitions effective, he takes his stand in the presence of the whole Christian Church, and makes this as his select, last, and most solemn appeal—: "Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent, that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless."

A subject capable of such a use as this it is profane and blasphemous to stigmatize as a matter of mere speculation. Could any thing be more solemn, or touch more deeply upon the profoundest vitalities of religion? Let us, then, take it duly to heart, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. Happy that minister who shall fashion his exhortations to this apostolic model; and happy that man who shall model his expectations and his life according to this apostolic exhortation.

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

LIFE.—Life is no speculative adventure with those who feel its value and duties. It has a deeper purpose, and its path becomes distinct and easy in proportion as it is earnestly and faithfully pursued. All ships on the ocean are not steamers or packets, but all, freight-bearers, fitted to their tasks, and the smallest shallop nobly fulfills its mission, while it pushes on towards its destined port, nor [illegible] because ships [illegible] to other points of the compass. Let man learn whether he is by nature a shallop or a ship, and then [illegible] his sail to the breeze.

The World's Crisis

AND

SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, April 9, 1862.

☞ PLEASE REMEMBER to write all NAMES of subscribers, and POST OFFICES, in a VERY PLAIN MANNER.—o

☞ Do not fail to read Bro. Sheldon's article on, "Preach the Word." It is excellent. Just the thing for the times, and true to the letter. We hope the kind admonition will produce very happy results. o.

Wayside Notes.

Saturday, March 15th, we went to Lowell, Mass., and spent the Lord's day with the church in that city. They have recently hired a very convenient and commodious house, well located for meetings, and have an excellent prospect of success. The recent labors of Bro. Himes have been made a signal blessing to them. Their congregations are large, intelligent, and lovers of truth. Several from other churches have lately become interested in the "blessed hope."

We found a pleasant resting place at Bro. Daniel Churchill's. He has been a faithful laborer in the vineyard of the Lord, but is now out of health, and unable to preach.

Monday, 17th, we returned home, and on Tuesday left again for the interesting field of labor at Danielsonville, Ct., where we remained till Saturday, the 22nd. We found them in a very prosperous condition, under the labors of Bro. Carpenter. New ones had decided to be christians, and those who had recently started were doing well. During the week others gave their hearts to the Lord, and three more were baptized. Others requested prayers.

We have since heard from there, and learn that several others have been converted, and that the work is still onward. Some have been persuaded to be christians in whom we felt a deep interest, and who for years have been the subjects of many prayers. Praise the Lord for his goodness in bearing so long with those who abuse his mercies.

Saturday morning, 22nd, at 3 o'clock, A. M., we left D. for Castleton, Vt., where we arrived at 3 1-2 o'clock, P. M., and met an affectionate reception in Bro. Sherman's happy family, though somewhat saddened now by the poor health and absence of Sr. S. She is at the Water Cure in Northampton, Mass., under the care of Dr. Denniston, where it is hoped she will receive a permanent benefit.

Our meetings in Castleton have resulted in much good to the church, by increasing their faith, hope, and love. Backsliders have been reclaimed, and are again rejoicing in the Lord, with the expectation of seeing him soon.

Our last day at C. was one of much interest. Several came in from other places, and were much refreshed. We shall expect to see a large representation in the kingdom from this section of country. We closed our meetings Lord's-day evening around the table of the Lord, in hope of soon being at the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Monday, March 31st, we bid adieu to the warm hearts and cold snows, for it looks just like the middle of winter. The snow is very dense, and between two and three feet deep. It was snowing when we left, with a fair prospect of sleighing for a month to come. We learn that in some parts of the State some seven feet of snow have fallen during the winter.

On our way, while at Rutland, we met Bro. M. Batchelor just returning from Pownal, Vt., where he had spent the Lord's day. He feels it duty to travel more than he has done for the last few years, and try to arouse men to prepare for the great day of the Lord, which must soon open upon an astonished world.—o.

"Then shall the end come."

The declaration is made by the Savior in connection with his answer to the question in the third verse, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?"—"Then shall the end come." When? After "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations." Query. Has that time arrived? According to the testimony of men best qualified to judge, it has, so far as they can decide. J. O. Choules, author of the most important work ever published on missionary operations, who has given an account of missions from the age of the apostles to the present period, when asked if he knew of any nation that had not received the gospel, replied that he knew of none. Mr. James, agent of the American Bible Society gave a similar answer. Nathan Bangs, who for many years stood at the head of the missionary movement among the Methodists, was asked, in 1842 if he knew of any nation that had not heard the gospel? He replied that he thought there was a tribe of Indians on the north-west coast of North America which had not heard it. As this was nearly twenty years since, it is more than probable, they have heard it before now.

We are sometimes told by uninformed persons, that China has never heard the gospel. For the benefit of those who labor under this mistake, we will give a few facts.

In 1807, the "London Missionary Society" commenced operations in China. In 1827, the "Netherland Missionary Society" opened a station; and in 1829 the "American Board of Missions" entered the same field. In 1834, the American Baptists joined their efforts; in 1835, the Protestant Episcopal church of America commenced their labors; and in 1837, to 1853, thirteen other missionary societies have established stations in the same country. In forty-six years, these twenty societies have sent to China one hundred and eighty-eight missionaries. The total number of years of labor in this field, by all these missionaries, is four hundred and fifty-seven.

From these facts it will be clearly seen that it cannot be truly said that China has not heard the gospel. Hence it is evident from the combination of testimony, that the end must come soon. Let us be ready.—o.

Short Articles.

We clip the following from the Herald of Gospel Liberty, published in Newburyport, Mass., because we would say the same thing to our contributors:—

"Shorten! shorten! Brethren, shorten! We must have variety, spice, pepper, solid, powerful, emotional, argumentative, didactive, sublime, flowery, musical, and all must be truthful. A half or two-thirds of a column is all sufficient to be readily read. Short articles, plainly written, will take precedence. Please cut down, brethren, let your motto be 'much in little.'"

Remember, the short articles are read first, and with the most interest. If the subject is such that it cannot be put into one short article, make two or more of it; having each one independent in itself, as far as possible. It would add interest to a series of articles, if each one appeared with a new heading. This would remove the objection that some have to long-continued articles; for in this case, the heading would indicate something new, and would secure a reading, when the old heading would be a sufficient reason for many to neglect it entirely.

This is the day when people wish to come at things in a short-hand way. Let all express their ideas in as few words as possible, and have the matter plain, if they wish to accomplish the greatest amount of good in the most pleasing manner.—o.

Bro. Howell's Likeness.

We have just received some very fine photographic likenesses of our dear brother Howell, who is now sleeping in Jesus. They are about six inches in length, and five wide. Price, ONE DOLLAR. Those who purchase will confer a favor on Sr. Howell, besides getting a likeness of a good man, whose earnest labors in the vineyard of the Lord have been made the means of a great benefit to many souls. We can truthfully say, his is the likeness of a good man.

These photographs are also for sale at Sandy Hill, N. Y., by Sr. Lucinda Howell, companion of the deceased.—o.

THE EARNEST CHRISTIAN, AND GOLDEN RULE.—These two excellent periodicals were married the first of last January, and have formed a very happy union. They walk together because agreed. They are united on christian principles, to defend an earnest christianity, and oppose sin in all its forms. We consider it the best religious monthly with which we are acquainted. One number is of more real value than all the Harper and Atlantic monthlies of the day. It is now published by Benjamin S. Roberts, Buffalo, N. Y., for $1 a year. Bro. Roberts is the editor, and Bro. D. S. Newton Corresponding Editor. Each number contains thirty-two octavo pages. If any of our readers wish a good monthly, we recommend this to their attention.—o.

"A TRACT FOR THE TIMES."—Bro. Wm. Shepherd has just issued a new tract, entitled:—

"Analogy of the first and second advent—general apostasy of the church; or, christendom demonstrated—her affinity with the world manifest—her position relative to the second coming of Christ similar to that occupied by the Jewish church on his first coming—many striking features of similarity considered—a notable sign in the ecclesiastical heavens portentous of the speedy fulfillment of the times of the Gentiles—the end of the world, aion, or age—the utter abolishment and removal of the present economy, both civil and ecclesiastical—the coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ at hand." Price 8 cents single copy, 65 cents per dozen, $4 00 per hundred. Postage 1 cent.—o.

The State of Europe.

The war clouds are hanging heavily over the eastern continent, with no prospect of removal till after a terrible storm. The great PREPARATION continues, and men tremble in view of the coming conflict of the embattled nations. A late writer in the Boston Post says:—o.

"Hungry workmen, in procession, parade the streets of Liverpool and Paris; in the French Legislative body, a serious quarrel is springing up with the Emperor, which may ere long lead to another coup; at Rome, all was alarm, under an apprehension of a 'popular demonstration,' in consequence of which the French garrison had been placed under arms, the Corso closed, and the Papal troops confined to the barracks. In Greece, a rebellion is in full blast, and in Turkey, its next door neighbor, the Turks and Christians have just been having a free fight, resulting in the sacrifice, some reports say, of a thousand lives. With troubles thus all round—in the old world—we do not know that even with rebellion on our hands, the United States is not, after all, about the quietest place on earth for a Peace-Society man to dwell in."

The Conference.

The Boston Conference, which commenced the 26th ult., was another illustration of the common interest felt by the brethren in the cause that for so many years has engrossed their attention. And it is well that so much interest should be manifested on this occasion, because, aside from the common faith, this with the annual reunions of Wilbraham, and our periodicals, constitute in a great measure the bonds distinctive of the cause. The weather was pleasant, and although the meeting was somewhat earlier in the season than formerly, the attendance was large,—brethren coming from the East, West, North and South, as in former times.

Among the preachers present were Brethren Boutell, Couch, Wendell, Storrs, Munger, J. S. White, Joseph White, W. S. Campbell, A Higgins, Brown, Britton, Gladding, Burbank, W. Pratt, Manning, Flagg, Curry, Ladd, Simpson, Pinkham, Muhlig, Clapp, Berick, Hastings, Churchill, E. Burnham, McCandis, Piper, Morgan, and others. Bro. Grant and others were hindered from attending by previous engagements. Others, who had in former years delighted in the company of their brethren, have gone to their rest. Among these, none are more truly lamented than the eminently logical, and whole-souled christian man, Brother John Howell, better known by some as being the late pastor of the church of Poultney. But these we count among the blessed dead, who rest from their labors, and their works do follow them.

Without any formal transaction of business, the time was occupied by the cheering reports and exhortations of various brethren, with stirring, practical sermons, —there being three sermons daily, with prayer and conference meetings interspersed. Preaching during the meeting by Brethren Wendell, Pratt, Curry, Boutell, Flagg, Berick, Storrs, Britton, and Hastings. It was cheering to hear these brethren, each in his peculiar style, bringing out the grand truths of the blessed "Gospel of the Kingdom." The sermons of most of these brethren were practical, and full of truths relating to the near coming of the Lord. There was not much of the pedantic, or bombastic; but we should say the discourses were chiefly distinguished by earnest, christian common sense,—an element that always strikes fire when brought in contact with honest hearts. It is the basis of the best eloquence of the world, but an element, alas! too seldom met with. Bro. Berick gave a deeply interesting discourse on the Prophecies. Bro. Curry preached a sermon marked by its peculiar earnest zeal, and apt and frequently brilliant illustrations. But no illustrations were made with more telling effect, than by Bro. Boutell in relating the following incident.

Being the fellow guest of a Methodist preacher on a certain occasion, the subject of christian faith came, with other matters, to be the theme of discussion. You think, said the Methodist brother, the regenerated earth is to be the future abode of the immortalized saints, while I do not know where it is to be. I think my faith is the most sublime, inasmuch as I am to go where Christ goes, and be where Christ is, and that is enough for me. Suppose a man asks a lady to be his consort in life; she asks concerning his estate, if he has one, where it is? &c. In reply to this, she is told this need not trouble her; where he goes she shall go, where he is she shall be. Now, said the Rev. brother, is not this woman's faith more sublime in accepting the hand of her lover, than hers who must know all about his estates, and marries them when she marries the man? Just the illustration wanted, said Bro. Boutell. Natural and revealed religion agree. What is so eminently natural and becoming in your illustration is the very fact in my faith. As I would think that marriage more felicitous where the man could say, I have the richest lands, the most elegant mansion, with lawns, gardens, and choice fruits, in a salubrious climate, with the most beautiful scenery surrounding all, and this in the midst of the most intelligent and kind of neighbors,—as I think this would be a happier circumstance to all parties concerned than would be the other case, other things being equal, so also I think my faith is better adapted to the apprehensions of the human mind than yours; and this seems to me to be the view everywhere in the Scriptures. You have talked and sung with the venerable Watts about the place

"Beyond the bounds of time and space;
Remove me to that heavenly place,
The saints secure abode."

And yet you and I know there is no getting beyond the bounds of time and space. In fine, your faith in the future, if it can be defined, is vague and etherial, while mine is definite and tangible. Christ, who has espoused the church unto himself, has informed us of all these matters. He said the "meek shall inherit the earth." He has told us in his "Father's house are many mansions." In the Rev. he has informed us how brilliant they are, and talked of the river and trees of life that are there. He has informed us there shall be a "Restitution of all things, spoken of by all the holy prophets"; that the New Jerusalem is to come "down from God out of heaven"; and finally that these great and unspeakably glorious things are to be realized when he makes his second advent. Therefore we "look for the resurrection of the dead, and the life of the world to come"; while you look for death as "the gate to endless joys," to be realized how and where it does not matter. We have for our encouragement all the pilgrim fathers who desired a "better country," and "looked for a city that hath foundations." If they had respect unto the recompense of reward, we assure you it is sufficiently "sublime" for us to hope for the same things.

Eld. Storrs preached on his peculiar views concerning the wicked dead, who, with all their offspring, (that have never come to the years of understanding and been converted) he thinks will not be included in the resurrection. For some reason, which we believe to be a zeal for sound doctrine, his views were not reciprocated except by a very few; but, on the contrary, were most earnestly opposed, in public and private.

On Saturday afternoon, Bro. Hastings delivered a somewhat lengthy and able discourse on the doctrine of the resurrection, showing in the most incontrovertible manner that there will be "a resurrection of both the just and unjust"; that "all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation"; that "they that hear shall live."

Upon the whole, we trust we have much reason to hope God's people have been strengthened as the result of this meeting, and made better ready for the final gathering about to be realized by the Church universal. God grant the gathering angels may call for us all in that day.—M.

Reverend.

In answer to repeated inquiries concerning the use of this word, we have consented to say, among the reasons for its use are, first, it is common and quite becoming. A young lad is called "Master"—a lass is called "Miss"—a man "Mister"—a deacon is addressed as "Deacon"—the second officers in rank in the Presbyterian Church, and Mormon preachers of all classes, young or old, are called "Elders"—a physician is called "Doctor"—and all this without the special requirement of law, civil or divine. It is so by common consent. The same rule may apply to the use of the term Reverend. Much may be owing to taste, some choosing such common-place civilities as cost nothing, and yet are calculated to do much toward making society cheerful; while others prefer to be blunt, or as they say, "like the Quakers, plain." To be common-place is perhaps the best rule in these matters; avoiding "French airs" on the one hand, and the studied, prudish monkery of the "more holy than thou" on the other. To call young preachers, not yet twenty years old, "Elder"—which means a man of advanced years, or ecclesiastically a father—is felt by some to be slightly unbecoming, and is certainly without the authority of a divine command.

But a much more weighty reason is found in the fact that the word intelligently used expresses at least a measure of respect. See Webster. This is quite in keeping with the mind of the inspired apostle, who gave command concerning this class of laborers in God's vineyard—"to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake." The word Reverend, properly used, expresses no more than this.

We have little sympathy for the spirit of this age which seeks to degrade the office and work of the ministry. St. Paul sought to magnify it; but in this day it is of less esteem than that of a common professor or lecturer in a college. True, there are many moral delinquencies amongst this class of men, and sometimes downright rascalities—matters that when discovered, should receive the treatment they deserve. But, while it is the part of the infidel and the hypocrite to rejoice in such things—(for "misery loves company")—it is rather the part of a Christian to grieve and lament, and pray God for the recovery of the apostate. At all events it in no wise follows that the true-hearted merit any less esteem because of the moral derelictions of others. This is an irreverent age. Children do not respect their parents; and men of mature minds feel little respect for any body or any thing save themselves. It is seen in the family, in the State, the Church, and toward God; and may Heaven forbid that, by the removal of one ancient, time-honored custom, we should help this lawless form of ungodliness. "These . . . despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities. Yet Michael the archangel, when, contending with the devil, he disputed about the body of Moses, durst not bring against him a railing accusation, but said, The Lord rebuke thee." They are to perish in "the gainsaying of Core." (See Num. 16.)

It is sometimes said by those who never thought seriously upon the matter, that the Psalmist has so used the term that it cannot be applied to any other than God. "Holy and reverend is his name." But this expression proves nothing in this direction, or else it proves too much. First, it is observed that it is an adjective, and not a noun; hence is no assumption of a title applying exclusively to God. Second, it proves too much; for by the same logic no man should be holy, for in the same sentence it is said, holy is His name. "Holy brethren," is the right address of New Testament brethren. To all this we may add, we have found there can be as much of pride, bigotry, spiritual tyranny, in fine, as much of the demi-god under a Quaker hat, or the garb of an Elder, as that of a man sometimes called Reverend. Therefore we use the word.—M.

Biographical Sketches.—No. 3.

JOSEPH WOLFE.

Joseph Wolfe was born in Weilersbach, near Bamberg, Bavaria, 1796. His father was a Jewish Rabbi. According to the custom of the times, young Wolfe was put to a Christian or Gentile school for his education. The following is his account of his impressions with reference to Christianity. Finding a devoted Christian in a barber of Halle, where he now resided—a Lutheran—he says:—"I went into the dwelling of the barber, and conversed with him about our Messiah, whom I expected every day, who would build again the temple of Jerusalem. The barber and his wife, who were true Christians, heard me with patience and compassion. Then he said to me, 'O! my dear child, you do not know the true Messiah. Jesus Christ, whom your ancestors did crucify, was the true Messiah; but your ancestors always expected an earthly kingdom, and not a heavenly one; and therefore they killed him, as likewise they did the prophets, and, if you would read without prejudice your own prophets, you would be convinced.' I was eight years old. I was confounded when I heard them thus speak. Without being able at the time to read the prophets well, I believed what the barber told me, and said to myself, It is true that the Jews have killed and persecuted prophets, because my father himself told me so; perhaps Jesus Christ was killed innocent." A few days after he went to a Lutheran clergyman, and declared his intention to become a Christian, but was put off by the minister on account of his youth. He says, "I told nothing of these circumstances to my father, because I feared punishment."

He was continued at the school in Halle and made good progress in his studies, specially in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew. Mentions special benefit received from the Protestant Professor Knapp, teacher of Divinity. His sentiments becoming known, he began to receive persecution from the Jews, on which account he left Halle and went to Prague, in Bohemia; but failing to find the opportunities for study that he wished, he went on to Vienna, being yet not fifteen years of age. Went from thence to Presburg, in Hungary, and afterward returned to Vienna in great penury. Here he was providentially cared for by an officer of the Austrian army. He says:—"His lady gave me the New Testament and the Prophets; I read them, and prayed with great devotion to our Lord that he would help me, so that I might be baptized and become a faithful preacher of his gospel." In Austria he fell in with the Roman Catholics, and tarried awhile at a Monastery, pursuing his studies meanwhile with a view to the ministry. But though under the care of the Romanists, he sought opportunity to converse likewise with learned Protestants. The following will give some idea of his progress in this direction, though not very favorable to his learning the way of life; nor is the picture a very flattering one to such in the Protestant world as boast that, with the march of education, the world must soon be converted. And yet are there not many similar learned men in every part of Christendom? He says, in W—, "I came to one of the most learned men in that city, who conversed with me about religion, and said he had great respect for the Christian religion, because it was the true natural religion; but that he thought the religion of the Hindoos in certain points more perfect than Christ's religion, for they considered the beasts and flowers as their brethren." Another of their learned men said, "If you believe a revelation which passes the human understanding, I would counsel you to embrace the Catholic faith; but when you are a naturalist, as I am, I counsel you to embrace our Protestant religion, because Protestantism corresponds to the human nature." And yet the young Jew thinks he "found only two old women in that city who were true Christians."

In this manner he continues his studies, most favorably impressed with the kindness he was experiencing at the hands of his Roman friends, until we find him finally on his way to Rome to complete his education, be baptised into the Christian religion, and take orders as a Romish priest. At Basle, Switzerland, he met Madame Krudener, who said to him, "The Gospel must be always your holy guide; the cross of Christ must educate you; you must banish from your mind every uncharitable spirit. The Lion of Judah will soon appear among his elect who have heard his voice." Perhaps this was his first impression that "the Lion of Judah will soon appear." He continues reading the Scriptures until he reaches Rome, where he meets with a warm welcome from Cardinal Litta, and other Church functionaries; is introduced to the Pope, who, he says, received him as a father receives a son. It is probable that this was owing not only to the fact of his being a convert to their faith, but also to the great proficiency he had made in his studies, and the promise he gave of being a master of learning if placed in favorable circumstances. This was certified by numerous testimonials he had brought with him from Germany.

But he had not been at Rome long before he became convinced there were many shades of difference between Catholicism as exhibited in the vicinity of Protestantism in Germany and Rome. He found himself one day in an angry dispute with some of the Professors of his college concerning the infallibility of the Pope. He said to them, "The Catholics in Germany do not believe it." Cardinal Litta said to him, "You must not dispute about this subject until you have finished your studies. You will be persuaded of the Pope's infallibility when you have heard the reasons." He adds, "For a long time I obeyed the Cardinal's injunction; but when I heard them one day call the Pope God, and heard this title defended by the most learned men of Rome, who told me that he merits such a title, because he has power not only upon the earth, but likewise over purgatory, and in heaven, and because what ever the Pope absolves in the earth is absolved in heaven, and that they call the Pope God upon earth on account of his power to sanctify and beatify,—when I heard such arguments as these, I understood Paul's words, 'He as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God'; and I could no longer abstain from protesting against such an idolatrous opinion, and exclaimed, The Pope is a man as I am, the Pope is dust of the earth as I am."

Though not yet ready to break away from Rome, he says he continued to apply himself to the Scriptures, and neglected scholastic Theology; wrote several letters to his friends, among whom he now numbered several English gentlemen who were at Rome, and whose acquaintance he had providentially made. Among these he mentions Mr. Drummond, General Macauley, Mr. Hallyburton, and Lord Calthorpe. Of the Pope's Bull against "Baron Wessenberg, a pious and learned man," he observes, "I added that I could not but approve the conduct of the Duke; and that the power of the Court of Rome would surely sink if it did not act with more prudence and meekness. And I reminded them that we now live in the nineteenth century, and not in the eleventh." A worthy suggestion evidently, which Pius IX., as well as Pius VII., might profit by noticing. At Rome also he found two Irish gentlemen, "who," he says, "told me that there were good Christians amongst the Quakers, and the Methodists, and other denominations in England." Continuing to read the Scriptures, and consequently becoming disaffected with the Papacy in ratio with his drinking in the spirit of the Gospel, it was not long before he found his stay in Rome was at his peril. He wrote some letters to his friends, which were intercepted by the Inquisition, and which greatly increased his danger; when suddenly he found himself a prisoner ipso facto, or, to use his own words, "compelled to stay three hours in the house of an advocate of the Inquisition, where I was watched by a little dwarf, without having permission to see any of my friends till the post coach came to the door, about twelve o'clock at night," when he left for Vienna.

December, 1818, finds Wolfe twenty-three years of age, when he enters the Ligorian Convent at Valsainte, Switzerland, still hoping to find what he wished among the Romanists. But the following gives indication of the state of his mind, and that God was eminently qualifying this large-hearted Christian young man for an important work, though leading him in a way he "knew not":—"My health was not good from the first moment that I received the religious habit; the desire of reading the Scriptures returned, and in five months I read the whole of the word of God for the first time in Latin, notwithstanding all the obstacles which they opposed to me. The Rector said to me, 'God will surely condemn you for your obstinate reading of the Scriptures; for Christian virtue consists in obedience to superiors.' I was so afflicted that I could neither eat, drink, or sleep; an internal voice said to me without ceasing, 'Leave this convent, and preach the gospel of Christ to your brethren.' . . . . I employed seven hours daily in teaching the students Latin, Greek, and German; but in the midst of my teaching, the desire of preaching the gospel, not only to my brethren, but likewise to the Mahomedans, kept possession of my heart, and drops of sweat from anguish fell from my face, so that all my pupils observed it." On the one hand was the Church with the Pope; on the other was the Gospel with Christ. Wolfe, like Luther, seeing these were not blended, chose the Gospel and Christ.

June, 1819, finds him with letters of introduction to several gentlemen in London, England. Being favorably received, he was commended to the "London Society for promoting Christianity among the Jews." Set himself to the study of the Oriental languages, under Professor Lee, Cambridge, and subsequently at Stansted. In the [illegible] summer of 1821 he set sail for Jerusalem by way of Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria. Returned to Malta after about eighteen months; from whence he sailed for Palestine the second time in the beginning of 1823; since which he has traveled more miles, perhaps, and preached in more different languages, than any other living missionary of the cross of Christ. His labors as Missionary have been, according to his published Journals, (to which we are indebted for these items,) "in Egypt, Palestine, on the Red Sea, Mesopotamia, the Crimea, Constantinople, throughout the Ottoman Empire, in Armenia, Persia, Khorrosaun, Toorkestaun, Bokhara, Balkh, Cabool in Affghanistaun, the Himmalayah Mountains, Cashmere, Hindoostaun, the Coast of Abyssinia, Yemen, and Thibet," beside traveling and preaching in Holland, Scotland, and Ireland, and to some extent in the United States of America.

We have already conceived some idea of this man's robust Christianity and self-devotion to Christ, together with his high attainments as a scholar and linguist; and it only remains for us in this place to notice a few incidents in his missionary life as illustrations of his Christian zeal, independence and faithfulness in proclaiming the coming of the Messiah. A Journalist has said, "No individual has, perhaps, given greater publicity to the doctrine of the second coming of the Lord Jesus Christ than has this well known missionary to the world. Wherever he goes, he proclaims the approaching advent of the Messiah in glory." Of his design he says:—"It was my earnest desire to make known to my brethren of the Jewish nation Jesus Christ, the Son of God and rightful heir to David's throne; whose kingdom shall extend itself from the rising of the sun to the going down thereof; and, encouraged by the example of St Paul (Rom. 15 : 25), to preach the tidings of salvation in those places where the pure light of the Gospel does not shine."—M.

"Thrilling and Instructive Developments."

This is the title of the coming work by Elder (late Abbe) M. B. Czechowski. Thrilling indeed, and wonderful almost beyond belief, were not the truthfulness of the author established beyond a doubt; and certainly most instructive. Tears have flowed from mine own eyes as I followed, in imagination, the hunted fugitive through woods and wilds, and marked the traces of his bleeding feet amid the snow-filled ravines of the Carpathean mountains, as he fled before the destroyer of liberty and light.

Ten years ago Mr. Czechowski (whom all true christians might gladly call "brother") landed in New York and became attached to the Baptist church, among many of whose ministers he is held in great affection and respect, and was assigned a mission along the U. S. and Canada line. He has now a firm and ardent faith in the fulfillment of prophecy and the literal and speedy coming of Christ.

Very soon (say in two weeks) those who desire it may have an opportunity of reading his deeply interesting experience as a Roman Catholic priest, and the trials which beset him in his anxious search after a pure gospel. A further notice will be given the friends when the book is ready and the price determined on.

The Maine Mission Funds.

Although our mission work has thus far prospered finely, under the blessing of God, and bids fair to sustain itself when once placed on proper footing for its work, yet it is duty to notify its supporters and friends of its condition and wants, that they may calculate and act according to the necessity of the case. We have purchased a team at an expense of one hundred dollars. I have paid out about forty dollars more than I have collected, and borrowed the money to do so. I have also pledged myself for thirty dollars more, which I must soon pay. I am not a man of money, nor able to earn much. I am treasurer and chairman of the Mission Board, and am therefore obligated to take a responsible part, and should also report progress. Will the brethren who wish to aid the mission, send in their mites to replenish the treasury, and relieve me? We shall soon need a wagon. How shall we get it?

Inquiries.

BRN. GRANT AND MORGAN:—I have a few questions to ask; as I am being questioned almost daily concerning the title "Reverend," as used in the Crisis.

Is it right to apply, as a title, the word "Reverend" to preachers?

2. Is it right to assume it?
3. Does it savor of humility?
4. Did Jesus or his apostles assume it themselves, or apply it to others?

I do not wish to find fault, but this is a source of grief to many of the brethren and sisters; and can it not be dispensed with as well as not? Brethren, I mean to co-operate with you in the great work of the Lord, and not complain to others about you, but tell you what I think. Do not think that I am opposed to you. I am with [illegible]

To the Friends.—Removal.

Dear Bro. Grant:—Allow me to say through your columns that, after many months of prayerful inquiry as to the will of God and the path of duty, I have concluded to remove to Boston. As this may be news to you, and as I have only to-day come to this conclusion, I will give some reasons why I think it may be the will of God that I do so.

Two years ago, when my health was shattered by exposure, labor, anxiety, and personal abuse in Rochester, N. Y., I found that my congested lungs could not endure the exceedingly trying air of that locality, and the chilling lake winds that are so mortal to persons of consumptive tendencies. By the good providence of God, and the kindness of friends, whose deeds I shall not soon forget, and who I pray may not lose their reward, I was provided with a resting place in Providence, which city received my preference on account of the very mild climate and general healthfulness of the location. I accordingly removed thither, and was associated in labor there with my beloved Bro. Joseph D. Brown, with the understanding that I was under no obligation to stay except I chose, and they were under no obligation to pay me further than they chose. I have accordingly remained there till now, with some benefit to my health, and not entirely without fruit among the people. I have, however, preached there but little, as I have felt it duty to labor largely in new or neglected fields, and I have endeavored to "occupy" till the Master shall come.

My publishing and writing during the last two years speaks for itself. I have not done what I desired, but what I could. May God have mercy upon me an unprofitable servant. For the last year or two I have been laboring to free myself from the work of publishing entirely, that I might preach the word without distraction, and escape some of the labor which was too much for my strength. I at one time made arrangements for the issue of my books by a New York publishing house, and hoped to have transferred my tract issues to the "Christian Publication Society," and then I could have roamed among the healthful scenes of the country, and sought over hills and vales the lost sheep that are scattered in the wilderness. Failing, however, to relieve myself from the publication of tracts, I am thrown back once more into my old position, preaching and publishing as usual, until some other way shall be opened. During all the past nine or ten years in which I have been engaged in the publication of books and tracts, I have never been able to have my work done in the vicinity of home. Hence I have probably traveled hundreds or thousands of miles, and been absent from home months every year, simply because I could not get my work done at home, and had to visit New York or Philadelphia for that purpose. In addition to this, I have traveled and preached so largely that I have had but a very few weeks in a year that I could devote to home, to study, or to writing. For some time I have felt if I must continue to publish, I should be obliged to locate myself in some city where I could attend to the manufacture of my books while at home; or else I should go entirely into the country, and rest amid the quiet of rural life.

At length I have decided. If the Lord will, I move to Boston. I have been left free to act in the fear of God. I have had no calls from any churches, no salaries to lose or gain, no pledges, subscriptions, or anything else to depend upon but God. I trust I have not mistaken my duty. I am not pledged, bought, bargained for, hired, mortgaged, or owned by anybody but Jesus my Lord. I know I incur an increase of expense in my removal, but I trust that God's providence will supply all my needs. I shall yet travel and preach when and where duty may call and strength permit, and trust I shall still be as before bound to no sect, or clique, or party, but "a companion of all them that fear God," a christian, a mere christian, and nothing more; believing that he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother. I purpose, if it please God, to rest a little, and hope that my health will continue to improve as much as heretofore. I propose also to demonstrate, what I have long preached, that books and tracts can be published at much cheaper rates than is generally supposed, and that I can do it if I can but have a favorable location and a fair chance. I have already undersold the tract societies on tracts, but I propose to do more soon.

To the brethren at the West and elsewhere I would say, I had thought of visiting you the coming year. Whether I can do so now is with the Lord. But I will try and make some "cartridges" for you, and send you tracts as usual, with or without price, and that in larger quantities than before, if the good Lord so provide and permit. Be sure my sympathies are with you, and I shall be glad to see the day when I can go forth in vigorous strength and health to preach the gospel of the kingdom of God. I trust our time of toil will not be long, and ere we are ready the Master may be upon us. O that in that day we may be found worthy to see our Savior's face with gladness, and enter into our Master's joy. Let us gird ourselves for labor. Let us work—not for self, not for sect, but for God, for Christ, and for humanity. May God give us large hearts, full of divine love, and by the inworking of his Spirit, cause us to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling, "according to the working that worketh in us mightily."

I must beg the indulgence of many friends whose welcome letters I have no time as yet to answer; and must request that in future they will direct their correspondence to me at Boston, Mass. I remain, dear brethren and sisters, yours in hope of eternal life. H. L. Hastings.

Campmeeting.

As some of our brethren think a Campmeeting further east than Wilbraham would serve many better in these hard times, Bro. Munger proposes the first Monday in June for this meeting, and I think very favorably of the time. New Market Junction, N. H., is the place, if we can get it. What say brethren? Is there any objection? L. Boutell.

The Resurrection.

Bro. Grant:—We hear but little of late upon this consummation of the christian's hope. We wish our preachers would say more on the subject, it is so well calculated to cheer the hearts of the weary pilgrims in their lonely journey. All our hopes depend on Christ and the resurrection. In these days of fables, some are turning away from the hope of the apostle, "that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust."

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. Munger.

Bro. Grant:—I have just returned from bombarding that strongly fortified place,—Plainville, Ct. I thought the news of success would be cheering to one that made the first attack. I commenced Thursday, March 13th, with little effect through the week. On Sunday, a shell burst and wounded a number. Being pressed to remain three days longer, I consented, and held the meetings in the hall. Thursday, the Methodist house was open, and three rose for prayers,—all members of the Congregationalist Church.

Friday evening, three were blessed. The news spread like fire. Saturday, two Baptists confessed their faith. I had to take up my appointment at Hartford, and stay over the second Sabbath. Bro. Morgan sent to see if the Baptists would lend their baptizing dresses. They were willing, saying they had not been used for years, and needed wetting.

Sunday forenoon another bomb burst, wounding others. At one o'clock we went to the water for baptism, near the depot. There was a general turnout, you may depend. I baptized five, and the last one was a Congregationalist sister. As soon as she was resurrected, she shouted, and lost her strength. God baptized her in such a manner that her face shone like an angel from glory. I staid in the water, and let the congregation look at her. You better believe she was handsome. This sight set us all to praising God. When she could walk, we started for shore,—she warning the people, and shouting. When I got ashore, I pronounced the benediction. At that moment, a man jumped down from the bank, saying, "Hold on! I ca'n't stand this," taking his coat off at the same time, and coming to me crying, "Baptize me." I led him down and baptized him. God blessed him, and he came out glorifying God, saying to his old comrades, "You must all come to it to be saved." This was the heaviest bomb yet. He had two daughters and a son. One had a family,—all crying. God worked, you may depend. This man had on his best Sunday suit, as he did not think of being baptized. He had been sprinkled when he joined the church. Hundreds went away solemnly convicted.

In the evening there were more than could get into the house. There was a solemn feeling.

From Sr. F. B. W. Chapman.

Dear Brothers and Sisters:—It rejoices our hearts from week to week to hear of the prosperity of Zion in other places; would that the children of God would arise from their slumbers in this place, and use their spiritual weapons in striving to save sinners from destruction.

I still enjoy the remembrance of the week I passed last Spring at the Conference in Boston. It was a great refreshment to me. I can truly say Amen to dear Brother Brewer,—

"I'm growing old."

All my dear children sleep in Jesus, and my heart's desire is to be ready for the resurrection morning, when

"The morning stars shall sing,—
The ransomed find a home;
O! then shall I be young,
From mortal ills be free,
With Christ my living Head
Share immortality."

I sympathise with what dear Bro. Henry Pratt sang at the prayer meetings last Spring,—

"For the exiled captives sigh for home,
There's a wail on every breeze;
Let the reapers come with a harvest song,
And bind up the golden sheaves."

Obituary Notices.

Fell asleep in Jesus, March 16th, 1862, Benj. T. Weaver, of Palmer, Three Rivers, Mass., aged sixty-one years, three months and seventeen days.

Father (for such relation he was to the writer) was born in Palmer, in the year 1800—was converted to God in the year 1831, and joined the Baptist Church in Hardwick with his wife, where they remained until 1844, when they identified themselves with the Advent body. He has ever been a consistent christian, a living epistle, known and read of all men; not conforming to the world, but transformed by the renewing of his mind. His main theme was the coming of the Lord. He was a firm believer in the sleep of the saints and of the resurrection of the just and unjust, and longed for the time to come when he should behold the face of his loved companion, who fell asleep in Jesus in the spring of 1854. At that time there were ten children left without a mother, the youngest but three years old. All have not been together since that time until the occasion of their father's funeral. He has left ten children (five of whom are married) and a wife who deeply mourn his loss, but we mourn not as those who have no hope, feeling confident that if we are faithful and endure unto the end, we shall then see father and mother, not with the pale face we last looked upon, but with immortal youth and beauty, never more to die. Glory to God! Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly!

Father was brought to North Dana, where we took the last look of our dear parent. Bro. R. Wendell gave us a comforting discourse from 1 Thess. 4. 18, at the Union Church.

Farewell, then, our dearest father,
Till the last loud trump shall sound;
Then with joy we shall behold thee,
Though thou sleepest in the ground.

Geo. A. Streeter.

In Burrville, Ct., Feb. 16th, of diphtheria, at the residence of Chauncey E. Messenger, Joel W. Northrup, aged twenty-nine years. [On Feb. 19th, of diphtheria, Edward Wells, son of Chauncey E. Messenger, aged two years and three months.

On March 6th, of diphtheria, Caroline A., wife of Chauncey E. Messenger, aged twenty-one years.

On March 16th, of diphtheria, Alfred Allen, son of Chauncey E. Messenger, aged eleven months and sixteen days.

The above all died at the same house. The father is the only survivor of a family of five. Bro. Messenger's father and two sisters died of typhoid fever some few years ago at the same house, all within the short space of two weeks and three days.

ON THE DEATH OF THE FAMILY OF CHAUNCEY E. MESSENGER.

A few short, fleeting years have quickly fled,
Since with a father thou wast called to part,
Two sisters, too, were numbered with the dead,
Yet now a heavier grief doth press thy heart.

They all have gone, and thou art left alone,
Thou couldst not stay the fatal shaft of death;
Thy wife, thy children, and the widow's son,
Have fall'n beneath his blasting, with'ring breath.

Thou'rt called to drink of sorrow's bitter cup,
Thy lately joyous home is filled with gloom,
How sudden has thy loving, happy group
Been snatched away to slumber in the tomb.

We would not tell thee not to mourn and weep,
'Twere worse than mockery 'neath thy heavy stroke,
Yet guardian angels strict their vigils keep,
While their dear sacred dust shall rest in hope.

And thou canst meet thy loved ones yet again,
And in a clime more genial far than this,
In that bright world where God himself shall reign,
Where tears shall end in everlasting bliss.

Dervish Pasha, with 16,000 Turks, was moving on the Montenegrin frontier, and the latter were making great preparations to resist.

The Alleanza of Milan publishes the programme of action in Hungary agreed upon between Kossuth, Klapka and Turr. The principal points are the establishment of a constitutional kingdom, with the exclusion of the Hapsburg dynasty, and the civil equality of all the inhabitants of Hungary, and an offensive and defensive alliance between Hungary, Servia, Croatia, and Roumelia.

LATER.

The King of the Belgians is reported to be critically ill.

The steamers Sumter and Tuscarora were still at Gibraltar on the 21st ult.

ITALY.

There are rumors of ministerial modifications at Turin. Various changes are rumored, but nothing confirmed.

A ministerial circular has been issued maintaining the right of Italy to a recognition, asserting that Rome should be the centre of the government, and affirming that a solution of the Venetian question according to the wishes of Italy is necessary for the general peace.

Garibaldi and others had made patriotic speeches in Milan indicative of approaching movements. The former left Milan on the 28, amid the cheers of the people. His tour through Lombardy is for the purpose of stirring up the young men to join volunteer corps.

It is asserted that demonstrations were becoming quite frequent in Venetia, and numerous arrests are reported at Mantua and Venice.

SPAIN.

The Spanish Government has ordered Gen. Prim not to negotiate with Mexico until the troops shall have entered the city of Mexico.

GREECE.

It is asserted that the Greek insurrection is not yet over.

TURKEY.

Six hundred Turkish troops had been surrounded by the insurgents at Crimitza and were obliged to surrender, the insurgents having previously repulsed the troops which came to their rescue.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

St. Louis, April 5. The correspondent of the Republican, writing on board Flag ship Benton, evening of the 3d, says an attempt was made this morning to tow the rebel floating battery to a point where it could command our mortar boats.

A brisk fire was opened by the mortars, and in the course of half an hour the battery was struck several times, splinters being thrown in all directions and several beams displaced.

One shell exploded directly inside of the battery, when it was immediately submerged to the water's edge and towed out of range.

New York, April 6. A dispatch to the Cincinnati Gazette, dated Savannah, Tenn., April 1st, states that the rebel advanced camps at Corinth, where Beauregard is in command, are within six miles of our advance near Pittsburg, and there are but five miles between the pickets of the respective forces at Purdy, where the rebels have four or five regiments. The rebels claim to have a force of 100,000, all told.

On Sunday last, one division of Gen. Buell's army was within a day's march of Savannah.

Reports are in circulation that immediately upon Gen. Halleck's assuming the command in person, four or five corps d'armee will be organized under Generals Grant, Smith, Wallace, Buell and McClernand.

There was now and then a little skirmishing with the rebel batteries at Eastport.

A telegraph to Nashville is in course of construction.

A gentleman from New Albany, Indiana, on Tuesday last, states that on the evening of the 29th ult., the advance of Gen. Buell's army arrived at the Tennessee, opposite Savannah, and commenced crossing the river on Sunday morning, thus forming a junction with Gen. Grant.

Gen. Grant, in the early part of week before last, sent a force to destroy the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, which they accomplished, tearing up ten miles of the track, and thus breaking the connection between the rebel lines. But before Saturday morning the rebels had repaired the track, and were constantly receiving reinforcements of men and munitions via this road at Corinth.

The enemy are said by scouts to be strongly fortified at Corinth and among the hills for sixteen or eighteen miles, toward the National camp at Pittsburg. Their available force is believed to be from 75,000 to 80,000. The united forces of Buell and Grant are sufficient to meet and conquer this large army, and their supply of artillery is superior both in the calibre and number of pieces to that of the enemy.

Edinburg, Va., April 4. Yesterday the enemy unmasked a section of their battery, three-quarters of a mile from our right wing battery, under Capt. Huntington, a mile to the west of the town. Their object was to drive in our pickets beyond Stony Creek, which divides the town, as well as to retard the operations of our bridge-builders. Capt. Huntington shelled them out in very short order.

The positions where the advance batteries now rest, commanding all the elevations beyond Stony Creek, were selected by Gen. Banks amid the hottest fire of the enemy, on Tuesday. They are unassailable by the enemy.

The military force under Gen. Jackson is principally composed of impressed men, who refuse to fight the United States forces. Those from Page and Rockingham counties, have retired to a point between those counties, where they are intrenched, and defy Jackson's attempts to compel them to join him.

Fortress Monroe, April 5. The latest intelligence that we have in relation to the Merrimac is dated at Norfolk, last night. At that time she was coaling up at the Navy Yard, and was expected to come up to-day. She has two new guns on board. It has been reported that Commodore Hollins would command the Merrimac on her next trip, but the name of Capt. Pegram is the last mentioned in that connection.

The Yorktown, Teazer, Jamestown and four other gunboats are at Norfolk.

☞ The six new vessels contracted for with Capt. Ericsson, and which are to be after the model of the Monitor, are to be of superior size and strength, and will possess ample room for the working of the guns and the accommodation of the officers and men. They will have greater speed and will be superior vessels in every respect. It will be remembered that the revolving turret of the Monitor is only eight inches thick, and although it is deemed impregnable to any projectile now in use in any of the navies of the world, yet to guard fully against most or all of the contingencies of the future, the turrets of the new vessels are to be eleven inches in thickness.

Chicago, April 7. A special dispatch from Cairo to the Tribune says: The gunboat Pittsburg ran the blockade of Island No. 10 last night under a terrific fire from the rebel batteries. Four steam transports and five barges were also got through the slough above the Island to New Madrid.

This morning, Gen. Paine, with four regiments and a battery of artillery, crossed the Mississippi nearer to the Kentucky shore. Subsequently the divisions of General Haunber and Stanley crossed, also Gen. Granger, with his cavalry. They are now strongly posted, and ready for any emergency. It is believed here that forty hours will decide the fate of Island No. 10.

New Madrid, April 7. Gen. Pope has just landed. Gen. Paine's division is on the Tennessee shore. The whole movement has been a grand success. The whole army will be moved over to-day. A large force of infantry and artillery have crossed the Mississippi within the last six hours. Everything is working well.

Washington, April 7. The following is a summary of the intelligence received by the War Department up to ten o'clock last night:

Yesterday the enemy's works were carefully examined by Gen. McClellan, and found to be very strong, the approaches difficult, the enemy in force, and water batteries at York and Gloucester were said to be much increased.

Another dispatch received at half past ten this morning, states that Yorktown will fall, but not without a siege of two or three days.

On the afternoon of Sunday, Ship Point had been taken and our gunboats had shelled out the water batteries. All the fortified places of importance before Yorktown had been taken at every point.

The position of the rebels is a strong one. Their fortifications extend some two miles in length, and mount heavy guns. The ground in front of their heaviest guns is low and swampy, making it utterly impassable.

The Daily News eulogizes Gen. McClellan's tactics, thinks the crisis is approaching, and believes that the Confederates, although retreating, have prepared a field for a great battle.

To Mary Mayhew.

Long years ago I loved thee,
Sister Mary, ere thy feet
Had pressed affliction's furnace;
Ere the chalice sweet,
Filled to the brim with nature's
Choicest gifts, affection,
Had been dashed to earth by Him
Who in love gives correction.

And when thy summer glided,
Sister Mary, into deep,
Rich autumn, still I pleaded—
Father, guide thy helpless feet;
But when thy husband wasted,
When of thy babe bereft,
And little Charles had tasted
The bitterness of death;

Oh! then I wept for thee,
Sister Mary, while I prayed,
Let not this fearful sea
Fall too darkly on thy head.
Thank God! through that wild storm
Thy ship by faith held fast,
For deep within the vail
Thy anchor, hope, was cast.

I still have tears to spare,
Sister Mary, freely given,
And with thy burning prayer
Will reach to God in heaven.
Oh! think God knoweth best;
As much resigned to bear,
To live or die, as was expressed
In dying Charlie's prayer.

For the Crisis.

God loves his Children.

Dear brethren, God loves his children, in trial and in temptation; he loves in affliction and sorrow, and when assailed by enemies; he loves them under all circumstances in life, and the word of the Lord says, "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in time of trouble." Psa. 46 : 1. Truly God is good to his children, and well did the beloved John exclaim, "He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love."—John 4 : 8. "Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another."—John 4 : 11. Notwithstanding it is a day of trial, it is also a day of pity and love from God to all of his children. He has shielded them on all sides with direct commands and promises, and all that follow his directions in these times of peril, and lay hold of the promises, are safe by obeying the commands of God.

Brethren and sisters, are not some of you spoken evil of falsely, and by those false accusations tempted to revenge on others for their malicious conduct? O! do it not; if you do, you disobey your Lord and Master. Avenge not that trial; for God loves and pities you in that very trial, and wants you to obey his commands. Will you hear them? Will you obey them? Stop, and see if you are not breaking covenant with the Lord. Did you not promise to obey the commandments in serving him all your life, when God pardoned your sins? Yea, it must be you did, by his grace assisting, and that has failed no man that trusts in God. Now, then, hear and obey. "Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves, but give place unto wrath; for it is written, Vengeance is mine, I will repay, saith the Lord." Let us be careful and trust implicitly in this promised help, yea, trust yourself and your enemies, and commit both to the Lord, and be assured you will be astonished at the good hand of Providence in thwarting the purpose of your enemies.

God in love to his children has to be their avenger, "and a very present help in time of trouble." Is there more that we can have? Yea, if you obey and submit to go through this simple and blessed crucible of being helped in time of trouble, and of being defended and avenged as God has promised, then you will have the addition of "grace and glory" that is promised "to them that walk uprightly." Aye, tempted ones, obey and endure, for the warfare must be accomplished in us in the various trials in our journey of tribulation to the kingdom of patience in Jesus Christ our blessed Lord. The apostle James says, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation; for when he is tried, he shall receive a crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him."

Truly God does love his children, and as truly requires us to love him, and also to love one another. "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. Fear ye not, therefore; ye are of more value than many sparrows."—Matt. 10 : 29–31. "Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I confess before my Father."—Matt. 10 : 32. "If ye love me, keep my commandments," says Jesus. "Blessed are the peace-makers, for they shall be called the children of God." "Blessed are ye when men shall revile you, and persecute you, and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely, for my sake. Rejoice, and be exceeding glad: for great is your reward in heaven; for so persecuted they the prophets which were before you." Matt. 5 : 9–12. Let not Satan nor self switch you out of the narrow path. We are not to revile, but rejoice, for our reward is great, even eternal life.

You are not only to commend the care of your enemies to God, but Christ says, "But I say unto you, love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you." Matt. 5 : 44. Here is something that looks very crossing to human nature, and no doubt was to crucify contrary to nature, that we might become subject to grace, that grace might reign in us by Jesus Christ to the glory of God the Father. Now I would say, by exclaiming with the beloved apostle John, "Finally, brethren, farewell; be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace, and the God of love and peace be with you." Yours in hope of eternal life.

For the Crisis.

The Cause in a part of Maine.

Having spent the last eighteen months in the Northwestern part of Maine, I thought it would probably be interesting to some of the readers of the Crisis to learn something of the cause in that region. I commenced my labors in August, 1860, at East Stoneham. Bro. Wellcome had been here two trips, preaching five discourses each; and was well received. I have preached there more than at any other place, and while I have been there, Bro. Wellcome has made two visits, and Bro. Haggett one. The community, generally, are well instructed in the truth; their doors are open to those who preach it, and they have shown a commendable liberality in its support. But I am fearful that some of these friends will be satisfied with being friends merely, instead of enjoying with us the "blessed hope." The truth has been wounded here "in the house of its friends," and while the wound remains fresh, I fear most people will "pass by." At West Stoneham, there are the families of Bro. Paul and his son-in-law, who are striving together for the hope of the gospel. They love the truth, and are ready, out of meeting or in, to give a reason for their hope, and speak to the praise of God. I trust that they will, by the help of the Lord, be able to continue unto his coming, rooted and grounded in the truth, and ready to hail him with joy.

At West Lovell and Stowe, there is a company of brethren who deserve to be called a "model church." They have kept up their prayer meetings, two each week, and make it a privilege instead of a burden to attend them. They number about ten, all active members, having added about half of the number since they started the prayer meetings a few months ago. Nor has this success been through any aid from without. It has rather been, in spite of the bitterest opposition to their progress. The secret of their success lies in their earnest devotion to the cause and truth of God. They do not go to meeting hoping their brethren will kindle a good fire that they may go away refreshed, but they come with "a mind to work," desirous of speaking a word of praise to God, and encouragement to their brethren. Their testimonies are scriptural, and are marked by that freshness and fervor which does the hearer good. They are of the "poor of this world, but rich in faith." Each of the above places will be dependent upon preaching from abroad now, as I have left the State; and I hope they will be remembered by brethren generally. The Crisis is taken in each place, and they will consult it for appointments. I could not insure you great pay, and I am not sure as they need the labors of those who seek it. E. Stoneham is twelve miles south from Bethel, and sixteen miles south-west from Paris. West Stoneham is seven miles still further west, and West Lovell four miles further in the same direction.

At Bryant's Pond, the brethren, few in number, have been refreshed and strengthened by the labors of Bro. Grant. The families of Brn. Whitman and Bryant are holding on, and keep up their regular prayer meetings. At Franklin Plantation, ten miles north-east of Bryant's Pond, there is a company of brethren who have been led into truth through the help of Brn. Abbott and Haggett. I have preached to them a few times. They are rejoicing in the truth, and love to hear it from the servants of God. They take the Crisis also. I trust the preaching brethren will remember them.

At Livermore (Britan's Mills), there is Bro. Haggett's family, and one or two others. They usually meet with the brethren in Hartford, near by, a company raised up principally by Bro. H., though nourished much by Bro. Hanscomb's labors. They are striving to hold on in the midst of trials and reverses. There are some good children here, who love the Lord, and are loved of him. Bro. Haggett has been so feeble in health during the last nine months, that he has been unable to preach but a few discourses, and those with especial care for his lungs. I think we have reason to hope, however, that he is now improving, with good prospects of a permanent recovery. At So. Livermore, the brethren started in the cause about three years ago, under the labors of Brn. Hanscomb and Haggett, with a company of somewhat more than thirty brethren, and apparently good prospects; but they have been sifted and tried to an extent beyond the power of dross to endure, and though less, are a shining few. Bro. Hanscomb preaches to them once in a few weeks, but is laboring most of the time in new fields adjoining.

At Wayne, there are a few families of brethren, mostly young in the faith, the fruits of Bro. Hanscomb's labors, principally. He preaches to them regularly, and they are growing in numbers and in grace. He has opened a new field, and got a good interest started in another part of the town. The Lord is blessing his labors, and preserving his health, under the most earnest efforts to spread the truth.

At Vienna, Bro. H. B. Sevey's residence, there is a company of brethren, increased somewhat through the late Conference there and the efforts which followed, who are at present especially earnest and active in their devotions; and they seem as useful as they are active in bringing others to Christ. May the Lord bless them in their efforts, and give them grace to hold on till the Master returns. Bro. Sevey's health has been poor for some months, insomuch as to forbid his preaching, without endangering his health. But, like Bro. Haggett, he has preached occasionally, and generally, like him, to the injury of his health.

Go to Books?

No, you needn't, save one. God's book is full of holiness, the inner life, the higher christian walks, from Genesis to Revelations. Enoch, who "walked with God three hundred years," understood practically this blessed doctrine of perfect love, or loving God supremely, with all his heart. The patriarch Abraham breathed the same consecrated spirit. So did Moses, Joshua and Caleb, who "followed the Lord wholly." The holy prophets Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, lived by faith in God constantly, mounted up as on eagle's wings, joyfully.

Christ preached it on the mount: in his whole life, every thought, word, act, every moving muscle was holy, holy, holy! The apostles, the early disciples, while waiting in that "upper room," received this power from on high, tongues of fire! Peter, who a little while before, was fearful, tremulous, ignorant, self-conceited, unbelieving, now, after the pentecostal shower, the gracious outpouring, was bold as a lion, his soul was on fire, he taught as one having authority, not as the scribes. He poured in the liquid flame of God's truth, flashingly! His enemies were confounded, sinners by thousands were pricked to the heart, and cried out, "Lord, save, we perish." Turn to the epistles of Paul, Peter, James and John, sanctification on sanctification is taught overshadowingly in every epistle.

"I beseech you therefore, brethren," says Paul, "by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." "Rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, in every thing give thanks, for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." "Quench not the Spirit, despise not prophesyings, prove all things, hold fast that which is good. Abstain from all appearance of evil, and may the God of peace sanctify you wholly. And I pray God, your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless, until the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is he who calleth you, who also will do it." Again: "Reckon yourselves dead indeed unto sin, but alive to God through Jesus Christ, our Lord." "Knowing this that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin: for he that is dead is freed from sin." "Now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life."

"There is, therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit." "Ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God." Paul says of himself, "I am crucified with Christ." He exhorted his brethren to bring every thought to the obedience of Christ. He prayed that Christ might dwell in their hearts by faith, that being rooted and grounded in love, they might comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length and depth and height, and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that they might be filled with all the fulness of God. See Eph. 3d.

We might fill a volume of similar passages from the Bible, proving conclusively that in this life the will of God is even our sanctification. This is clear as the noon-day sun. Besides, we are compassed about with clouds of witnesses in modern days. The Moravians, Madame Guyon, Fenelon, Kempis, Wesley, Fletcher, Carvosso, Bramwell, Hester Ann Rodgers, Lady Maxwell, the wife of President Edward, James B. Taylor, are among the number of very many shining lights, clear witnesses of perfect love, who, "though dead, yet speaketh." Wherever this blessed doctrine of "holiness to the Lord" is preached clearly, definitely, scripturally, persistently, embraced heartily, lived out, exhibited practically in every-day life, there the cause of God prevails mightily, backsliders are reclaimed, sinners are awakened, born into the kingdom, young converts multiply, are sanctified, built up in their most holy faith, and iniquity hides its deformed head. Beloved, is it not so? So let it be everywhere. "Be ye holy, for I am holy," saith the Lord.

"No more will converts then be few,
But numerous as the drops of dew,
Which silently distilled at night,
Are brought to view by morning light;
A host to [illegible] our raptured sight,
And all the earth with glory bright."

My Bible.

Tune.—Lyre, page 168.

More precious than rubies, or diamonds, or gold,
Its value is boundless, its price is untold;
Let all earth's gooderments, if need be, depart,
But my Bible—this treasure, I'll bind to my heart.

'T is lighted by radiant beams from on high,
And, gilded with glory, each page meets my eye:
Most rapturous visions it brings to my sight,
This dear hallowed Bible, my chosen delight.

'Mid tempests that rise my frail bark to assail
On life's fitful ocean, my strength does not fail;
So firm is my anchor I faint not nor fear,
My Bible speaks loudly, "O be of good cheer!"

Though fearful commotions are heard all around,
And evils unnumbered o'er earth may abound;
Though clouds of thick darkness seem brooding in air,
I turn to my Bible, and light gleams out there.

It points to a "rest for the weary," a home
For those who like pilgrims and strangers here roam,
Where war's dismal sounds never fall on the ear,—
My Bible reveals it most fully and clear.

Then offer me not earthly glitter or gain,
Its honors and pleasures I only disdain,
When brought to compete with the prize of my heart,—
My Bible! O never with this let me part!

Correspondence.

From Sr. A. Mussey.

Bro. Grant:—My soul is stirred within me while I take my pen to write. My Lord is coming. And while I see before me a slumbering world and a lukewarm church going to judgment, I feel to cry aloud and spare not to lift my warning voice, whether men will hear or forbear. O, the judgment! how it thrills through my soul as in days that are past, and the word was like fire shut up in my bones,—"Behold he cometh!" The sound comes teeming over the blue waters—the final hour is nearing, in which every man's case will be decided. The watchmen cry, "The morning cometh!" Let me echo back the sound—the morning cometh, and also the night! O! poor sinner, fly, fly to Christ for refuge, before the night of sorrow and gloom shall overtake you. The Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity. O! seek a shelter from the storm, that you may be hid in the day of the Lord's anger, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth. O! lukewarm professor, arouse from thy slumbers, lest the Lord should come and find thee sleeping, and thou be spued out of his mouth. God help you.

As I took up the last Crisis my eye lit upon the first article—"Our Position"; and as I read, my heart kept filling up and gushing forth praise and thanksgiving to God; that I could understand the times in which we are living, and that my watchword was, Onward, forward to victory and the crown! And as I read, "Now is the hour of triple strife—strife of heaven, earth, and hell; now is the fourth, the last watch,"—the Spirit of the everlasting God came upon me. Light shone upon my pathway anew in the past; and a brilliant light is shining all around me at the present time. Morning dawns. Arise! Arise!

"Wake the song of jubilee,
Let it echo o'er the sea!"

Let me echo back the sound, Jesus comes, the morning dawns! As the sounds come from my Brn. at home o'er the deep blue sea, "Tis the morning watch," let me echo back the sound—Morning watch, and the day dawn, and the day-star is rising. Praise the Lord!

Beloved Brn. and Srs., I am somewhat lonely now, but trust I shall soon be gathered with you. I am laboring in this place almost alone, but I have God and his blessed word, which make me strong. Opposition rages, but some will hear, some are interested, a few believe. The Devil is alive, and is doing what he can to destroy the seed sown; this is his business; but his time is short. O that men and women would realize the worth of salvation, and break away from the snare of the enemy! I never felt so willing to suffer for the truth's sake as now; never so willing to have my name cast out as evil among men for Jesus' sake. A small place of worship has been fitted up here to hold up the light on the coming of the Lord, the judgment, the resurrection, and all the doctrines of the Bible as we believe them. O, let us work while the day lasts—enter anew into the vineyard—let our light shine; for the morning cometh and also the night! Let us be ready to hail the rising glory.

Hillsburgh, N. S., Feb. 22, '62.

From Bro. T. K. Allen.

Dear Bro. Grant:—I wish to say to the brethren scattered abroad, who are readers of the Crisis, especially those in Philadelphia, New York, and Minnesota, among whom I have labored and associated, that I am holding fast the profession of my faith, without wavering, in the near approach of God's everlasting kingdom. I believe it is nigh, "even at the doors." But first of all, I am looking for a time of trouble, spoken of in Daniel,—the time of Jacob's trouble, that he shall be saved out of,—the hour of temptation, that shall come upon all the world to try them, from which the saints shall be kept; which, together with war, famine, and pestilence, shall cause great desolation in the earth. This work of judgment will be short, at the end of which shall be fulfilled that scripture, "What desolations he hath made in the earth"; and in another place, "There shall be few men left." Then the Lord Jesus Christ shall come from heaven,—this same Jesus—the Lord himself—to be glorified in his saints, and admired in all them that believe.

I have been preaching these glorious truths for the last few years, in the southern part of Minnesota: an effectual door of hearing has been opened, and, in some places, we have formed churches, and minister to them statedly the gospel of the kingdom; but the laborers are very few, and there are many places where the people desire to hear the truth, but we cannot go for want of time. Our continual prayer is, Lord, send forth laborers into thy vineyard, to give the household meat in due season; men of a clean heart and sound mind, having an indwelling God in the soul, so that they can in meekness instruct those that oppose the truth.

The Lord has recently called out, to labor with us in word and doctrine, our beloved Sister Rowel, formerly of the Christian church, who has been a very efficient helper. She is a woman of exemplary christian character, of strong mental faculties; and as a public minister of Jesus Christ, "a workman that needeth not to be ashamed."

And now I want to say in conclusion, let us, who are looking for the coming King, "depart from iniquity"; "let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit." O let us give "all diligence," that we may be found of God in peace, "without spot," and "unrebukable" in love.

Winona, Minn., Feb. 20, '62.

From W. H. Mitchell.

Bro. Grant:—While looking over the "Union Bible Dictionary" a short time since, I was forcibly struck with the contrast of the account therein given of David's death, and that given in the Bible. The following is that to which I refer:—"Just before his death . . . David resigned the crown to Solomon, . . . summoned the influential men of the nation and delivered his farewell address. And then in the year B. C. 1014 exchanged, as we have reason to believe, a corruptible crown for an incorruptible one, and a state of severe probation and discipline for the glory and blessedness of the heavenly world." p. 200.

Now for the account given us in the Bible. 1 Kings 2 : 10,—"So David slept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David." Acts 2 : 29,—"Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day." Verse 34,—"For David is not ascended into the heavens, but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou on my right hand until I make thy foes thy footstool." Chap. 13 : 36,—"For David, after he had served his own generation by the will of God, fell on sleep and was laid unto his fathers, and saw corruption."

How surprising that men professing to believe the Bible should, in the face of such definite expressions as these, make such statements; but many have so far departed from the simplicity of the word, that very vague are their ideas of the future state.

For the Crisis.

"The Coming Struggle."

A RAY FROM THE "LAMP."

Shall the "head" suffer such anguish as the following language seems to indicate:—"Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani," in closing up his career in this world, and shall the "body" be caught up without a pang?

When I observed the above heading in the Crisis of Feb. 13th, 1861, viz., "The Coming Struggle between the Church and the powers of darkness, showing the mission and destiny of Spiritualism," I caught at it as the hungry man catches at the first intimation that his dinner is ready; and why? Because the providence of God had forced upon me the stern reality that this "struggle" had already begun, and that I had been in it for the past nine months; therefore, I was prepared for this response from his word. To me his providence spoke first, and I was listening for the response; and when I heard it, I knew the voice, bless the Lord!

As His providence had prepared us for the sound, "Behold he cometh," by removing us from the bustle of the crowded city (Cincinnati), to the solitude of a western village, and then sent us twelve miles further into the interior, to the house of father Chaplin, to hear our aged Bro. and Sr. tell of Jesus' coming, to hear their son, Bro. S. A. C., open to us the Scriptures on this glowing subject, until our hearts burned within us; so has his providence removed us from that accumulating circle of "loved ones," and again made us strangers in the East, amid a community of Mystics, that we might be prepared for his voice still further upon the things that are coming upon the earth. O! I do bless him for all the way in which he hath led us.

As in the first instance we accepted the joyful tidings, and thus kept in the wake of God's providence, so has been our experience in the second. It seemed just what we wanted, in just the right time,—a ray from the "Lamp" to read the page of Providence. As in the first case we accepted the message without knowing all the responsibilities involved; so in the second we have walked out, trusting in the future to shed light upon the path of faith, and to correct what may be wrong in the first blocking out.

Again. After twenty years' experience in the first message, we only bless God that we ever believed the good news; so, after nearly one year's experience in the second, we bless God for the light it has given us. For twelve weeks, we read a No. of this article every Lord's day evening, at the close of our union prayer meetings, and never was the sustaining power of God's grace more apparent to us than on these occasions. Our congregations increased, and a boldness in Christ was granted us—bless his name. Not since the messages of '43 and '44 have I so cut loose from the world, received such an impetus in the narrow way, as in reading and believing this article. Justice to my God, justice to the article, justice to its author, and justice to my fellow-pilgrims, impels this from me. Beloved, why this silence upon this article? Is it unworthy a line from one of you? Do we stand alone in its behalf? If so, I confess I am not ashamed of my company. If its main position be only a Goliath defying the armies of the living God, then let some of our many ruddy Davids step forward with sling and stone in hand, (the Spirit and word of God,) and slay it at once; but, if it be the curtain lifted that reveals our rising foe, let us look at him in its light, and prepare to meet him. For myself, I am satisfied this Moses is not placed in the bulrushes a moment too soon. Let the king's daughters step forward now with their treasure, and do their part in rearing him up, that he may do his part in the great deliverance to be wrought for Israel.

This work is all ready for the press, as has been announced in the Crisis and Harbinger, but friendless and penniless it lies in its little ark, where it must perish if some deliverer is not raised up for it soon. Like little Miriam, I have been watching the ark to see who would come to uncover it first; but seeing no signs of a move in that direction, I begin to fear for its life, and therefore I cry out, Who will come with me to the rescue?

Riddle.

"Take the name of that virtue which the wise man has found;
The name of that period to which all are bound;
Take the name of the worst and most formidable evil,
And the name of that virtue which doth the law fulfill;
Take the point of the compass from which the sages were directed,
And that season of life when sin ought to be deserted;
The initials of these, if rightly them prepare,
The name of a wise and pious clergyman declare.
The name of this clergyman you will to me impart,
Indelibly 't is written on many a pious heart."

BRO. GRANT.—The following I found in an old Methodist hymn book. I have altered them a trifle. I think they can be very appropriately dedicated to the memory of our beloved Bro. HOWELL. You can insert them in the Crisis, if you think best.

M. L. PRATT

In a lone silent spot, 'neath the sad drooping willow,
With the grass and the vine matted over his grave,
A soldier of Jesus lies pressing death's pillow,
Whose watchword was love, and whose aim was to save.
He sleeps there in peace, no dangers can harm him,
Though battles may rage and the wild tempest roar;
His rest is unbroken, no sound can alarm him,
In quiet he slumbers, his conflicts are o'er.

The Cross was his standard, its beauties he blended,
He offered salvation and bade all rejoice,
But his work is now finished, his battles are ended,
His labors are o'er and hushed is his voice.
His form, cold and still, in its damp bed is sleeping,
The eye is grown dim that with lustre once shone,
And friends mourning for him in sadness are weeping,
And the teardrop of sorrow falls on his lone tomb.

But soon to the slumb'rer command will be given
To cast off the fetters that cling to him now,
An army of angels shall bear him to glory,
And garlands immortal be twined round his brow;
While anthems of praises around him are ringing,
His body all glorious in brightness comes forth;
While millions of ransomed hosannas are singing,
He'll enter his home in the blessed new earth.

The Opening of the Seventh Seal.

NUMBER SEVEN.

"And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour."—Rev. 8: 1.

Silence can reveal nothing when no vision is presented to the eye; but a period of silence under certain circumstances may suggest awfully solemn thoughts. The opening of the sixth seal presented a scene awfully solemn—the end of the Jewish dispensation, and the fall of that people or generation whom the Lord called to be a chosen generation (2 Pet. 2: 9,) but stumbling, fell and were broken. The silence at this period may suggest a similar fall of all the unbelieving at the end of the Christian dispensation, of which the fall of the Jewish nation was fearfully typical. "Let us therefore fear, lest a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it; and let us labor to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief."—Heb. 4: 1, 11.

Commentators differ widely in their views in relation to this seventh seal. Smith says "it was to contain all the trumpets, or seven successive judgments, which would occupy the time following the sixth seal, or from about the middle of the fourth century, to the battle of the great day, and the Millennium." Scott says, "Most expositors agree, that the seven seals represent the interval between the apostles' time and the reign of Constantine, but that the seven trumpets are designed to represent the rise of antichrist, some time after the empire became Christian." To me the silence indicates that period in the world's history during which the Lord's prophets were all silent, from Malachi to John the Baptist; and John the Revelator was not to write the history of anything back of what he had seen. Rev. 1: 19.—"Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter." Therefore the seventh seal in the order in which they were opened, being at the centre of the roll, over which all the other leaves or sheets were rolled, was the connecting link between the prophets, and the things which John had seen; and therefore silence is all that the seventh seal reveals. All the seals being now opened, the book is ready for reading in the natural order of a history. The scenery is changed immediately after the sixth seal, and the scene is removed from heaven to the earth. Rev. 7: 1. "And after these things I saw four angels standing upon the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree. And I saw another angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God; and he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads. And I heard the number of them which were sealed: and there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel."—Verses 1–4.

John was called up to heaven in the Spirit, chap. 4: 1, 2, and there beheld the four and twenty elders, and the four beasts, or living creatures, and they all together testified in their new song, saying, "We shall reign on the earth" (verses 9, 10); and in the vision which is given in chap. 7: 11, "all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts." The question arises, is this the same throne which was set in heaven, chap. 4: 2, or is it now located on the earth where the four angels stood? Chap. 7: 1. Be that as it may, the heaven to which John was called up was not "beyond the bounds of time and space," for the earth was in view below, else John could not have seen the four angels standing on it. The "angel ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God," verse 2, seems to have been an emblem of the gospel ministry going forth from Jerusalem after the descent of the Holy Spirit. This is evident from chap. 14: 6,—"And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach to them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." The Holy Spirit is the sealing agent. Eph. 4: 30,—"And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." The 144,000 which were sealed of the twelve tribes of Israel, are the first fruits of the redemption. Chap. 14: 1–5,—"And I looked, and lo, a Lamb stood on Mount Sion, and with him an hundred and forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from heaven as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder; and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. And they sung as it were a new song before the throne, and before the four beasts, and the elders; and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand which were redeemed from the earth. These are they which were not defiled with women; for they are virgins. These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile: for they are without fault before the throne of God."

In commenting upon the text, Scott says, "Mount Zion, or Sion, is the gospel church." Admitting that Zion may be sometimes used figuratively to represent the true church, will it do to so understand Mount Zion in this connection? Are not the 144,000 emblematical of the church, not in its unredeemed, but in its redeemed state? If so, then Mount Zion cannot also denote the church, else the church would be represented as standing upon itself. But Christ is the foundation of the gospel church. 1 Cor. 3. 11,—"For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." The church also is represented as a chaste virgin. 2 Cor. 11: 2,—"For I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ." Will it not be more natural therefore to let Mount Zion be where David located it in Jerusalem? 2 Sam. 5: 7, 9,—"Nevertheless, David took the strong hold of Zion: the same is the city of David. So David dwelt in the fort, and called it The city of David." Thus the 144,000 stand with David their Husband; and the representation of them as chaste virgins may allude to 2 Sam. 5: 13,—"And David took him more concubines and wives out of Jerusalem," etc., which would seem to be rather a contrast than a companion, although the conduct of David may figuratively represent the calling of the Gentiles, which is so clearly set forth in Rev. 14: 6. By comparing this chapter with chap. 7, we see that the same things are represented in both. The calling of the Gentiles, or the number redeemed from among them, is represented after the sealing of the 144,000 of all the tribes of Israel. Rev. 7: 9. "After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. . . . And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said to me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple: and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."—9–17.

This is certainly descriptive of the church in its redeemed state, the same that is more fully represented in chapter 14, and still more fully in the last two chapters of Revelation. It is therefore descriptive of the state of things in the new heaven and the new earth. Whether this scene was exhibited in the heaven to which John was called up, or on the earth, matters not, since it was only representative, not a reality; and the positive testimony, "We shall reign on the earth," 5: 10; and "the holy Jerusalem descending out of heaven from God," 21: 10; and "the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it," verse 21; "the tree of life," 22: 2, as in Eden growing out of the ground, Gen. 2: 9; "and they shall reign for ever and ever" 22: 5; establishes beyond a doubt, that the renewed earth is the final abode of the righteous. Hence we see that the last scenes revealed in the word of God, are briefly revealed previous to the opening of the seventh seal; and therefore the seventh seal must be a review of all the others, or merely denote the end of the series, as the seventh day denoted the end, or a period of rest, after the six days of creation, for there is no room for anything to be revealed beyond the limits to which the vision following the sixth seal extended from the first preaching of the gospel. The souls seen under the altar at the opening of the fifth seal, are represented as being in a glorified state in this vision, having come out of great tribulation, previous to the opening of the seventh seal; and after that, it does not appear that they are any more highly exalted. The destruction of Jerusalem was typical of the destruction of antichrist at the end of the world; and therefore the language used to describe the scene at the opening of the sixth seal, will more literally apply to the latter, than to the former, since the Jewish nation only was involved in that calamity, but all the nations of the earth are involved in the general calamity which the language so fearfully describes. As to all the prophets the deliverance of the Lord's people is immediately connected with the day of vengeance upon the ungodly, so their deliverance immediately follows the day of vengeance exhibited on the opening of the sixth seal. The prophet Isaiah has given so striking an example of this, chapters 34 and 35, that perhaps I cannot better close this series of articles, than by quoting them entire, interspersing such remarks as seem to be needful.

For the Crisis.

Thoughts for the Thinking; or, The Law and Gospel Contrasted.

BY TIMOTHY WHEELER

In the Bible the words Law, Old Testament, and Old Covenant, are used in contrast with Gospel, New Testament, and New Covenant. The Old Covenant was an outward rule of works to carnal Jews, while the New Covenant is an inward rule of faith to christians. The law is the Old covenant, the gospel is the New Testament or covenant. The law is old wine; the gospel is new wine. The law is found in the New Testament, but it is not of the New Testament; so the gospel is found in the Old Testament, but it is not of the Old Testament. The law was given in wrath, but the gospel was given in love. The law has a justification, and the gospel has a justification, but the two are not identical, the one being external, the other internal; one pertaining to deeds, the other to thoughts.

The law is written externally on stone; the gospel internally on the heart or mind. The law cleanses the flesh; the gospel the conscience. The law pertains to our physical nature; the gospel to our moral nature. The law requires external obedience; the gospel internal. The law is addressed to the unregenerate man; the gospel to the regenerate man. The law was given to the sinner; the gospel to the saint. The law justifies by works; the gospel by faith. The law was given to one nation, the gospel to all nations. The law puts a yoke upon us; the gospel throws it off. The law is slavery; the gospel is freedom. The law kills; the gospel gives life. The law demands full pay; the gospel forgives all. The law knows no mercy; the gospel is all mercy. The law dispenses temporal blessings; the gospel eternal blessings. The law is bad news; the gospel is good news. The law has no good news; the gospel has no bad news.

The law is a system of rewards and punishments; while the gospel is not. The law convicts of sin; the gospel acquits of sin. The law terrifies; the gospel calms. The law is full of wrath and despair; the gospel is full of love and hope. The law shuts the door and imprisons; the gospel opens the door and delivers. The law condemns; the gospel justifies. The law accuses; the gospel excuses. The law commands; the gospel invites. The law makes worse; the gospel makes better. The law is a clog and hinderer; the gospel is our helper. The law gives us poverty; the gospel gives us riches. The law had its claims upon literal, carnal, and fleshly Israel; the gospel upon spiritual Israel. The law leaves us where the gospel finds us. The law established is the gospel abolished. The law is taken away, the gospel remains. Amen.

The law's decay reached from John's ministry to the destruction of Jerusalem. The law's development embraced a period reaching from the call of Abraham to Sinai. Man was under Moral obligation before he was under law. The introduction of law was God's necessity. Law implies an awful distance between God and man, and a world gone wrong. We may sin against law and not against God, and vice versa. Sin against law is commission, sin against God is omission. To violate law requires an external act, but not necessarily a premeditated one. There may be acts without motives. Obedience to law is not a test of character, it not being a criterion of moral good and evil.

Law obedience is selfish. A person rendering obedience to law on the ground of its requirement, does it for the sake of the reward, or from fear of the punishment; hence the obedience is selfish and not accepted. True christian obedience is unselfish, its motive lies far back of law, having no rewards or punishments to bias us, hence is genuine. Law is positive, hence it cannot be moral. That which is positive always commences with elementary instruction. Positive law, in contradistinction from physical or natural law, is imperative, prohibitory, vindictive, arbitrary, penal, and limited. The penalty of law is retrospective, hence is penal, vindictive, arbitrary and violent, and hence also is unnatural, is not an effect, and is inflicted from without. The concomitants of law are prison, penalty, justice, and no mercy—a system of arbitrariness. Law is not founded on reason—though it may be reasonable—but upon the authority of a command, with annexed rewards and punishments as stimulus; because an individual or a community that is in so low and degraded a state as to need positive penal law, is not capable of understanding the reason of the command, hence the necessity of its positive form until the individual or the community becomes capable of seeing its reasonableness, then its positive form will give way to its moral form. Every premeditated and accomplished act is a double act, of mind and body,—a mental and physical act, gospel pertains to one, and law to the other.

The gospel is older than the law. In the decadence of law a Christian could conform to law without keeping it, and also he could contravene it without breaking it. The gospel preached to Abraham was not deliverance, but a proclamation of deliverance. The Old covenant was conditional, the New covenant is unconditional. The Old covenant was given to a specific class of individuals, for a specific purpose, and for a specific time. The New covenant was given to a specific class of characters, for instance, "The meek shall inherit the earth." There is no gospel-law, or law-gospel. It is natural for men to turn Grace into Justice, and Gospel into Law; so that now, in our theology, we have a Gospel of Justice rather than a Gospel of Grace. the result is, a Law-Gospel, or a Gospel-Law, which leads us to preach the wrath of God more than his love.

"Long Articles."

Contributors to the Crisis have been repeatedly solicited by its Editors to write "short articles." No doubt but that very many have endeavored to fulfill the injunction, but there is quite as much reason to believe that a large per-cent of all who write for the paper unequivocally persist in thrusting upon the attention of its readers long prophetic essays, dragging their slow length through half-a-dozen numbers. This may be the "counsel of God," but the masses remain to be convinced of the utility of speculative prophecy. It is of no use for one contributor to labor for the edification of our patient editors, by packing his thoughts close and solid as a cannon-ball, if there are exceptions to be taken by those who mathematically calculate to weekly cover just so many square inches of blank paper with their "scriptural quotations." Prophecy as a study is deeply interesting; but, as Tyndale says, "the expounding of one text twenty different ways, as children discant upon plain song," is a commingling of confused ideas that becomes a "stone of stumbling and rock of offence" to those whose tastes for practical christianity are proverbial. A man may be a great military disciplinarian, and yet lack in stragetic ability; and so a man may be a faithful, energetic exponent of the atonement, and yet lack in the wisdom of those who foretold it, and vice versa—most probably the latter. It is the ambiguity of prophetic doctrine that renders long expositions wearisome, and especially to those who delight in those luminous truths which are the very essence of the "Son of God."

I will end this disclaimer by saying, that if the suggestions of our kind and courteous editors are the true reflex of their own opinion, as well as the echo of numerous substantial friends of the Crisis, there remains the exercise of their Editorial prerogatives in accepting or rejecting any articles coming from any direction that do not comport favorably with their avowed requisitions through the Crisis. If one claims the immunity of "long articles," the paper, as PUBLIC PROPERTY, guarantees the same inclusive franchise to every supporter of its existence. If "short articles" be the word, let them be like cannon-balls, and, like those plunging shots, carry all before them.

For the Crisis.

"I will tear them down!"

Does God recognize order and government in his church? If so, who will dare bear the responsibility of tearing down churches established and governed according to the principles of the gospel? Yet such is the leading motto of some who claim prominence as preachers of the gospel, and who seem to think that the most requisite qualification of a preacher is to denounce all organic churches, and especially Advent churches. Says one of these preachers, "I will tear down all the churches you can build up." Has God commissioned men to destroy his own work? Or, have not such preachers assumed to themselves a prerogative not warranted in the word of God, and unjustifiable for a christian ministry to assume? If so, is it not clear upon whom rests the existing disorder and confusion which has grown out of a licentious use of supposed individual rights, upon which every man claims recognition to membership in the church of Christ, and especial fellowship with Adventists on the ground of belief in certain cardinal doctrines?

But I thank God the time has come when the church is beginning to feel the importance of separating themselves from sinners, and from all who walk disorderly, live in the unity of the spirit and in the bond of peace, and to "mark them that cause divisions contrary to the doctrines we have received." Brethren, let us be of one heart and one mind, having on the righteousness of Christ as a garment, clean and white, without spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, that when the marriage of the Lamb shall come, it may be said of the bride, "She has made herself ready."

Trusting in an Arm of Flesh.

CAN YOU DO IT?—DARE YOU DO IT?

"The veriest coward upon earth
Is he who fears the world's opinion;
Who acts with reference to its will,
His conscience swayed by its dominion."

Dare you pin your faith to any man's sleeve; any man's creed? Dare you trust in an arm of flesh? We may seek counsel of the wise, the good, the great, beneficially. Advice is good, counsel is good. "In the multitude of counsellors there is safety," says Solomon. Helpers, counsellors, sympathizers, we need in this life, must have; God so ordains. Would there were more of these, ten-fold. And after all that is said and done, beware how you neglect God, his word, his grace. He is the counsellor of all counsellors; the light of all lights; the high and the holy. Take heed that ye lean not on a broken reed.

Man, at his best estate, is altogether vanity:—a wind, a shadow, a vapor; a flower in the morning, and at noon, where is it? Gone; yes, gone! and the place thereof knoweth it no more forever. God hath spoken once, twice, three times, "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils: for wherein is he to be accounted of?" Isa. 2: 22. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth: in that very day his thoughts perish." Psalm 146: 4. The best men, the greatest, the wisest, the holiest—what are they? Have they any light, any wisdom, any greatness, or any goodness? Where is it from? Who the giver? Who? All the light in the greatest and wisest men, is borrowed; mere glimmerings, the faint shadowings of the sun-light of glory, the wisdom that cometh from above, from the Father of Lights. "The preparations of the heart and the answers of the tongue in man, are from the Lord." "I create the fruit of the lips," saith the Holy One. The light of man is a borrowed light, secondary. "The voice said cry. And he said, What shall I cry? All flesh is grass, and all his goodliness is as the flower of the field:—The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the word of our God shall stand forever." Isa. 40: 6–8.

Yes, yes, beloved, here it is, the word of our Lord standeth forever! Why not repair immediately, confidently to this full Orb of Glory, this Fountain, living, perpetual, overflowing? Why not come directly to this living water, pure, unadulterated; the well-spring of life eternal, whereof if a man drink he shall never thirst, but it shall be in him a well of water, springing up into everlasting life. "Trust ye in the Lord forever, for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength." "Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom is no help." "Cursed is the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, whose heart departeth from the Lord." "Put your trust in the Lord, trust in him at all times. It is better to trust in the Lord, than to put confidence in man. It is better to trust in the Lord, than to put confidence in princes"—the greatest of men. "They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever." "Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord, his God: who made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that is in them; who keepeth truth forever."

"Mind is not worth a feather's weight
That must with other minds be measured,
God must direct, and God control,
For honest hearts 'twas ne'er intended,
They, only they, have cause to fear
Whose motives have their God offended
What will my neighbor say, if I
Should this attempt, or that, or t'other?
A neighbor is most sure a foe,
If he prove not a helping brother.
That man is brave who braves the world,
Who o'er life's sea his bark he steereth,
Who keeps that guiding star in view,
A conscience clear that never veereth."

Encouragement.

BRO. GRANT.—I send another extract from a letter lately received from a pastor of a Baptist church in Wisconsin.

"DEAR BRO. BLAIN.—Your kind letter of the 23d has come to hand, and the three tracts you sent, which have been read, I trust, with profit and interest. So far as the subject of future punishment is concerned, with us here it has been allowed to rest since my relative left for Vermont. I thought it best to let it rest, and so allay the unpleasant feelings that were manifested. It is now before the people here. They know my feelings in regard to the matter, and I think it best to let them ponder and reflect upon the subject, without imprudently crowding it upon them. The first work I read in defence of the doctrine of destruction, was your 'Death not Life', since then I have read Hudson's 'Debt and Grace,' which I have purchased for my library. If I had the money to spare, I would purchase Dobney's work for perusal. [I have sent it for the Tract Society.—J. B.]

Eld. B., of whom you inquire, lives eighteen miles from here. I know his views and feelings—have had many talks with him. His views are known throughout the State. I learn by him that Eld. ——, of Wis., and Eld. J. of Ill., believe in the final end of all evil. They are both men of talent and influence. . . . If you come west another season, I should be very glad to see you at our house. Accept my thanks for the tracts. I shall be glad to hear from you at any time. Yours in gospel bonds."

What is the most encouraging in this information is the fact that churches are becoming willing, at least in the West, to hear pastors whom they know believe in destruction—that supposed heresy for which some of God's preachers have been cast out as unworthy of fellowship, and meeting-houses closed against them. It gives some hope that ere long we shall have better places to preach in, and more ears to hear. Such facts should also remind some brethren who are denouncing "the sects," and despairing of any reform, that they are injuring our cause, and wronging their brethren in the churches. "Judge not, lest ye be judged." Three of the above named ministers I saw and supplied with our works when I traveled west four and five years ago. By the consent of one I lectured twice in his meeting-house, and when I was through, he (being present) said to me in a kind manner, "I shall not preach against your views till I have more fully examined this subject." Here I saw the importance of avoiding a condemnatory spirit, and resolved to check it in myself and reprove it in others.

I would here say to the Committee of the Publication Society, that as I have traveled much in the western States, and know of numerous cases similar to the above, where our works would tell on our cause, I am sending out books cautiously, as they cannot buy, owing to the want of money in that region. I have obtained subscriptions for the society to the amount of $12, and, including what I gave in my tour of six weeks in Western Pennsylvania this winter, I have given out a little over that amount in the last three months. I shall continue to obtain subscriptions, and hope all our brethren who travel will do the same. Many will give when called on, who would not send by mail.

Be Approved.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God."—2 Tim. 2: 15

Would that this language of the great apostle to Timothy might sink deep into the minds of those naming the name of Christ; so deeply, as to be adhered to by them. Though the exhortation was personal, and to a public laborer, it seems peculiarly applicable and timely in this age, when so few, comparatively, engage in the great study of having God approve. I was quite forcibly reminded of the importance of this study a short time since, while conversing with one who fifteen years ago could stand and present effectually the unsearchable riches of Christ to a dying world, to the reforming of many a poor wanderer in paths forbidden by God. I observed his spirit crushed, and a cloud of gloom seemed resting upon him as past efforts signally blessed of God were alluded to. I inquired, "Why do you to so great an extent retire from the scene of conflict? Why not put forth the same amount of effort now, seeing perishing mortals so swiftly approach the judgment scene with so very few to warn them?" A part of his reply was, "The church did not appreciate my efforts." This was doubtless true, and I would that it were an isolated case, but I fear the judgment may reveal great and terrible responsibilities upon the church unfelt before by them. One cannot be blind to the fact that the church (so called) appreciate the efforts of some whose characters God cannot approve, while it appreciates not the sacrifice, neither sustains the hands, of some who are really the servants of God. But if the great study in question absorbs the attention, much less will be the gloom here, and far less the condemnation at the bar of God.

Go, labor on, 'tis not for nought,
All earthly loss is heavenly gain;
Men heed thee not, men praise thee not,
The Master praises—what are men?

Toil on, toil on, thou soon shalt find
For labor—rest; for exile—home;
Soon shalt thou hear the Bridegroom's voice
That welcome sound, behold I've come!

Methinks I hear a babe in Christ earnestly inquiring, "How can I be approved of God?" Let the voice of inspiration reply. "Present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable." Rom. 12: 1. If our bodies are sacrificed we shall disregard our own ease, or pleasure, or any call that conflicts with the revealed will of God. He does not approve of our decorating the sacrifice we offer as the world decorate their bodies, which they withhold from sacrificing, inasmuch as the following verse reads—"Be not conformed to the world." Again, 2 Cor. 6: 17, 18,—"Come out from among them, and be separate, and I will receive you; and ye shall be my sons and daughters." O precious promise! How oft, when darkness has gathered, has it thrilled my very being and dispersed sadness. A son, a daughter of the Almighty! Let darkness gather; let friends I once thought true join the opposers in opposing, let them employ the tongue of slander, yea, let the great deceiver use his most cunning artifices to destroy my happiest moments, the spirit-exalting thought, the eternal God is my Father, is sufficient.

O! you that are almost discouraged on account of sin prevailing so extensively, and your own weakness, begin anew the great study. Have trials come thick and from sources which you little expected? Study. Has ambition, which you considered holy, been prostrated? Still study, and commit your way to the Lord. Has disease preyed upon your system, and you become subject to temptations the strong in body cannot fully realize? Remember there is no sorrow so bitter, no grief so secret, no anguish so deep that the pitying eye of Jehovah cannot reach. Remember, too, the land is nearing where sin, with all its fearful effects, will be destroyed forever. Those emotions of sadness will never be awakened as we look upon those we love, and view mere wrecks of what once existed.

I pray that, while a large class are receiving their portion in this life, we may study and learn what it is to be approved of God, that we may be prepared to do his will here, and be ready to receive our portion in the world to come, "at the appearing of Jesus."

Sunday Schools,—Books, etc.

A letter in the Crisis of March 12th, from the pen of Bro. W. A. Manning, has called up my thoughts anew to consider the great lack among us as a people of the needful interest and means to properly conduct Sunday Schools, for the benefit of our children and youth, together with those now under and within the reach of our influence. For some years I have thought, spoken and written on this subject; not that nothing is being done, but much more might and ought to be done. There are probably over one hundred thousand children, youths, and adults, who could be gathered into schools among the Second Adventists. Many of these are already belonging to good Sunday Schools; many are not; but among them all there is no book for general use in which the primary principles of our faith are set forth in a form to instruct the young mind. The Bible is the all-important book for the Bible class, and for the instruction of all; yet we need a simple digest of the Scriptures for the young—one which enters into the particulars relating to the creation of man, God's attributes, his care, love, his Son, the atonement, repentance, faith, hope, death, resurrection, life, retribution, kingdom of God, etc., etc. Some attempts have been made at this, yet little has been done to produce what ought to be produced for our families and for others. It is true that many of us are so situated that our children must go to Sunday Schools where error is taught, if they go at all; but very many good schools might be originated and maintained among us where there are no schools, if a proper interest were taken in this important matter. It is now an acknowledged fact that Sunday Schools exert one of the most powerful influences for building up society that are employed. How important then that the right instruction be imparted in such schools, that society be built up on a Bible foundation.

But it may be said there are good books enough published by the Sunday School societies now, and of a character to meet all the wants of our children. This is very questionable. That there are many good books, good as far as they go, good in the abstract, good on many points, we readily admit; but do any of those clearly teach the primitive faith and hope of the church? Do they contain the real elements of the faith which distinguishes us as a people? I think all will say, No. Some may say, this is not needed. Then let me ask, Why are we as a people continuing to produce books, tracts, and papers, and eager to do so, to turn public attention to examine the theological position we claim the scriptural one? Is Bible theology to be taught only to adults? Are we not to direct the theological training of our own and others' children? or shall we allow all around us to teach them the vain notions and fables of these last days, and in our turn seek to instruct maturity and correct their false notions? Do we not know something of the difficulty of turning from false impressions and theological ideas which we received in childhood? Do we not know that the best time to lay a good foundation in theology is in childhood? If we do not, the Roman Catholics do, and will not allow their children under Protestant influence until fourteen years old. Is it not the fact that in all the schools among us, the children are being taught,

"I'm going to heaven, to die no more,"

and,

"I want to be an angel,"

and,

"I want to die, and with my mother dwell,"

and,

"I want to go and see the Savior," with a host of such fables, all mixed up with good things, and all tending in a direction which makes the gospel seem to them a system of endless perplexities and mysteries.

There are many young minds who are very deeply interested in theology. All are more or less. "As the twig is bent, the tree is inclined." Theology begins in early childhood. Let us who see the Bible as it is, try to give it to all our children. If the Sunday School books now in use are sufficient for the children, because they are very good in the main, then let us leave off publishing books for adults, for there are many good books published beside ours. But had we not better double our diligence, and publish more "with a certain sound," and among them publish a good digest of Bible theology in simple form,—publish some Bible literature in story books, biographies and histories, for children's libraries. They will sell. Every body is buying books for their children. We are all doing so, and shall until Jesus comes. If we can publish but one, let us publish a Sunday School book, a good one. It will sell. I do not doubt but five thousand copies would sell in the Spring in three months, if it were ready. This would give a greater interest in originating schools. But, shall we do what we can until Jesus comes? Yours in the blessed hope.

The End at Hand.

Evidences are continually accumulating which go to prove that "the end of all things is at hand." We do not see how any Bible student, who is a careful observer of the times, can come to any other conclusion than that Christ will very soon appear in the clouds of heaven and gather his saints to "the marriage supper of the Lamb." When we candidly reflect on the great events which are about to transpire, their mere shadows are enough to make the stoutest hearts quail, and melt with fear; but who will be able to stand when the great day of the Lord opens to the astonished vision of a wicked world?

How few seem to be awake to the perils of the present hour. The indifference of those who were once active is truly alarming. They seem to have forgotten the exhortation of Jesus, "Watch ye therefore, . . . lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping." The time to watch is in the hour of peril. Said Paul, "This know also, that in the last days, perilous times shall come." It appears certain that we are in the very days to which the apostle refers, consequently, where we should be very watchful. The Savior saw that we should be inclined to go to sleep and become careless, when our safety would consist in being in the opposite state; hence he has given us a timely warning, that we shall do well to heed.

The first token of the last-day perils, as mentioned by Paul, is expressed in the following language:—"Men shall be lovers of their own selves." This is the same as to say they will be selfish. How strikingly true is this scripture when applied to the present time. No observer can help noticing the alarming prevalence of this anti-christian feeling, which is gaining strength every day.

We are sometimes told that "men have always been selfish." This is true to a certain extent; but "in the last days," they will become so much more so than in other periods of the christian dispensation, that it will be a sign of the times, to indicate that the end is at hand. If we have not yet arrived where men are selfish enough to begin to fulfill the sign, how will they act when it is about completed?

The fact is so apparent that this is an age emphatically noted for selfishness, it seems hardly necessary to stop to give any proof. No observing man can fail to notice its rapid increase. Says a late writer, "In no period of this world's history has selfishness been so general as at the present time. Among the great sins that swell the catalogue of abounding iniquity, none are more blighting than this." If this sin were confined to the non-professors, the evil would be small to what it now is, but it is very widely prevalent among church members. An English writer, who is a close observer of the times, when speaking of the present state of Protestantism, says:—"It abhors the worship of saints, but exults in the worship of itself."

Another says, when speaking of "things as they are," "Self aggrandizement seems to be the all-controlling element of man's nature, and over-reaching and fraud characterize nearly every private business transaction; while recklessness, selfishness and insincerity is everywhere prominent. This every man of truth, who looks with an observing and philosophic eye upon the world around him, will acknowledge to be no overdrawn picture of society."

In these days, selfishness appears to be the main-spring of almost every action. Nominal christianity has become so conformed to the world in this particular, that it is doing scarcely any thing to save men from destruction. Its chief efforts seem to be for self-aggrandizement,—to obtain the most eloquent man, build the most elegant meeting house, having the tallest steeple,—the largest organ and bell,—the best choir of singers,—and the richest and most fashionable congregation.

We have most certainly come to the time, foretold by the apostle, when "men" are "lovers of their own selves;" hence, we are in the last days, near the end of the present dispensation. Dear reader, are you ready to meet the coming King of kings?—o.

"Let my soul live."—Ps. 119: 175.

When at Bro. H. L. Bradley's, Bristol, Ct., we were privileged to examine an old volume of sermons, preached by Dr. Tho. Manton, who died Oct. 18, 1677. The volume contains one hundred and ninety sermons on the 119th Psalm. His one hundred and eighty-ninth sermon is on the 175th verse. Under his first head, he says:

"David's petition for life; 'Let my soul live.' My soul, that is, myself; the soul is put for the whole man. The contrary, Judges 16: 30. 'Let me die with the Philistines,' (said Sampson) Heb. Marg. o Limy soul die.'

Although this preacher believed in the immortality of the soul, he declared the truth in the foregoing statements. As soul primarily signifies "the whole man," and when thus used represents a being that is mortal; otherwise, there would be no propriety in the expressions, "Let my soul live," "Let my soul die;" it follows that every part of the being covered by the term soul, when used in this primary sense, must of necessity be mortal, else the statement is not true that it "is put for the whole man."

It now follows, as the term soul is used to represent "the whole man," who is mortal, that the same word cannot be used in a secondary sense or any other, to stand for a part of man which is immortal; for if a part of him is immortal, then it is not true that the soul when used to indicate "the whole man" stands for a being who is mortal.

If the term soul be applied to an animal, as it frequently is, to represent the entire being, which is mortal, then every part of that animal is mortal, and neither the word soul, nor any other term can be properly applied to that animal to show that a part of it is immortal; because in such a case, it would prove the first statement false; consequently, when it is once affirmed that the word soul represents "the whole man," who is mortal, it can never be correctly said of him, while in that state, that any part of him is immortal.—o.

Policy of Napoleon III.

Napoleon III. is very properly denominated "THE MAN OF WONDER." All the world are wondering what this noted man is going to do. Thus far, he has played his part in the political game with astonishing success. Every move seems to favor his purposes. His power and influence is now so great, that he is allowed to act about as he pleases. He is a very shrewd man, and puzzles all the crowned heads of Europe. The world trembles at the sound of his footsteps. It has been well said that he is "the embodiment of nations." It is evident, from his successful movements, that he has a definite object in view, and a matured plan for its accomplishment. By his shrewdness and skillful management, he keeps the advantage over all the nations around, and uses them as tools to advance his own interests. This they seldom see, till his object is accomplished. He manages to keep them blinded till he has gained his point.

We are satisfied that the most important acts in the life of this wonderful man are yet to be performed. We expect our own nation will yet be under his control. We see but very little ground to hope for a continuance of our republican government much longer. A mighty revolution is evidently at hand, in which we think Napoleon will play an important part.

An intelligent English writer, when speaking of Napoleon, says:—

"He has got possession of the gates of Italy in the passage of the Alps. The Italian army and navy are entirely at his devotion. Italy could not exist without him and she must willingly or unwillingly, obey all his injunctions. People are so simple as to talk of an united Italy—the whole peninsula under one sceptre, and the capital at Rome. Do you imagine that Napoleon will ever permit this? Never! He will keep the Italians weak, divided, and subservient to himself. . . .

A war between Austria and Italy must inevitably take place within a very short time. . . . The Italians will either be thoroughly beaten, or, at best, thoroughly exhausted; and he [Napoleon] will come in to their aid, and, of necessity, be master of the field; for Austria will be as much exhausted as Italy. . . . Italy is now a scene of confusion, and Naples a scene of misery. . . . The Italian question is as unsettled as it was twenty years ago. . . . The MORAL state of Italy is worse even than its physical state. . . .

The writer goes on to show the rising power of Napoleon in various parts of our globe, and says:—

Syria, we know, has long been devoted to France, and even one of our own [English] government papers admits that every thing in Syria is done under French influence, and at the suggestion of France. In Dalmatia and Montenegro every movement that has lately occured has been arranged and directed solely by the French Consul.

Egypt is perhaps the most important position in the whole world. In may be called the hinge upon which the policy of civilization turns. It stands on its post, and has stood for centuries, the guardian power of terrestrial communication. It connects the three great continents of the North, the East, and the South. Whoever becomes its master becomes master of the age. He can open and shut, at his will, the gates of empire and progress to three-fourths of mankind. He can shut out Europe from Asia, and present a barrier which no power can break through. And who is master of Egypt? Who holds in his hands the keys of Europe and the East? The Emperor Napoleon—he is master of Egypt as much as he is of France. The Pacha of Egypt is his servant; the Egyptian army is at his command. The French emissaries in Egypt are an army in themselves. The Emperor has threefold more power in Egypt than the Queen of England ever had in Canada or Australia. Egypt is in fact a part of France as much as Nice is of Savoy. The importance of this fact admits of no exageration. It is the turning-point of the world's political destiny . . .

He has got possession of Abyssinia likewise. He is, for political purposes, Emperor of Abyssinia at this moment. He has obtained from the Abyssinian government a part of the Red Sea, which serves for a depot for his troops and ships, and as a coaling station for his war steamers. . . . He has also got MADAGASCAR. . . . These points are aggressive positions. At each point there are ships and troops ready to start at a moment's notice, and to meet in combination at a given place of rendezvous. . . . Nor is this by any means the whole. The French Emperor is in actual possession of Cochin-China and of Cambodia."

Thus we see this man of "wonder" is spreading his mighty influence, and the tide of power is rapidly rising in his favor. He is the political leviathan of the age. "None is so fierce that dare stir him up . . . When he raiseth up himself, the mighty are afraid. . . . He maketh the political sea "to boil like a pot . . . Upon earth there is not his like."—o.

"Backed out."

In the Jonesville (Mich.) Independent of March 20th, 1862, we find an article from N. M. Steele, under the above heading. It will be recollected, that some weeks since a discussion was announced to take place between this Methodist minister and Sister M. S. Mansfield, on the subject of immortality. It appears from the Independent that it is given up. The reason assigned by Sister M.'s opponent is that no house can be found of sufficient size to hold the people. When he consented to engage in the discussion, he states that he had the promise of the Congregational meeting-house, which is now refused; and the Methodist house is too small.

We are sorry an opportunity has not been offered him "to defend certain points of the orthodox faith, against the no-soulism of Mrs. Mansfield," which he denominates "a degrading and ruinous error,"—a "brute-tending theology" "of the lady theolo-gastrian."

We would suggest that when the warm weather comes they have the talk in some shady grove where there will be room for all to hear who are interested.—o

Spiritualism in Italy.

The leading Roman Catholic Journal of Europe says a belief in Spiritualism extends to every part of Italy, and is rapidly increasing. This statement will apply to nearly all parts of the civilized world. The heathen have been Spiritualists for thousands of years. But it was not till these "latter times," as foretold by Paul, [see 1 Tim. 4 1–3,] that the demons were to succeed in getting professed christians to follow their diabolical system. Now many are departing "from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils." By this we know we are near the end of the present dispensation. Truly these are "perilous times." But we expect to realize it more sensibly as we approach the great day of the Lord. Half-hearted, worldly-minded, fashionable professors of religion, will soon reform, or be swept off by the rising tide of infidelity, that is setting in upon the world through Spiritualism in its hydra-headed forms. Nothing short of entire consecration to God will secure us in these last hours of trial from being taken by the enemy.—o.

Answers to Inquiries.

Bro. Wm. Lucas, of Peekskill, wishes to know if he is at liberty to insert our "card" in the village paper of P., as it was published in the Crisis of March 27th, 1861? Certainly, brother, and we give all others the same liberty. The following is a copy of it:—

A CARD.—"Will all men live eternally?" If any clergyman, or other respectable gentleman in ——— will sustain the affirmative of the foregoing question in oral debate, he is invited to inform Miles Grant Boston, Mass., who will endeavor to support the negative. Use your Weapons discreetly.

"Take heed that ye be not consumed one of another."

The rifled cannon, that does effectual service four, five, or more miles distant, the Sharpe's rifle, that kills a man as far off as he can be conveniently seen; with iron-clad gun-boats, and other modern inventions in death-dealing engines, have quite revolutionized the art of war. * * * Now warriors must not disagree among themselves. Let there be no unlawful dictation. Every man to his own post. Let all be united in the common cause,—in rank or file, or in solid phalanx, obedient to the commander's word, and how does the mighty host bear down on the foe, until o'er fields of blood and carnage the victor waves his flag in triumph.

But who are they that are "terrible as an army with banners," if not the church? But let us look at them. Here is one expert in the use of small arms—the Spanish knife, or the sword and the revolver. But see, for shame! he is clamorous that all should fight as he fights. Hear him. "Away with your clumsy, thundering artillery, and your monster columbiads, that require four yoke of oxen to turn them around. Our less enlightened wont stand it; they say, 'Ugh, big gun,' and are frightened; you will drive them all off. And your Sharpe's rifles, that can kill a man a mile distant: true they are good to kill, but it is not fair to shoot a man on that wise. I don't like them; and, as captain of this expedition, if you do not adopt my plan and consent to use short arms and shoot at short distances, as I do, you cannot go in this ship."

But says the Cannoneer, "While you can kill a man at the distance of ten yards with your revolver, and perhaps a half a dozen of them, if particularly skilled in your precise pop-gun performance, I can with one discharge sink a ship with a thousand men. And if you do not attend to your own department, I will demonstrate in your own craft the virtue there is in a clumsy columbiad." The Sharp-shooters join in the controversy, and mutiny ensues.

Alas! "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." When will Christian men learn that God's plan is large enough for every good man and means that can further His glory! The narrow-minded sectarian will not and cannot believe it. Only such as are enlightened with the wisdom of a more generous benevolence, can appreciate such facts. But away with the narrow, proscriptive policy of bigots. Let our hearts enlarge, and so be equal to the duties of the nineteenth century. May God save us, that we do not "devour one another."—M.

March 12, 1831, he writes, "I left Buldur, and arrived at Kitshiborlu. The day following I arrived at Satokloo, which is entirely inhabited by Turks, but in the Khan (Inn) I met with Greek and Armenian merchants from Akhshehir, Kiutaya and Sparta, who were very kind to me. When I asked them of what denomination they were, the Greeks replied, 'We are partly Christians, partly Armenians, partly Papistian,' i. e., Papists or Armenian Catholics. It is to be observed, that the Armenian Catholics there call themselves Papistian. I proclaimed to them the gospel of Christ, and his future coming."

"March 27.—I arrived at Constantinople for the third time, and was kindly received by His Excellency Sir Robert Gordon, Messrs. Cartwright, Buchanan, Kennedy and others. While I remained at Constantinople, I lectured and preached to the English, Italians, and Jews. I called on His Eminence the Greek Patriarch Constantios, formerly Archbishop of Mount Sinai, who furnished me with letters of introduction. I observed at Constantinople the steps taken by the Sultan for bringing about the accomplishment of those prophecies which predict the downfall of the Turkish Empire, under the emblem of the drying up of the river Euphrates." Is it not somewhat remarkable that the views of Mr. Wolfe should so strikingly correspond with those of American writers! For example, see the work of Rev. J. Litch upon this subject, published in 1838, saying that on the 11th day of August, 1840, the Turkish Empire should lose its supremacy, which in the end was true; Mr. Litch taking the same view of the symbolic Euphrates as that held by Mr. Wolfe in the foregoing paragraph.

"May 12.—I rode thirty-nine miles and arrived at Karasheesh. My mind was much refreshed and supported with thoughts of my Savior. Wretch is the missionary who does not feel every day and every hour the necessity of imploring the support of his Savior and Redeemer, the Lord Jesus Christ; he may for awhile carry on his work among Jews and Gentiles with apparent holy zeal, but if not invigorated and upheld by continual supplies of divine grace, he must certainly fall."

"May 24.—Having rubbed my body well with laudanum, the dysentery with which I had been troubled ceased. . . . I spoke to them in Turkish about the unsearchable riches of Christ; for though I do not speak Turkish perfectly, I am able to speak about Christ with every sort of people, and to tell them that Christ died for our sins!"

"August 12.—Persia. After having read with the Jews of Teheran this treatise of Maimonides, I told them that I expected that Jesus of Nazareth, the true Messiah, whose hands and feet were pierced,—who was brought like a lamb to the slaughter,—who was the man of sorrows and acquainted with grief,—who, after the sceptre was taken from Judah, and the legislative power from between his feet, came the first time,—shall come the second time in the clouds of heaven, and with the trump of the Archangel; and those who have followed him, and believed in him and in his first coming; those dead in Christ shall rise first, and the children of Israel shall look upon him whom they have pierced, and mourn; and Jesus Christ shall have dominion from shore to shore, and from sea to sea, and all nations shall serve and obey him: he shall sit upon the throne of his father David, and reign with his saints at Jerusalem gloriously."

August 28.—He gives some account of conversation with a Mohammedan. "He said that he was glad to find that I expected the speedy arrival of the Messiah Jesus, for the signs of the times prove that Mohde must soon come." When asked by a Mohammedan, "Is Mohammed not predicted in your books?" he replied, "He is predicted as a chastiser of the evil doers: in his time Christians were fallen into idolatry, and God therefore sent Mohammed to chastise them."

Nov. 12.—He was required to pay a price for the privilege of preaching the Gospel of Jesus, which he seemed to so highly prize. With his company he was taken by a banditti of robbers, pulled from his horse, robbed of his money, and stripped entirely of his raiment. He says, "Nothing, nothing was left to me. It was then extremely cold. They put a rag filled with vermin over me, and brought me out of the highway, where I met with the rest, weeping and crying, and bound to the tails of the robbers' horses. It was an awful sight, to see robbers (twenty-four in number) beating and cursing each other, and beating us poor Banda, (i. e., those that are bound,) disputing among themselves whose property every one of us should be. We were driven along by them in continual gallop, on account of the approaching Turkomanns. . . . During the night three of the prisoners had the good fortune to make their escape. . . . Some tried again to make their escape, but were horribly beaten by a young robber fourteen years of age. After this we were put in irons. Twelve of the robbers separated for the purpose of making another plundering expedition. It was an awful night, cold and freezing, and we were without anything to cover us. The robbers consulted together about me, whether it was advisable or not to kill me, as I was known by Abba Mirza; for they were afraid if Abba Mirza should hear of me, he would claim me.

"Yes, it was an awful night; and what consolation could I have expected from above, from my Savior, if I had not put my trust in him, and in his promise? At such an hour, one experiences the precious fruits of faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Blessed is he who at such an hour knows that Christ is with him, and that neither bonds, nor cold, nor hunger, nor thirst, can separate him from the love of Christ, and that to him he can carry all his wants. I prayed to that Savior, and then spoke to the robbers, beseeching them not to kill me, and promising that on my arrival at Torbad, (to which place they intended to bring me,) I would ransom myself."

Arriving at Torbad, the Jews gathered around him, having never seen an English subject there. He says, "The first evening, though in a most wretched state, I had them all around me, and I proclaimed to them the Gospel of Jesus, of whose history, sufferings and death they were quite ignorant." But on the 18th, God, who heareth prayer, sent him deliverance—robbed only of his money—by the hand of Mohammed Ishak Khan. He then commenced immediately to preach and teach to them the Gospel.

"An officer in the service of Mohammed Ishak Khan Kereshe entered the room of the Jews, and said to me, 'Old Benjamin!' I observed he was of the sect of Ali Ullahe. He told me that several months ago a Dervish had arrived from Teheren, who had said to him, 'An English Dervish shall arrive prisoner at Torbad and consult with him.' I gave him an Arabic Bible. His wife was ill; I laid hands on her, prayed over her, and she recovered. Kasem Sultan came to me daily, and I opened up to him the meaning of the Scriptures."

Among the Jews his manner was to teach in every place, and when opportunity offered, would enter their synagogues and preach to them formally; to which practice they seem to be quite accustomed. He relates that while at Jerusalem he made the acquaintance of a famous Rabbi, of whom he says, "He is considered the greatest Baal Kabbala and Hasid. Rabbi Solomon, his disciple, told me of him when at Cairo, that Rabbi Mendel can preach upon every word of the Torah more than three hours, and every one present seems struck with astonishment." This was preaching, but certainly very little like the thirty minutes' sermons of the Christians. Perhaps, however, there was an attempt to make up in length what was lacking in quality.

Mr. Wolfe continued to preach and to travel, sometimes on horses, camels, elephants, palanquins, etc., and experienced a great variety of vicissitudes; giving it as his opinion that the Messiah might be expected about the year 1847. In December, 1832, we find him at Delhi, India, lecturing and preaching. Rev. J. T. Thompson, Missionary at that place, wrote Mrs. W—: "I can hardly express to your ladyship the esteem in which Mr. Wolfe is held by all descriptions of people, and the place he has in the affections of all his Christian friends." Rev. William Parish, Chaplain at Kurnaul, wrote about the same time,—"He preached twice on the Sabbath, opening the Scriptures to a crowded congregation in our Church Bungalow, concerning the promises of a Savior, as given by the mouth of Patriarchs and Prophets, and how Christ had completed his first advent in a state of humiliation. . . . He showed his threefold character of Prophet, Priest, and King, and enlarged boldly on the future glories of his second advent, which he strikingly contrasted with his first. . . . The signs of the times he also dwelt upon; warning his audience of the near approach of our Lord, who will consume that wicked one with the Spirit of his mouth, and will destroy him with the brightness of his coming."

"March 20*th*, 1834.—Arrived safely in the harbor of Malta; and by God's grace, after an absence of three years, three months, and eight days, joined once more my beloved wife and child. Hallelujah!"

Although these were by no means his only Missionary labors, they are sufficient to show what manner of man he was, and the faith he so honestly and intelligently held. For a few years past he has been occupied as rector of a Church in England; though by last accounts from him he was contemplating still another mission. Yet with all his holy zeal, Dr. Seabury, of the New York Churchman, has declared him "insane"; and the Quarterly Review has branded him as a "religious fanatic." But "so persecuted they the prophets that were before." Joseph Wolfe's labors are not without their fruits; his name and influence must live while the world stands.

The following we take from the Dublin Review of Nov., 1860, p. 158:*—"Wolfe is so extraordinary a creature, that there is no calculating a priori concerning his motions. He appears to me a comet without any perihelion, and capable of setting a whole system on fire. When I should have addressed him in Syria, I heard of him at Malta; and when I supposed he had gone to England, he was riding like a ruling angel in the whirlwinds of Antioch, or standing unappalled among the crumbling towers of Aleppo. A man who at Rome calls the Pope 'the dust of the earth,' and tells the Jews at Jerusalem that 'the Gauamara is a lie;' who passes his days in disputation, and his nights in digging the Talmud; to whom a floor of brick is a feather-bed, and a box a bolster; who makes or finds a friend alike in the persecutor in his former or present faith; who can conciliate a Pacha, or confute a patriarch; who travels without a guide; speaks without an interpreter; can live without food, and pay without money; forgiving all the insults he meets with, and forgetting all the flattery he receives; who knows little of worldly conduct, and yet accommodates himself to all men without giving offence to any! such a man (and such, and more, is Wolfe) must excite no ordinary degree of attention in a country and among a people whose monotony of manners and habits has remained undisturbed for centuries. As a pioneer I deem him matchless, and 'aut inveniet viam aut faciet'; but if order is to be established or arrangements made, trouble not Wolfe; he knows of no church but his own heart; no calling but that of zeal; no dispensation but that of preaching. He is devoid of comity towards man, and is full of the love of God."

Wolfe says, p. 189, ib.:—"I shall never have confidence in the reform which is brought about by miserable revolutionists of Italy and France; and I shall always declare the outcry Liberte, Egalte, Fraternite, to be nothing else but Tyranny, Beggary, Butchery. And all these revolutionary movements verify the words of Ezekiel 21: 27, 'Perverted, perverted, perverted, or overturn, overturn, overturn, until He comes whose right it is, and I will give it Him.' One revolution shall take place over another, and men shall strive to establish peace and happiness, but by their own efforts and without the Author of happiness and peace. And they shall be disappointed until the rightful possessor of the earth shall come to His own."—M.

Adam Clark.

Many of our readers know of Adam Clarke only as a notable English Commentator of the Methodist denomination; to such the following, from Stevens' History of Methodism, will be read with interest, not only as giving some insight into the real character of this eminent christian man, but also as a refreshing illustration of gospel preaching. It should, however, be said that Dr. Clarke was, like ourselves, a strong advocate of short sermons, specially in ordinary pastoral teachings, (as also when one has little to say,) often preaching, as he himself testifies, not more than fifteen minutes, and sometimes but ten minutes at a time.—M.

"He was a 'revivalist,' and preached for immediate results. Alluding to one of his sermons at Oldham chapel, Manchester, he says: 'The congregation was really awful. Perhaps I never preached as I did this morning. I had the kingdom of God opened to me, and the glory of the Lord filled the whole place. Toward the conclusion the cries were great. It was with great difficulty that I could get the people persuaded to leave the chapel. Though the press was immense, yet scarcely one seemed willing to go away, and those who were in distress were unable to go. Some of the preachers went and prayed with them, nor rested till they were healed. God has done a mighty work.' Again he says, of a sermon in Bristol: 'I am this instant returned from King street. The chapel crowded, crowded! And God, in a most especial manner, enabled me to deliver such a testimony from 1 Thess. 1: 3, as I think I never before delivered. I did feel as in the eternal world, having all things beneath me, with such expansions of mind as the power of God alone could give. I was about an hour and a half, and am torn up for the day.' 'I would not,' he said, on another occasion, 'have missed coming to this place for five hundred pounds. I got my own soul blessed, and God blessed the people, I felt (stretching out his arms, and folding them to his breast) that I was drawing the whole congregation to me closer and closer, and pulling them away from the world to God.' He is known to the Methodist world mostly by his writings, but his real greatness was in the pulpit. One of his hearers wrote: 'In respect to the unawakened, it may indeed be said that he obeys that precept, 'Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet.' His words flow spontaneously from the heart; his views enlarge as he proceeds, and he brings to the mind a torrent of things, new and old. While he is preaching one can seldom cast an eye on the audience without perceiving a melting unction resting upon them."

The Boston Conference and my late Visits.

"BITTER—SWEET."

Bro. Morgan:—I had the privilege of attending the late Boston Conference at Chapman Hall most of the time, and it was specially interesting to me, for many reasons. First, because of meeting in love and good fellowship so many of those who fearlessly preach the everlasting gospel which brings life and immortality to light, giving through faith pardon and peace, and at the coming of Christ eternal life.

Secondly, for the inexpressible pleasure of seeing so many of like precious faith that have been so long in this warfare, and are still holding on, fighting the good fight, willing to bear reproach and suffer if need be for their love of Christ and his word, and to find a harmony with love and outspoken frankness indicating a whole soul in the work, found only among those who love Jesus Christ and his appearing.

Thirdly, there was christian liberality and freedom enjoyed, so that all could speak out their faith according to their own judgment, leaving the hearer to "prove all things and hold fast that which is good." And surely the freedom of speech should be tolerated by us who have been so clamorous at times about its restriction, and a refusal to be heard on our "present truth." It is only the golden rule of doing as we would be done by, and it is beneath a man not to freely accord to another what we claim for ourselves. But suppose we have to hear things we do not believe, what then? This is no more than we expect and demand of others; consequently I rejoice in the liberality and freedom that existed in the conference. I heard things I did not believe, and I expected to before I went. I heard some things new, and this I expected. Things new and old are to be brought out of the treasure-house. Thus, I say, let the channel be kept open, and the love of God predominating, all will work for the advancement of truth. We need more patience and forbearance with those that differ from us, also with our own differences; perseverance and endurance amid trials must be ours if we would receive "the crown of life." Thus, whatever may be said, I can say of the meeting that it was a good one; and it will lead all to a searching of the Scriptures, to which we shall all do well to take heed; no Popish dictation; but search, compare, receive, believe, and obey the Bible in the love of it, and be in the light, letting it shine, and others will be affected as the result of our labor.

Leaving the conference reluctantly, but with a hearty God bless and speed all my brethren onward to the celestial city and heavenly home, I went to Plymouth—spent certain days, having meetings every day. I found a good state of things in the church, and a corresponding interest to hear the word by the people. It was pleasant to labor among them; we had a good season of joy, grace, and peace. The old "go-through disciples" were seen at their post, and the young were not backward; showing their love and zeal for Christ by confessing the truth with their mouths to salvation. From Plymouth I went to New Bedford to spend Sunday, the first in April. Here I found an interesting church and congregation to preach to, and we had a precious communion season. After preaching to the saints, I was sorry not to be able to have made an acquaintance with them, and ardently hope my labor among them will not be in vain in the Lord. The conference meeting was good indeed; in their testimonies there was a manifest determination not only to hold out, but to increase in faith and love, to "watch and pray always, that they may escape all these things coming on the earth, and stand before the Son of man." Others felt the need of yielding to Jesus Christ as their only hope, that with us they may be saved when the jewels are made up.

In conclusion, I hope that we that preach the gospel may make it more of a heart work by the Spirit of God; that we may be more efficient in quickening and comforting the disciples, and also in winning souls to Christ. In much love and peace,

German Tracts.

Dear Bro. Grant:—My third tract, "The Personal Coming of Christ, as the only Time of our Redemption," is coming out of press in a few days. I have taken particular pains to make it as plain and to the point as possible. It is a tract just suiting the present times, and something which our German population, who seem to be entirely ignorant about the glorious doctrine of the second coming of Christ, stand very much in need of. It shows conclusively, from the word of God (quoting a great number of passages from the Bible), that there is no eternal life except through Jesus Christ alone, and no redemption before his personal appearing; this being therefore the only hope of the true church of Christ. I wish those brethren who desired that this glorious doctrine of the soon coming of our Lord to redeem his people, should also be make known to our many German brethren, and who have any opportunity to distribute tracts of this kind amongst them, would send me their orders as soon as possible. I can furnish these tracts at the following prices: $4.00 per hundred; 50 cts. per dozen; 5 cts. per number. Gratis to those who are not able to pay. There are now three of my German tracts out:

I. The state of man between death and resurrection.

II. The resurrection of the dead.

III. The personal coming of Jesus Christ.

The first two tracts I can furnish at the price of $2 and $3 per hundred. Yours in Christ,

L. Reimer.

Campmeeting.

As some of our brethren think a Campmeeting further east than Wilbraham would serve many better in these hard times, Bro. Munger proposes the first Monday in June for this meeting, and I think very favorably of the time. New Market Junction, N. H., is the place, if we can get it. What say brethren? Is there any objection?

L. Boutell.

For the Crisis.

From Iowa.

Bro. Grant:—Times are very hard here, yet I want to take the Crisis another year, for I feel as though I should hardly know how to do without it. I prize the precious truths it publishes to the world weekly very much; I am one of those who, like Moses, would rather suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season.

We seldom have any Advent preaching here. Bro. M. Chandler preached here last May, and since then we have had no one to publish the "glad tidings" of the coming kingdom. Yet there are a "faithful few" left, who are still praying—

"Lord, let thy kingdom come,
And gather the ransomed home."

We are all very well acquainted with the Associate Editor, Bro. Morgan. His friends in this place will never forget him, nor his ardent labors to do good. Faithfully did he warn this people of their impending danger,—of the nearness of the judgment, etc. etc. I am one of those that hope ere long to grasp the hand of friendship, on the blest plains of immortality, with those that in this life we may never have seen, yet have loved with christian love, and those too that perchance we may have seen, yet not met for many long years. O, what a joyous meeting that will be! God grant we may be there, is my prayer. Yours in Christ, H. A. Wate.

Missionary Work.

This is emphatically the time to go into the highways and hedges, and compel men to come in, that the house may be filled. New places should be visited; and while the faithful preacher has a love and desire to go into such places, he cannot readily without the help and co-operation of the church in this blessed, God-like work.

Now if there can be an interest waked up in this department, it would be well pleasing to the Lord. The people are ready to hear in most of the new places we visit. Therefore let the brethren look up places where they have not heard, and let them, even in these hard times, contribute money to sustain the faithful laborer in this department, so that he may be able to feel that he not only has help from the Lord, but from the church. I would that Massachusetts would sustain one agent in new fields entirely. Brethren, what can be done?

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Holderness, N. H., March 23d, 1862, Bro. Horace B. York, aged forty-seven years.

Bro. York heard and embraced the gospel of the kingdom in 1843, and remained a faithful advocate of the same to the time of his death. He was an endeared and affectionate husband, a kind and faithful father, a much respected and honored citizen, and died mourned and lamented by all who knew him.

J. Couch.

Died, in Lawrence, Mass., Jan. 17th, 1862, Anna Drake, wife of Nathaniel P. Drake, aged fifty-five years.

Sister Drake was a devoted christian, an affectionate wife, a faithful mother, and a respected member of the church of Christ. She had been looking for and joyfully anticipating the speedy advent of her Savior since 1843. She died in confident expectation of being raised from the dreamless sleep of death, and changed into the likeness of Him who died for her, to meet all the redeemed in the kingdom of God.

Herald, please copy.

Died, of diphtheria, Feb. 21st, in Washburn, Aroostook, Me., Lucinda J., daughter of Gould and Hepzibah Crouse, aged sixteen years, six months, twenty-three days.

She calmly fell asleep in Jesus, and awaits that blest morn when the trump of God shall awake her to immortal life and blessedness beyond the grave. She lived the life of the righteous, and her end like his was peace. At the age of fourteen she became a member of the Christian Church. Her life was exemplary, her piety deep-toned. She filled a large place in many hearts, that truly sympathize with the bereaved. Her funeral was attended by a large circle of relatives and friends. A very comforting and appropriate discourse was delivered on the occasion by Eld. M. W. Corliss, from Rev. 14: 13.

Also, March 6th, Sister Huldah, of diphtheria, aged fourteen years, ten months, ten days.

We hope to meet her in the better land, where the inhabitants shall never say I am sick, neither can they die any more. Eld. N. G. Read addressed a large and attentive audience from 1 Cor. 15: 21, 23. May God Almighty bless the surviving friends, sanctify this affliction to their good, and save them an unbroken family with all the blood-washed to the kingdom of his dear Son.

Two maidens pure as ever bloomed
In a few days have been entombed,
Lucinda, Huldah, pure and fair,
Now sleep in dreamless silence there.
The fairest flowers in all our land
Have fallen 'neath the monster hand;
The cherished ones of many hearts
Lie prostrate 'neath his poisonous darts.

Fondly we hoped Huldah might stay,
When dear Lucinda passed away.
O! how we watched around her bed.
Many the prayers in tears we said;
Alas! no hand from death could stay,
Its cold, dark tide bore her away,
But glory be to God on high,
We'll meet ere long no more to die.

Dear parents, brethren, sisters too,
Kind hearts shall sympathize with you,
Yea, God himself shall sympathize,
To him lift up your streaming eyes;
From his dear hand shall blessings flow,
To soothe and heal your hearts' deep wo,
For God shall comfort and sustain
Till you immortal glory gain.

Christian F. Churchill.

Died, in Windsor, Mass., March 11th, 1862, of consumption, Ichabod Mason, aged sixty-eight years.

Discourse by the writer from Eccl. 9: 10. Bro. Mason was baptized by being planted in the likeness of Christ's death some two or three years ago, and attended meeting with us at the Pond school-house, although a member of the Congregational church. He waits the resurrection morn.

FOREIGN NEWS.

New York, April 11. Steamship Asia, from Liverpool 29th ult. and Queenstown 30th.

The news is most meagre. The Government announced in the House of Commons on the 28th, that it would make concessions on the Educational question in order to settle the controversy. The opposition expressed great satisfaction.

Sir F. Smith had given notice in the House of Commons that he should call attention to the engagement of the Merrimac and Monitor, and ask whether, in consequence of its results, Government would not suspend the construction of iron plated ships until the question of iron plated gunboats is considered. The amalgamation of the Southern and regular armies of Italy is officially decreed.

London, April 4. It is supposed that England will withdraw from the expedition to Mexico, but that there will be no rupture between the allies. England abstains merely from interfering.

Inquiries have been made in England by agents of the American Government as to the price of iron plates for ships.

The Morning Post calls attention to the improvements America is making in ordnance, the weight of shot thrown by the Monitor being nearly double that used on board any British ship.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Chicago, April 8. Island No 10 is ours! The details have not been received, but the rebels are supposed to have escaped.

Our forces have captured several transports and gunboats, and among them the Ram Manassas.

The men, guns and transports are in our hands.

LATER.

Gen. Pope has captured three Generals, six thousand prisoners of war, one hundred siege guns and several field batteries, with an immense quantity of small arms, tents, wagons, horses and prisoners. Our victory is complete and overwhelming. We have not lost a single man.

Chicago, April 8. A private dispatch received in this city to-night from one of Gen. Grant's staff says that we have fought and won the hardest battle ever fought on this continent.

A special dispatch to the Times from Cairo says that 6000 prisoners, including seven officers, thirty pieces of artillery, a large quantity of ammunition, muskets and small arms were captured on the island.

It is said that the rebels have become perfectly demoralized. In many cases whole regiments refuse to obey orders. Much ill-feeling prevailed among the officers, and none had any confidence in the commanding officer.

THE BATTLE OF PITTSBURG.

Cincinnati, April 12. The Gazette's Pittsburg, Tenn., correspondent says the sum and substance of the battle on Sunday—we were pushed from disaster to disaster till we lost every division camp we had, and were driven within half a mile of the landing when the approach of night, the timely aid of the gunboats and the tremendous effort of our artillerists and Buell's approach saved us.

On Monday, after nine hours hard fighting, we simply regained what we had lost on Sunday. Not a division advanced half a mile beyond our old camps on Monday, except Gen. Wallace's.

The lowest estimate placed in our loss of killed and wounded is at 3300, and in prisoners from 3000 to 4000. The rebel loss in killed and wounded is probably much heavier. The rebels, in their retreat, left acres covered with their dead.

The Boston Journal of the 12th says:

"It is very difficult yet to form an accurate idea of the battle of Pittsburg, from the accounts that have reached us. They conflict as to several important points, and are confused as to others. We can only conclude with certainty that after a day and a half of severe fighting, the enemy was decidedly repulsed.

All statistics respecting the engagement thus far received are not reliable. The numbers on each side must have been nearly equal. We are inclined to receive as the most correct statement of our losses, 7000 in all, 2000 missing and 5000 killed and wounded."

Near Yorktown, Va., April 12. The sun shone brightly yesterday and to-day, much to the relief of the thousands of soldiers who are compelled to sleep in the open air. The roads are still in a very bad condition. The rebels continue to open with artillery whenever they discover a picket post, to which our guns never reply. The rebel forces have been greatly increased within the last two days. On Thursday several vessels were seen to land troops at Yorktown, and also Gloucester, opposite, which place has not been occupied up to this time. Reinforcements have also been received from Norfolk by way of the James river.

The balloon reconnoissance made yesterday shows that the rebels have materially strengthened their works since the advance of the Federal troops, and that many additional guns had been placed in position.

On Friday, while the 12th New York volunteers were on picket duty in front of the enemy's works, near York river, a regiment of rebels came out from under cover and advanced in line of battle. The Federals poured in upon them a deadly fire of Minie balls, when the rebels retired, leaving their dead and wounded, which they afterwards removed in ambulances.

Later in the day the rebels advanced in considerable force from another point, driving in our entire pickets and burning a dwelling used by the Federal troops.

New York, April 13. A special dispatch to the Sunday Mercury, from Washington, says there are not 5000 rebels between Gordonsvill and Richmond. The Rappahannock river is very high.

The same paper states that it had advices from Port Royal to the effect that an assault on Savannah had been arranged for April 8.

The advance pickets of the Union army were within eight miles of Savannah on the 7th. Nearly all our military force had been distributed in the interior, and those on Dawfuskie Island had been reinforced.

St. Louis, April 12. Arrivals from Ironton say that the rebel General Van Dorn is at Pittman's Ferry, on the Currant river, near the Missouri line, with ten or twelve thousand troops awaiting reinforcements.

It is reported that the rebels have withdrawn their forces from Northwestern Arkansas and are concentrating them at Pocahontas, in the Northeastern part of that State. Their force at that point is represented to be 10,000. The Federal forces under Gen. Steele are between Greenville, Mo., and Arkansas, prepared to meet any movement the rebels may make.

Washington, April 11. The passage of the bill to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia was followed by applause in the House to-day. Only two members from the slave-holding States—Messrs. Blair of Missouri and Fisher of Delaware—voted for it.

Mr. Cyrus Field arrived here this morning direct from London, and reports that the feeling in England and France in favor of this country is daily increasing.

It is said that Mr. Field brought with him from Europe proposals from influential capitalists to supply a very large amount of war material to the United States, to be delivered in New York, and payable entirely in bonds of our government.

Fortress Monroe, April 11. The Merrimac, Jamestown and Yorktown, and several gunboats and tugs, appeared between Newport News and Sewall's Point. The only damage done us is the capture of three small vessels, one empty and one loaded, it is said, with coal.

The best authorities seem to be of the belief that there is no present intention on the part of the rebels to use the Merrimac, only to prevent our gunboats going up James river to shell their right wing, which rests on Warwick river, running into James river. It is also hinted that, when the proper time comes, which will not be long, our Monitor and her assistant ship will prove the iron mail of the Merrimac and of her consorts in their chosen positions.

Chicago, April 14. A special dispatch to the Journal from Cairo says that Beauregard called a council of war of all the best generals before the battle of Pittsburg. The following policy was fixed on. If they beat us, they would follow us and drive us north as far as possible. If beaten, they would withdraw their forces and make a desperate stand in the Gulf States.

The whole rebel army in the battle was 123 regiments, or 75,000 men.

Our total killed and wounded is now estimated at 8000.

Gen. Wallace of Illinois was at last accounts still living, with slight hopes of his recovery.

These facts were obtained from a Brigade Quartermaster, who was taken prisoner.

At Pittsburg no battle is expected for several days, heavy rains having made the roads impassable for artillery and army wagons.

The 9th Illinois regiment could count but two hundred effective men after the battle, the 11th Illinois forty, and the 12th Iowa but seventeen.

New Mexico. At Pigeon's ranch, fifteen miles from Santa Fe, on the 28th ult., Col. Hough met a force of 1100 Texans strongly posted at the mouth of a cannon.

The fight began about noon. Col. Hough engaged them in front with seven companies, while Major Cherrington with four companies engaged them in the rear. The fight continued till four o'clock.

The Federal loss was 3 officers, and twenty privates killed, and forty to fifty wounded.

The rebel loss is not known.

Subterranean Prison.—Some workmen employed in digging a well in Seville, Spain, a short time since, discovered some subterranean masonry, which, on investigation, proved to contain numerous cells, in one of which four human bodies, perfectly mumified, were found chained to the walls. One of them was that of a bare-footed monk, the garments of the others were of the style of the last century. A silken shirt worn by one of the bodies was the only garment in tolerable preservation. They are supposed to have been victims of the Inquisition, chained in the cells and starved to death.

Great Contrast in the Season.—In Scituate, Mass., the farmers were getting in their oats April 13th. The same day a letter received from Dixfield, Me., stated the snow was four feet deep in the woods, and two feet in open land, and good crossing a river on the ice.

H. L. HASTINGS, PROVIDENCE, R. I.

For the Crisis.

"I will come again."

1.

"I'll come again," saith Jesus
Unto his little flock;
Fear not! though angry billows
Thy earthly bark may rock.
"I'll come again," saith Jesus,
'T was for your sake I came;
Ye! my chosen sons of light,
For you I bore the shame.

"I'll come again," saith Jesus;
Why shed these bitter tears?
Ever lives the "Comforter,"
Dispelling all thy fears.
"I'll come again," saith Jesus;
Love ye one another,
Closely twine the golden cord,
Heart-bound to thy brother.

3.

"I'll come again," saith Jesus,
My peace I leave with you;
Not as the cold world giveth,
MY PEACE is pure and true.
"I'll come again," saith Jesus,
Immortal life to give;
And they who wait my coming
Shall in the "New Earth" live.

4.

"I'll come again," saith Jesus;
Keep all thy garments pure,
Thy lamp all trimmed and burning,
Earth's doubting ones assure.
O, come again, dear Master!
Nor stay thy coming long;
Thy little flock are waiting
To sing the blest "new song."

5.

O, come again, our Jesus!
And "death," our direst foe,
In chains is doomed to wander
The fiery depths below.
O come again! we're waiting
To hear the trumpet sound,
Our dead in Christ to waken
From out the cold, cold ground.

6.

Our loved ones gathered round us,
We'll meet thee in the air,
Immortal bodies rising,
To greet the Bridegroom fair.
Help us to live, dear Master!
Thy jewels may we shine,
Stars upon thy diadem,
Saved through thy love divine.

For the Crisis.

Maine State Mission.

The brethren and citizens of Rome being solicitous for me to re-visit them, and hold a series of meetings among them, I left home Jan. 23d for that town. Passing through Wayne, and tarrying over night with Bro. Bartlett and Mr. Roberts at their residence, I was happy to learn that Mrs. R. had been converted to God since I last saw her, and that Mr. Roberts himself was still serious and near the point of submission. Thanks be to God, since then the husband and father has decided to be a christian, and is now happy in God, as I am informed. Friday evening I preached in Vienna, the neighborhood of Eld. Sevey, and found the revival begun at our Conference still in progress, and the friends rejoicing in God's visitation of mercy, and sinners coming home to God. Eld. Sevey I found still laboring under disease of body and unable to preach. He should be made a special subject of prayer by the churches, for we greatly need his gifts and services in the cause of God. May the Lord restore this brother to health and commission him anew to his work.

On Saturday I started on my journey for Rome, to meet my appointment in the evening, but had not gone far before I was overtaken by a severe snow storm, which so blinded me that I came near losing my way. I however made out to reach Bro. Huntoon's, where I put up, and was kindly cared for until the storm abated, when I endeavored to reach Rome before night. The storm again set in and prevented a gathering in the evening, and raging on the Sabbath blockaded our efforts until Tuesday evening, when we had a good assembly, and preached to them the Word. Our meetings having been interrupted by the storm, however, and the Bristol Conference coming on at once, we concluded to omit any further special effort at this time, hoping to see and labor with this people when the roads would be more passable.

Wednesday morning, the 29th, I started for Bristol Round Pond. The roads were in a bad condition, and I had not proceeded far before it began to storm again; but I kept on my way, reaching Augusta at noon, and New Castle in the evening. I endeavored to reach the residence of Bro. Ralph Harley, to tarry for the night; but after many fruitless attempts, owing to his residence being completely blockaded by snow and ice, I gave it up and lodged with strangers. The next day I proceeded on my journey to Damariscotta, where I found the dwelling of Bro. Campbell, and shared the pleasure of seeing and enjoying the hospitable kindness of this brother and his family, where also I found Bro. Wellcome, who the evening previous had rather a worse time in reaching this Brother's residence than myself in endeavoring to reach that of Bro. Harley. After dinner Bro. C. and myself proceeded on to Bristol, leaving Bro. W. to come on in the evening, after attending to some business. We reached Bristol in time for our evening service, and our conference began in a good spirit. It was held in the "Union House," a convenient place of worship. The audiences throughout our meeting were large, the evening especially, and quite attentive. The choir was made up of all faiths—mostly, however, Universalists; and usually in the evening we were under the necessity of selecting our hymns from the Universalist Hymn Book. We found, however, a number quite suitable ones, that we thought would suit our faith very well, with our version of them. The Word preached during our conference was proclaimed in all due fidelity, and listened to with a good degree of interest and solemnity. The brethren and sisters were quickened and revived, and the community were made to feel that we had followed "no cunningly devised fable" in making known the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. In Bristol we found several good and excellent brethren and sisters, with whom we spent several days in christian fellowship to our profit. Bro. Wellcome, I. K. and J. Partridge and myself were the ministering brethren present.

Feb. 6th I commenced a series of meetings in Lincolnville. Bro. Blood, abundant in good works, had fitted up his old store for meetings during the week days. On the Lord's day we assembled in the Old Church. Our meetings were reviving and strengthening to the saints, and interested that portion of the community who were disposed to come out. Some prejudice was removed, and we had some tokens that the truth was working upon several minds. It was thought that, could our efforts have been continued a few days longer, a revival might have followed. We hope to visit this people again, and the dear and beloved friends of the cause with whom we have just formed an agreeable acquaintance. Brethren and sisters in Lincolnville and Hope, and the region round about, be faithful, and rally for a meeting of general interest hereafter, for your benefit and that of your friends and fellow men bound to the judgment of the great day, and prepare to meet your God. Remember me in your prayers.

Feb. 10th and 11th I spent in Rockport, the residence of Dr. Eaton, a good and intelligent and worthy brother in Christ, and who stands nearly alone battling for the truth. The 12th to 14th in North Searsport. In neither of these places do I find that interest to hear on the truth which I could wish, but our labor was not bestowed in vain on the people we trust. By request of Bro. Tripp, in Searsport, we held one meeting at his residence, for the benefit of his son, who is sick with consumption, and we fear nigh unto death. After endeavoring to preach an appropriate discourse, it was followed by exhortations and prayers, and the season was a solemn one. O may that young man, for whom those parents feel such great anxiety, be converted to God before he is laid away in the silence of the grave! Feb. 15th, accompanied by Bro. Nichols and wife, we went to Orrington. Thanks to Bro. N. and his companion for their warm sympathy for me in my lonely travels. It was pleasant and cheerful to have their company on the way. The Lord bless them with his presence all the way of their pilgrimage to the better land. We tarried a few hours with Bro. Brooks, of Orrington, and then I proceeded on to my appointment at Bangor. Our meetings in this city were interrupted in the beginning from some mismanagement of friends, though undesignedly, yet we fear to the detriment of our cause. On Sabbath we had a good attendance, considering the slight notice given of our meetings in the city, and the above circumstance alluded to. The brethren in Bangor should strive to keep the door open for God's truth to be proclaimed in that city, at least occasionally, till the Lord come. May the Lord open a door of utterance there which cannot be closed, and give his servants faith and zeal in his cause. Bangor is an important place, and there are good brethren there who should not hide their light.

The 17th and 18th I spent in Holden, and preached the word to some little effect I trust. The 19th, taking the parting hands of Bro. Thomas Smith and Clewley, the former saying with a hearty good will, "Peace be with you, brother," I departed on my return journey westward, a distance of fifty miles, to South Albion; and the evening of the 19th found me at the residence of Bro. Carr. A severe storm set in just before reaching Bro. Carr's, and continued the next day, so that I could not proceed on my journey; but I enjoyed rest, and was refreshed by an agreeable visit with our brother and sister in Christ and their parents residing near by. The 21st Bro. Carr accompanied me to Church Hill, near Augusta, where we put up with Bro. Church, who with his companion we found was waiting for us, and welcomed our arrival. On arriving at Bangor I was requested to preach a funeral sermon, and now on my arrival at Augusta I was requested to do the same, and the 22d I attended the funeral of Bro. Choate's daughter in Augusta. There were many at the funeral, and the services were solemn and impressive. The truth spoken on that occasion we trust was comforting to the mourning group, and shed some light on the christian's hope upon the minds of others.

Sabbath, Feb. 23d, I preached in the Calvinist Baptist church in the city of Augusta. The Pastor of the society was present, but preferred to sit in the gallery. He has joined a Lieutenancy of the army, and was accordingly clad in the dress of a military officer. He aided in the worship of the day by joining the choir in singing. The choir and audience both were made up, from external appearance, of the worshipers of Mars and Jesus; and I fear that the god of War had more adorers than the God of Peace. It was truly a strange place for an Advent minister to preach his faith and doctrine. But the Lord had opened the door and way, and I entered in and boldly preached the gospel of the Kingdom, and declared the signs of the times. Some of the Baptist members, who knew nothing of the arrangement for such preaching, thought, after the morning sermon, that "the minister must be an Adventist." In the afternoon the audience was somewhat divided in opinion as to the truth of the doctrine they had heard; some affirming that "there had not so much truth been preached in that house since its erection, as on that day"; others affirming that "the scriptures quoted might with equal propriety have been applicable four thousand years ago." The Pastor himself took occasion to say to me at the close of the afternoon service, "You have given it to us to-day hot and heavy,"—a testimony which to me was encouraging, inasmuch as I wished to do some execution against the batteries of God's spiritual enemies. I remarked to him, "The times are serious, and demand plain preaching." He admitted it, and did not find fault with a man speaking boldly his sentiments, but thought however he could answer my arguments effectually, proving the end of time was not so near at hand as I conceived. I remarked again, "You will soon lose confidence in all human governments."

He replied, "I have already."

"What then is your hope?" I asked.

"My hope is that this government will soon right itself, and be reconstructed on a new basis or constitution, and then be the means in the hands of God of the enlightenment of the world."

I smiled, saying, "Your hope is vain."

O! how I pity the watchmen, that see not the coming events hastening on the earth, nor the glory of the increasing Kingdom of God. And I would that their eyes could be open to see and understand that "the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds," and all-sufficient for any emergency, and that they should be clad in "the whole armor of God," to do battle against the powers of darkness. "Let the potsherds of the earth strive with the potsherds of the earth," but christians should do battle and overcome by the blood of the Lamb, and the word of their testimony, and love not their lives unto the death."

Monday, 24th, I went to North Belgrade, to attend the funeral of a daughter of Mr. Lemuel Lombard of the Quaker persuasion, and wife of Mr. Richardson of New York, son of Bro. Richardson of Lawrence, Mass. Mrs. R had read to her, previous to her death, a letter of the writer, published in the Advent Herald, which had been forwarded to Miss Mary Richardson, sister of the husband of the deceased, who had been with her sister-in-law a few weeks before her death, and in which I noticed the places of many appointments East. Mrs. R. made request therefore that I should attend her funeral, if I could be obtained on the occurrence of her death. While I was in Augusta, Mrs. R. died, and I was sent for to preach her funeral sermon. Owing to one of the worst storms of the season, the funeral was postponed till Thursday, as the roads were impassable, and Mr. Richardson had telegraphed that he would be on on Tuesday. But though the funeral was held so late, yet Mr. R. did not reach Belgrade, every conveyance being blocked by snow, and we were compelled to hide away his beloved consort without his presence, or his being permitted to see her, or follow with his children her remains to the grave. The funeral services were held in the Academy of the village, and a large and sympathizing audience was present, who listened most attentively to a discourse from the words, "They that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."—1 Thess. 4 : 14. This in the providence of God has opened a door in that place for the proclamation of the Kingdom at hand, and the hope of the resurrection from the dead.

This tour was the longest and most tedious I have made since I have begun my mission. I was out in many a storm, and preached constantly, when able to gather congregations—usually twice upon week days, and three times upon the Sabbath—besides visiting and distributing tracts, etc. On arriving at home I found my energies exhausted, which was followed by an ulcerated sore throat, from which I am now rapidly recovering. The Lord be praised for all his care over me, and the health I still enjoy after nineteen years hard service in his vineyard. Brethren, pray for me.

West Poland Conference.

This conference was held according to appointment, March 20th, and we are glad to report was a profitable meeting. Owing to the badness of the roads we were not expecting a large gathering, and the hour for commencement of our meeting had nearly arrived before any one came. "A thin meeting—a dull time—nobody coming, I guess," seemed to be the most fitting words we could utter; when to our joy eleven of our brethren and sisters from Yarmouth came riding up to our doors. Others also came in, and our meeting began under quite favorable auspices. The preaching brethren present from abroad were Fassett, York, and Wellcome, who dispensed the word of life faithfully, and with an excellent spirit. Brethren Howard and Jordan, who live here, also manifested a readiness to help preach, pray and exhort. Finally, all the brethren and sisters seemed willing to do what they could. This made our conference a good one, and left at its close a healthy influence on the minds of all.

One young lady confessed her need of Christ before our conference closed, and we thought best to continue to have evening meetings for awhile, that the interest might increase, and others be blest; and our efforts have not been in vain; two more have sought and found the Savior, and are now rejoicing in his love. One is Bro. True Jordan's daughter—one of those children for whom so many prayers have been offered. May the Lord bring the other children and many more to enjoy the hope of the gospel, is our prayer. Brethren and sisters, pray for us, that after our long hard time of trials and adversity we may again see prosperity, and that there may be fitted up here, and kept in these days of peril, a company who shall be ready to meet the Lord at his coming.

Hymn.

REV. 22: 17-19.

Salvation, O, how free!
'Tis free for you and me!
'Tis free for all who seek for life which Christ holds out so free.
CHORUS.—I'm glad salvation's free,
I'm glad salvation's free;
Salvation's free for you and me,
I'm glad salvation's free.

The Spirit's voice says come!
The Bride calls, child, come home!
Let all who feel athirst for life, believe salvation free.

The door is open still,
And whosoever will,
May come and take of life, so free in Christ the sinner's friend.

Now, sinner, do not grieve
The Spirit, but believe
The words of Jesus Christ, who says salvation is so free.

And all who dare withhold
Free grace from young or old,
Christ says his name shall be withheld from out the book of life. H. K. FLAGG.

Inquiries.

BRN. GRANT AND MORGAN:—I should like to have the following questions answered. Is there proof in the saying of Christ, "A spirit hath not flesh and blood as ye see me have," that beings exist who are immaterial, or ethereal, as the Spiritualists say the soul of man is, having a resemblance to the human form, but shadows only?

Is not the term spirit or soul used in Scripture in some places to designate something else than "breath"—viz., 1 Thess. 5: 23, Matt. 26: 41?

What is the true idea contained in 2 Cor. 12: 1-5, and 2 Cor. 4: 16?

Letter from Hayti.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—When I last wrote you from Nassau, N. Providence, I intimated in my letter that I should probably visit the Isle of Cuba next; but instead have found myself in Hayti, the land of freedom and liberty for the black man and his race; and, as far as I have been able to learn by observation, I think they do enjoy at least a comfortable degree of liberty and its blessings; also that they are capable of ruling and governing satisfactorily here, as well as they are considered by many only fit subjects to serve others. I believe that the people here are very well satisfied, and like their present Ruler or President, (Geffrard) who has held that position since the Revolution under their late Emperor, Soloque, who was obliged to flee the country, and now resides in Kingston, Jamaica, I believe.

This place (Cape Haytien) was once the Capitol of Hayti, and much larger than at the present time, but it was mostly destroyed by an earthquake about nineteen years since, and now many of its buildings and streets are lying in ruins, probably as left by the earthquake and the inhabitants years ago. The French language is principally spoken by the inhabitants of this part of the Island. In the east part of the Island, called St. Domingo, the Spanish language is spoken, and it is now under the Spanish rule. The religion is mostly Roman Catholic. In this place there is one small Wesleyan chapel. The services are usually conducted in French, therefore not much enjoyment here for one accustomed to so many privileges and opportunities as at home.

The country is very mountainous, but is considered quite productive. Coffee is raised in abundance, sugar-cane, and almost all kinds of vegetables and fruits of a tropical climate. There is considerable commercial business between the United States and this country.

I will not particularize more at present. I shall probably leave for home in the course of four or six weeks. Till I see you again, pray for me, that I may be an overcomer. Respectfully yours,

T. C. WOOD.

Letter from Br. N. M. Henry.

The German tracts have been received—two bundles—gave some to the German preachers. They pronounce them excellent. The good Lord is prospering the work in the Baptist churches where I have been laboring. Backsliders reclaimed, sinners converted, church members awakened, the great truths of the word of God glow with brightness. Oh! how plain it does look that very soon we shall see "the King in his beauty"; that our eyes "shall behold the land that is very far off"; soon these weary feet will rest.

"When our wanderings all are o'er,
We shall rest on that bright immortal shore,
We shall rest with Christ our Savior,
We shall rest, and rest forever."

The people are an excellent, kind-hearted class, and love the truth. Bro. Grant's four books on "Soul," "Spirit," "What is Man," "Rich Man and Lazarus," are the greatest "settlers" of any thing in print. One Bro. told me he could not be persuaded to part with his for any money. He had read them four times through, and got new light every reading. After working all day in his blacksmith shop, he would ride six miles and back, making twelve or more, nearly fourteen miles, to hear me preach one sermon; and he is one of those that believe clear down into the pocket, as well as many others. I should be glad to pay Bro. Grant and Hastings for their books, and others that have sent me, but it is impossible. I can and will give time, strength, life if need be, but "silver and gold have we none." We have none for tea, coffee, roast beef, beef steaks, silks or satins, ribbons or laces; but books, BOOKS! You have no idea how eagerly they are grasped at. I will send with this one of my many letters. It is from a lady. You may suppress the name, as it is a private letter.*

I have received a letter from the soldier mentioned in "Ramble" No. 4, who had "a whole God and new Bible," written just after the battle of Fort Donelson. After telling me of the scenes of that battle-ground, which were terrible, and of his feelings when the balls were flying all around him like hail, how calm he felt, says he, "And when I think of you, and of the good advice you gave me, and especially of the new light that I can see in God's word, my heart goes up in gratitude to God. O, my friend! may God forever bless you, and may we meet in that land where war will never be." There, that pays for a good deal of hard toil. Let us not be weary in well doing.

Bro. Goodrich, we want you out here—God wants you out here. Will you come? Thanks to Bro. Stedman for his donation.

* DEAR FRIEND.—I am an invalid, and have had no one to drive out with me, or I should have been over to see you long before now. I heard your Sunday sermon, and first week day lecture in this place, which did me more good than any thing I have heard for many years. I attempted to hear you a third time, but was opposed, and have not been allowed to go out since to hear any one, though I did go once by stealth to hear Dr. Bywater. I had never seen or heard God's truth explained in its simplicity before I heard you, though I have been studying and praying over the subject for years. I read in the Home Missionary that the "No Soul Adventists" had been scattering tracts like autumn leaves about the frontier stations. That word "no soul," struck me with a new awakening. In a moment passage after passage of Christ's own words on the subject of life and death, as contained in John's Gospel, dazzling like lightning, flashed upon my mind and memory, and I plainly saw that death meant death, and nothing extra. Still I have no human sympathy in any shape, and I want to know if you will send me one of your books explaining your theory,—one or two old ones will do as well as new for my own use. ***

Conference.

To the strangers scattered throughout Illinois, who have obtained like precious faith through the knowledge of God and belief in the truth:—Dear brethren; the time of our annual meeting is drawing near. Only one short year since it was organized; yet while we have met together in the past, we have had unmistakable evidence that God has blessed our effort in this matter, and many of us are looking forward to our coming meeting with feelings of deep interest. New arrangements must be made to occupy the fields continually opening to us, and cheer the lonely pilgrims scattered over these vast prairies. Without multiplying words, we expect to see a gathering from the East, West, North and South.

This is not our meeting exclusively, it is your meeting, a meeting of the scattered flock to comfort each other, and transact business for the general good of the cause and the salvation of men. If an entire church cannot come, be sure to send delegates. If they are poor, let the church help them to come. The times are hard, money scarce, and many of us are poor. Quite a burden will unavoidably rest on the churches in the vicinity of the meeting. Let us all lend a helping hand, and make it light as we can, but don't stay away because you are poor. Never were we called together under circumstances like the present. Our long deferred hopes are about to be realized. Muttering thunders warn us of the coming storm. Look to Italy, Russia, Poland, Austria, Hungary, and Turkey, then to France and England, and tell us what thou seest? Preparation for war such as the world never beheld. Our own beloved land deluged with blood, and men's hearts failing them for fear. Nature, too, seems disordered. Rivers overflow their banks, the tornadoes sweep across the plain with desolating fury. Strange sights appear in the heavens. A cold and formal church, dreaming of a moral reform and a world's conversion. All these tell us the night is far spent, the day is at hand. A little from this the morning cometh, bright and glorious with its sunny fields and vine-clad hills, and life forever. Come, then, dear brethren, to the feast (perhaps for the last time) with the armor on, and help us build the wall, though it be in troublous times. Come not in the name of a party, of a sect, or a hobby, but come in the name of the Lord of Hosts. H. O. M.

(Concluded.)

At Belgrade Mills, there are a few brethren holding on to the truth, but are lacking that earnest devotion to the cause which the importance of the truth demands. In the dividing of the flock, the removal of some good brethren, and the want of preaching, they have causes for grief, perhaps discouragement, but not inactivity. Bro. Sevey has preached here till he became unable to preach. He first preached the truth here about three years ago, and started a good interest, which has been both fed and taxed by preaching, probably. At Rome, there are a few good brethren scattered over the town, who love the cause and feel an interest in it. But here, too, they are better hearers than helpers. They are too widely scattered to convene at a prayer meeting so readily as in some other places, but prayer-meeting exercise is what they lack, and without which their growth will be slow, and I fear will be wanting.

At Starks, there is a company of brethren raised up under the labors of Bro. Hemenway, and nourished somewhat since by the labors of Bro. D. A. Jones, and, perhaps, the writer also. They are growing well, and the interest is increasing through the prayer meeting, especially, which they maintained to the increase of their own strength, and of their numbers also. They have had bitter opposition to encounter, but they grow in spite of it, and bid fair to hold out to the end. They need the attention of the preaching brethren, as they have not yet had much preaching. At Madison, there are a few striving to live in readiness for the return of the Master. They have preaching but seldom, yet they maintain their prayer meetings, and give good evidence that they are "lively stones" in the church of God. They appreciate the truth, and welcome heartily such as the Lord shall send to preach it. They should be remembered by the preaching brethren. There are various other towns in the vicinity of these places mentioned, where there are a few brethren scattered, whom I have seen, and some I have not seen. There are some places near by, also, which have brethren exceeding in numbers some of the places here mentioned, perhaps, but I speak of those places where I have been, and in all except one where I have preached.

I think on the whole that the cause in Maine is in a growing state. The interest in all or nearly all of the places mentioned in this article was started within the last three years, and in half of them within one year and a half. Every successive Quarterly Conference seems marked by an increase of interest. There is a good degree of devotion to the truth, but less spirituality. I. K. LOMBARD.

A War Picture.

The following narrative will be read with interest, not only for its graphic delineations, but as coming from the son of Bro. W. S. Campbell:—M.

NEWBERN, N. C., March 16, '62.

We left Roanoke on the 11th inst., and embarked on the "Louisiana." We had no doubt but Newbern was our destination. We sailed up the Neuse river and landed about fifteen miles above Newbern, and commenced our march for that city. We had marched about three miles from the place where we had landed, when we came upon one of the rebel batteries, which they had deserted, mounting some eight or nine guns. We followed them on till dark, and then camped on the ground. It rained all night. I found means to forage round, and obtained some chickens, which I made into a pretty good soup; then stretching myself on the ground, with my rubber blanket over me, I fell asleep and knew nothing more until orders were given to start.

On the 14th the fighting commenced; after marching about two miles we heard the firing, and were soon in the midst of it ourselves. We were ordered to advance and support the 27th Massachusetts, and while halting for instructions, under a galling fire of shot, shell, and musketry, Capt. Lee, of Hartford, our brave and gallant Captain, was struck with a cannon ball, and in a few moments met his fate. He lived only about five minutes. I sent a man to attend to him, for we received the order to forward, and I could not stop. On looking around a moment after, I saw our lieutenant go reeling over; that, and seeing our captain killed, made the men flinch somewhat, when I cried, "Boys! let us avenge our captain!" Then they rallied, and we soon found our lieutenant was only stunned—the ball carrying off the top of his cap. After fighting sometime the rebels gave way, and we captured many of them, their camps, cannon, horses, etc. We had in our company five wounded, with arms shot off, and our second sergeant had a leg shot off. There was one killed besides the captain, making seven killed and wounded.

Capt. Lee is dead! I was standing close by him, and it is indeed a miracle that I escaped the same fate. This is fight No. 2 for me, and thank God I am still alive.

I am very respectfully,

Sergeant FRED. CAMPBELL.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

For the Crisis.

"Whose god is their belly."

The grand Lama, Jom, Mahomet, nor in all probability any god, past or present, have had such a numerous progeny of devotees as the above human god. I heard an ardent admirer of the above god a few days since enumerating the ingredients of one single dish often consecrated and set apart for its especial use. It is compounded in the following manner:—Boil a piece of beef, then add a piece of suet, apples, orange peel; cut them very fine; season with a little ground allspice, cinnamon, cloves, black pepper; a very little salt, then add mace, citron, raisins, sugar and molasses, cider, a little old French brandy—mix them well together. Then take superfine wheat flour, and work a suitable quantity of hog's lard into it for a crust, and bake the above eighteen articles, and you have a conglomerate sacrifice to the belly god, called mince pies. O! what a tyrant he is. Millions adore him, and receive in return for their devotion a multitude of diseases, and linger out a lifetime of misery and wretchedness.

"There are a number of us creep
Into this world to eat and sleep;
And know no reason why they're born,
But merely to consume the corn,
Devour the cattle, fowl, and fish,
And leave behind an empty dish;
Then if their tomb stones when they die,
Be n't taught to flatter and to lie,
There's nothing better will be said
Than that they've eat up all their bread,
Drank up their drink and gone to bed."

"Behold this was the iniquity of thy sister Sodom, pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness was in her." Truly the same iniquity is now abounding to a most alarming extent.

A mere mantle of religion will avail naught at the bar of God, if we do not keep the glory of God before us in our eating and drinking as well as in our words and actions. A word to the wise is sufficient on this point, and let us be careful we do not have in the end to "pay like sinners" for what we eat and drink.

"Several years ago, in North Carolina, where it is not customary for the tavern-keepers to charge the ministers anything for lodging and refreshments, a preacher presumingly stopped at a tavern one evening, made himself comfortable during the night, and in the morning entered the stage, without offering to pay for his accommodations. The landlord soon came running up to the stage, and said, 'There was some one who had not settled his bill.' The passengers all said they had but the preacher, who said he understood that he never charged ministers anything. 'What, you a minister of the gospel—a man of God?' cried the innkeeper; 'you came to my house last night—you sat down to the table without a blessing; I lit you up to your room, you went to bed without praying to your Maker, (for I stood there until you retired,) you arose and washed without prayer, ate your breakfast without saying grace, and as you came to my house like a sinner, and ate and drank like a sinner, you have got to pay like a sinner!'"

O! how much money could be saved by temperate living. The majority of our wants, or at least many of them, are imaginary. Sit down and think them over, and see if is not so. Abstinence from the king's meat and drink in the days of the Hebrew captives did result to the glory of God, and temperate living commended itself to the conscience of the heathen during the captivity of Daniel. See the first chapter; read from the 8th verse to the end. Come, beloved, let us prepare for the marriage supper, and let us keep the Lord before our eyes, that in eating and drinking we may do all to the glory of God. Amen.

For the Crisis.

Waiting.

We wait the resurrection power,
When from their silent sleeping
The saints shall bidden be to rise,
And leave death's potent keeping.
A stronger hand, at God's command,
The spoiler spoils and binds him too;
No more to stain his fair domain,
Whose power createth all things new.

We wait the coming of that hour,
That grand and glorious dawning,
That scatters all of night, and brings
The one eternal morning.
Now the warning of that morning's
Near approach with joy we hail,—
Holy joy nought can alloy,
'Tis His word that cannot fail.

We wait the time of earth's releasing
From her sighs, her groans, her tears,
When her tormentor's power ceasing,
Peace succeeds to pangful fears.
Pain, anguish, blood, a surging flood,
Lo! these do mark her portion now,—
Restorer great! the hour we wait
That writeth joy upon her brow

And we her sorrowing children wait,
So weak, so frail, oft near despair,
We pray, O Savior, haste the hour
That moulds us in thine image fair
Now is the hour of evil's power,
O! Healer of the sin-sick soul,
We wait for thee, we pray for thee,
Till thou shalt come and make me whole.

And darker now the night doth seem,
The storm grows fiercer, list that blast!
Our frail barques one by one go down,
And some upon the rocks are cast!
Still, patient we would wait for thee,
Nor mercy's hour deem too long;
And soon to cheer thou wilt appear,
Our Hope and Healer, Joy and Song.

The Opening of the Seventh Seal.

"And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour."—Rev. 8: 1.

"Come near, ye nations, to hear; and hearken, ye people: let the earth hear, and all that is therein; the world, and all things that come forth of it. For the indignation of the LORD is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies: he hath utterly destroyed them; he hath delivered them to the slaughter." Here observe, what God purposes to do, is represented as already done; what follows explains it as future. "Their slain also shall be cast out, and their stink shall come up out of their carcases, and the mountains shall be melted with their blood. And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll: and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig tree." This is figurative language to represent the fall of armies expressly mentioned verse 2. As the Jewish armies fell when Jerusalem was taken by the Romans as the executioners of God's vengeance upon that nation, so all the armies of antichrist shall fall at the great day of the Lord's vengeance upon all the wicked nations. Hence the vine and fig tree, which are emblems of the Jewish nation, are introduced in making the comparison. "For my sword shall be bathed in heaven: behold it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment. The sword of the Lord is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams: for the Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumia. And the unicorns shall come down with them, and the bullocks with the bulls; and their land shall be soaked with blood, and their dust made fat with fatness." By the unicorns and bullocks must be meant the leaders and commanders of their armies, "the kings of the earth, the great men, the rich men, the chief captains, and the mighty men," Rev. 6: 15, who shall come down or fall with them—their armies. "All their host shall fall down," verse 4. "For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion." Here Zion seems to mean the true Church. This eighth verse is evidently parenthetical, thrown in as an explanation; for verse 9, "the streams thereof," refers not to Zion, but to "their land," verse 7. "And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch. It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up for ever: from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it for ever and ever." This language forcibly brings to mind the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah, Gen. 19: 24, from which our Lord derives an illustration and a warning, Luke 17: 29, 30,—"But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all: even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." Jude also, speaking of the destruction of "ungodly men," verse 4, says, verse 7, that "Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, are set forth as an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." But this in Isaiah is spoken of the land of all nations upon whom rests the indignation of the Lord, verse 2. The terms "for ever and ever," in this connection, cannot be designed to express endless duration; for the same land is ultimately to be made the abode of the righteous. "From generation to generation it shall lie waste"; and this must limit the signification of "for ever and ever" in this connection; and this may mean, from the end of the present order of things or dispensation, to the beginning of the new, which Christ calls "the regeneration," Matt. 19: 28; and Paul, "the dispensation of the fulness of times," Eph. 1 10.

The interim between the two dispensations is from generation to generation, the day of the Lord's vengeance, while the kingdoms of this world are being broken to pieces. The prophet continues:—"But the cormorant and the bittern shall possess it: and he (the Lord) shall stretch out upon it the line of confusion, and the stones of emptiness,"—referring to a mason who builds stone walls and bridges by a line. "They shall call the nobles thereof to the kingdom, but none (no kingdom, no permanent government) shall be there, and all her (the earth's) princes shall be nothing. And thorns shall come up in her palaces, and brambles in the fortresses thereof: and it shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls. The wild beasts of the desert shall also meet with the wild beasts of the island, and the satyr shall cry to his fellow; the screech owl also shall rest there, and find for herself a place of rest. There shall the great owl make her nest, and lay, and hatch, and gather under her shadow: there shall the vulture also be gathered, every one with her mate."

Here this doleful picture ends, and here the chapter should have ended. The last two verses evidently begin the opposite picture, and should have been placed at the beginning of the next chapter. "Seek ye out of the book of the Lord and read: no one of these shall fail, none shall want her mate." This certainly cannot be said of the vultures mentioned in the preceding verse, unless they were immortal; for when one died, the living would want her mate. The book of the Lord is the book of life, and none of those whose names are written therein shall fail, none shall want her mate or Husband, to whom the true church as a chaste virgin is espoused, 2 Cor. 11. 2, waiting, and making herself ready to become the bride at the marriage supper of the Lamb. Rev. 19: 7–9; and 21: 9. The church is composed of individuals; and hence none shall want her Mate; "for my mouth it hath commanded, and his Spirit it hath gathered them"—referring to those whose names are in the book of life, and who are called "the redeemed," and "the ransomed of the Lord." Isa. 35. 9, 10. "And he (the Lord) hath cast the lot for them (his redeemed), and his hand hath divided it (the land) unto them (referring to the division of the land of Canaan by Joshua 15. 1, and on): they shall possess it for ever; from generation to generation shall they dwell therein. The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them (the Lord's people, not the vultures); and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose." This is the same land that was laid waste, and inhabited by wild beasts of the desert, 34: 14. "It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon; they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God. Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not; behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will come and save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in the habitations of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass, with reeds and rushes." This shows conclusively, that the same land which was a habitation of dragons, 34: 13, is renewed; and consequently the term "for ever and ever," denoting the period during which none should pass through it, verse 10, cannot there mean endless duration. "And an high way shall be there, and it shall be called, The way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those (the redeemed): the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon; it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there: and the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

Thus ends the second picture; both of which are drawn by the Revelator between the opening of the sixth and seventh seals. The first picture had its primary fulfillment in the destruction of Jerusalem and the dissolution of that nation; the second was the result of preaching the gospel accompanied with the Holy Spirit. The opening of the seventh seal should have concluded chapter 7, instead of beginning chapter 8; for it is the conclusion of that vision, and another vision evidently begins with the seven trumpets. The division of the Bible into chapters and verses is a modern invention, and the work is often very improperly done. The seven trumpets are to be understood as giving a series of events in regular chronological order; for after the seals had all been opened, the book could then be read in the order in which it was written. The silence of half an hour after the opening of the seventh seal, indicates time given for a change in the mode of exhibition; and such a change we find takes place previous to the sounding of the first trumpet. In the former vision Christ appeared as a Lamb as it had been slain, in this he appears as another angel distinct from the seven, who came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer. "And there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand. And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into (or upon, margin) the earth; and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake." 8. 3–5. Our Lord himself best explains this figure, Luke 12: 49, 51,—"I am come to send fire on the earth, and what will I if it be already kindled? Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay, but rather division." Consequently this vision represents the beginning of the gospel, and the effects which would result from preaching it. The angel ascending from the east, 7: 2 represents the same thing under a different figure. There Christ and the gospel ministry are represented as another angel distinct from the four standing on the four corners of the earth. There four were restrained for a time from hurting the earth by the voice of Christ. In 9: 14, by the same voice they are commanded to be loosed. The voice is heard from the four horns of the golden altar where Christ is represented in this vision as standing to offer incense with the prayers of all saints. In 5: 8, these prayers are represented as odors (or incense, margin), in the golden vials of the four beasts and four and twenty elders; while Christ is represented by one of the elders as a Lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David, and seen by John as a Lamb that had been slain, about to begin the work of opening the seals of the book. In 10: 1, 2, Christ appears as an angel, "another mighty angel," distinct from the seventh, in the days of whose voice the mystery of God should be finished, verse 7, having in his hand a little book open, which undoubtedly is the same book the seals of which he had now opened. By comparing verse 6 with Dan. 12: 7, it is evident that the same person is represented in both. There it is said that it should be a time, times, and an half to the end of these wonders or mysteries. Here it is said that it should not be a time before the mystery of God should be finished, as I understand the phrase "time no longer," as explained in the following verse: "But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets"; evidently referring to this vision of Daniel.

After John had eaten the book as directed, by which I understand, had thoroughly studied its contents under the guidance of the angel, he was told that he must prophesy again, verse 11; and the same angel, Christ, then immediately gives him the length of the vision the same as in Daniel 12: 7, to the last time of which he had previously been brought. It is plain, therefore, that he was required to go back and review what he had already gone over, and give a more full explanation of it by the use of other symbols. The angel said, "Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple, leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months. And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days clothed in sackcloth." 11: 1–3.

Charity.

Charity, or Divine love, is the main-spring of genuine christianity. It is the heart of vital godliness. It subdues human propensities, and controls the mind. It regulates the motives, and sways the heart of its possessor. Angelic eloquence is nothing without it. Eyes that can distinctly discern boundless futurity, are worthless without it. Ability to untangle perplexing mysteries, is valueless without it. Unlimited knowledge will avail nothing without it. Faith that can chase mountains to the remotest parts of earth, is of no consequence without it. Benevolence that would even rob self to feed the poor, is useless without it. A martyr's spirit even, is of no account without it. Charity is the gem of gems. Nothing is of worth without it. It guides its possessors in paths of peace here, and leads them to regions of felicity hereafter. Without it, christianity is a bubble, and religion a farce. Its characteristics are so distinctly given, that every one may easily decide whether they possess it.

1. Charity "suffereth long." The heart that is regulated by charity is not destitute of the spirit of long-suffering. Do we possess this spirit? 2. "It is kind." The spirit of unkindness is not the offspring of charity. When governed by charity, we are "kind." 3. It "envieth not." When the heart is fully under the influence of charity, it will not harbor envy. 4. It "vaunteth not itself,"—or is not rash. It will subdue this feeling in every heart that it rules. 5. It "is not puffed up." Nor will the man be "puffed up" who is governed by it. Does it fully govern us? 6. It "doth not behave itself unseemly," or unbecomingly 7. It "seeketh not her own," or, is not selfish. Are our hearts under its control? 8. It "is not easily provoked." It regulates the passions. Does it thus regulate our lives? 9. It "rejoiceth not in iniquity." It never joins affinity with iniquity, directly or indirectly.

These are the characteristics of charity, and these are the characteristics also of the heart that is under its control. Have we charity? W. SHELDON.

"Judge Not!"

"Judge not that ye be not judged."—Matt. 7: 1

Judge intransitive. 1 To compare facts or ideas, and perceive their agreement or disagreement, and thus to distinguish truth from falsehood. 2. To form an opinion, to bring to issue the reasoning or deliberations of the mind. 3. To hear and determine, as in causes on trial, to pass sentence. 4. To discern, to distinguish, to consider accurately, for the purpose of forming an opinion or conclusion.

Judge transitive verb. 1. To hear and determine a case; to examine and decide. 2. To try; to examine and pass sentence on. 3. Rightly to understand and discern. 4. To censure rashly; to pass severe sentence. 5. To esteem; to think, to reckon. 6. To rule or govern. 7. To doom to punishment; to punish. By understanding the various significations of the word "judge," we can see why the word of the Lord in some places forbids us to judge, and in others requires us to do it. For instance, our text says, "Judge not"; and Rom. 14: 10, "But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ.... Let us not therefore judge one another any more; but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way"; and 1 Cor. 4: 5,—"Judge nothing before the time."

We learn from these and other similar texts, that it is wrong to censure rashly; to pass severe sentence; to doom to punishment; to punish. We do believe it is wrong for any man to set himself up as a judge of other men's motives on the ground that he has the gift of discerning of spirits. But this does not abrogate the fact, as illustrated by the great Head of the church in Matt. 7: 20,—"Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them." Have we not a right to form an opinion, at least in some cases? Can we avoid it? Is it not enjoined upon us not only to do so but in some cases to express it? In John 7: 24, Jesus says, "Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment." And Paul says, in Cor. 5: 12, 13,—"For what have I to do to judge them that are without? do not ye judge them that are within? But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among you that wicked person."

Do we not express an opinion when we obey the command of the apostle in 2 Thess 3: 6,—"Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which ye received of us"? and also when we mark them that cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine of the apostle and avoid them? Finally, may the Lord help us to discern between truth and error, and sanctify us through the truth. Amen. S. B. MUNN.

Of Truth in Things False.

Error is a hardy plant, it flourisheth in every soil;
In the heart of the wise and good, alike with the wicked and foolish;
For there is no error so crooked but it hath in it some lines of truth
Nor is any poison so deadly that it serveth not some wholesome use.
And the just man, enamored of the right, is blinded by the spuriousness of wrong,
And the prudent, perceiving an advantage, are content to overlook the harm
On all things created remaineth the half-effaced signature of God,
Somewhat of fair and good, though blotted by the finger of corruption;
And if error cometh in like a flood, it mixeth with streams of truth;
And the Adversary loveth to have it so, for thereby many are decoyed
Providence is dark in its permissions; yet one day, when all is known,
The universe of reason shall acknowledge how just and good they were,
For the wise man leaneth on his wisdom, and the righteous trusteth to his righteousness,
And those who thirst for independence are suffered to drink of disappointment.
Wherefore? to prove and humble them, and to teach the idolators of truth
That it is but the ladder unto Him on whom only they should trust.
• • • • • • •
Verily, there is nothing so true that the damps of error have not warped it,
Verily, there is nothing so false that a sparkle of truth is not in it
For the enemy, the father of lies, the giant l[illegible] of creation,
Whose deadly shade hath blasted this once green garden of the Lord,
Can but pervert the good, but may not create the evil;
He destroyeth, but cannot build, for he is not antagonist deity:
Mighty is his own power, yet he is a creature and a subject;
Not a maker of abstract wrong, but a spoiler of concrete right,
The fiend hath not a royal crown, he is but a prowling robber,
Suffered, for some mysterious end, to haunt the King's highway,
And the keen sword he beareth once was a simple ploughshare,
Yea, and his panoply of error is but a distortion of the truth
The sickle that once reaped righteousness, beaten from its useful curve,
With axe, and spike, and bar, headeth the marauder's halbert
Seek not further, O man, to solve the dark riddle of sin,
Suffice it that thine own bad heart is to thee thine origin of evil

Who are Blessed?

Will Jesus come again?

Will he? Lo these eighteen hundred years he has been absent, and what have we but his promise that he will come again? Ah! but what more do we need? Can anything be more certain than the promise of one who cannot lie? Nay, verily. He will come again. Yes, and will come in his own good time, however many or few may be ready for the event; and when he does come all his children will shout Amen! But how many who profess to be his children can now say, Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly? Ah, how many? Can you, my brother, my sister? We, who have been looking for Him lo, these many years, have thus given some evidence that we love his appearing.

But how is it with the great mass of professors? How long have they looked for his appearing? And how much have their ministers preached about his second coming? How much? To the extent that they have left the impression that they love his appearing? Have they? Lamentable though it be, is it not patent even to the most casual observer that such is not the fact? But why have they not preached the second coming of Christ? The reason to me is obvious. It is because they are expecting by another agent, death, what we are expecting by Christ's second coming, viz., eternal life, or as one of the pillars (so called) of the M. E. Church here more than once expressed it, "Death is the door to endless bliss." Therefore to whom "death is the door to endless bliss," what can the coming of Christ be? What? I ask. What can they expect Christ to do for them when he comes? Can he do for them more than death? What beyond "endless bliss" do such expect? D. D. CHAFFEE.

For the Crisis.

A Mournful Letter.

Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, my friends, for the hand of affliction has fallen heavily upon me. My heart is breaking with very grief, and mine eyes are drowned in tears. I refuse to be comforted, because my children are not, because of the invasion of a cruel foe. Not the voice that Jesus sends, never! never! It was a cruel enemy that broke the happy circle, that tore so relentlessly from their stem my fairest flowers, and in their stead has left gloom and sadness. Our two and only daughters, Mary and Lizzie, have fallen victims to that dreadful disease, diphtheria, which has been making such awful ravages in Maine. I presume that many of our dear brethren and sisters with whom we are acquainted, would be glad to know the particulars respecting their sickness and death; some have already written to me to that effect. My feeble state of health will not permit me to answer you individually. This must suffice. My pen refuses, or has refused, to describe the scene through which we have passed this dreadful winter.

Lizzie had been sick ten days when Mary was taken very violently with the same disease, and died on the morning of Jan. 14th, '62, having been sick only four days, aged twenty-one years and nine months. She thought she should get well till the last night, when she became sensible that her case was beyond the reach of human aid. She requested her father to pray for her. The request was complied with, after which she prayed for herself, and then joined her father in singing—

"I have given all for Christ."

She said she had rather live if she could live to do good, but if not, she chose to die. She said to me a short time before she died, I believe Jesus is my friend, and I can say, His will be done. Never so lamb-like and gentle did she seem as through those days of dreadful suffering. Not a murmur escaped her lips, scarcely a groan. It was remarked by a friend who assisted me in taking care of her, that she did not seem like Mary. Her breathing became so distressingly difficult, that with her own hands she tried to extract the false membrane from her throat, and, oh! can my pen reveal it! she died almost instantly in the attempt. O that I could forget the agony of that dreadful scene! Some four or five years since she dreamed she died, and that Elder Ross attended her funeral. She had previously requested that it might be so when she should die. When I saw in the Crisis his list of appointments extending East, I asked myself, Is Bro. R. coming to attend Mary's funeral? She was then in usual health. The answer has been more than mere echo,—the heart-rending reality has passed before my eyes. Some three weeks subsequent to her death her funeral service was attended at Corinna, where Bro. A. Ross addressed a solemn audience from 1 Thess. 4: 18.

Lizzie was away from home with the sick and dying, when at once the blasting hand of early sorrow and withering disease was ruthlessly lain upon her. She had but just returned from the grave of him with whom she had buried the fondest hopes of earthly happiness, when she was seized with the dreadful malady which terminated her sacrificed life, and in just six weeks from that fatal day, she too was carried to the grave. We immediately sought medical aid, but on account of the dreadful storm none could be obtained for nearly one week. It was a week of dreadful suspense, but Lizzie was the most cheerful one among us. She sought to comfort us amid the gloom with which every thing seemed enshrouded. It was an element of her lovely nature which continued to develop itself to the very last. She likewise sought anew the Savior, and found sweet peace, which she longed to tell to the world. She suffered much, but bore all without a murmur. When told by her physician that she must die, she calmly answered, "Well, I am not afraid to die, but still would rather live;" for she well knew a mother's broken heart would hardly bear such dreadful wounds in such quick succession. She exhorted me to trust in the Lord and continue to pray. God help me to remember it. She faithfully exhorted all present, taking each by the hand, bidding them farewell. It was with great difficulty she could talk at all; but as she could not see all of her young friends, she said to me, "Tell them for me to prepare to meet me soon,—now won't you, mother?" As far as I can go, I mean to bear the message. Her encounter with the king of terrors was most terrible. It seemed almost sometimes as if struggling nature would gain the victory; but at length, after an engagement of more than twenty-four hours, the monster secured his prey, and instead of the bridal attire, she wears the habiliments of death. She died on the morning of Feb. 8th, 1862, aged nineteen years and six months. We carried her to Corinna, where, according to her request, Eld. J. Billings addressed us from the blessed language of the prophet recorded in Jer. 31: 15–17.

We have lain our lovely ones side by side, near the place where they spent their childhood days. Our hearts are mute with grief because the music of our home is hushed. The family harp is kept in sacred silence because its sweetest chords are missing. O how we miss them everywhere! The brother weeps because his sisters are gone. All the world to him looks cheerless and drear because he is alone. This truly is the night of weeping. O when will the morning dawn? Let it hasten! Let the voice of the Son of God be heard, when all that are in the graves shall come forth,—when all the children shall come to their own border, and the wail of the bereaved mother be heard no more. Amen.

"Missed his Calling."

Who put man in judge over the appointed work of man? Suppose you that brother has prayed in vain night and day, months and years, to know his duty? Has not the Lord marked out his work, and made duty plain? Ought he not to know the mind of the Spirit concerning him? He has given himself up to be led by a divine hand; God leads him. He has prayed (O how earnestly!) for light. It has come on his path, filling his soul with "perfect peace." He now endeavors to walk in the light. Be careful, ye who have improved on the one talent till nine have been added,—condemn and discourage not thy brother who is trying to improve upon his.

Ye men of God,—watchmen on Zion's walls,—worn and weary shepherds in Israel,—death and the grave are making ready for you. When ye are gone from the world, who will tell sinners of a Savior? Others must live. Let them live. All must be children once. They must walk, before they can run. Let them walk. O! for Jesus' sake, hinder them not. If they stumble, encourage and lift them up. The bravest have discouragements; then what think you of the young and inexperienced? Give them your sympathies. Bid them "God speed." Criticise not too closely. Speak not too sharply. One discouraging word may cause them to fall. When the trembling one comes forth to warn sinners in the name of the Lord, don't cry out, "Missed your calling!" though he may not talk very fluently. Give him time to improve his gifts. There are thousands laboring against the careless neglect of their fathers in Israel, who, though not gifted as orators, are so gifted with the Holy Ghost as to convert many a soul from error's ways. May God continue to bless them with the consolation and encouragements that man so cruelly withholds. Let these "little ones" be remembered in our prayers. God will certainly bless them.

☞ Mr. Cecil was passing to and fro in the Botanic Garden at Oxford, England, when he observed a fine specimen of the pomegranate almost cut through the stem. On asking the gardener the reason, he got an answer which explained the wounds of his own bleeding spirit. "Sir, this tree used to shoot so strong that it bore nothing but leaves. I was, therefore, obliged to cut it in this manner; and when it was almost cut through, then it began to bear plenty of fruit." Ye suffering members of Christ, be thankful for every sorrow which cures a lust or strengthens a grace. Though it should cut to the heart, be thankful for every sin and idol thrown away. Be thankful that it was the pruning-knife, and not the [illegible] which you felt.

Waiting.

We wait the resurrection power,
When from their silent sleeping
The saints shall bidden be to rise,
And leave death's potent keeping.
A stronger hand, at God's command,
The spoiler spoils and binds him too;
No more to stain his fair domain,
Whose power createth all things new.

We wait the coming of that hour,
That grand and glorious dawning,
That scatters all of night, and brings
The one eternal morning.
Now the warning of that morning's
Near approach with joy we hail,—
Holy joy nought can alloy,
'Tis His word that cannot fail.

We wait the time of earth's releasing
From her sighs, her groans, her tears,
When her tormentor's power ceasing,
Peace succeeds to pangful fears.
Pain, anguish, blood, a surging flood,
Lo! these do mark her portion now,—
Restorer great! the hour we wait
That writeth joy upon her brow.

And we her sorrowing children wait,
So weak, so frail, oft near despair,
We pray, O Savior, haste the hour
That moulds us in thine image fair.
Now is the hour of evil's power,
O! Healer of the sin-sick soul,
We wait for thee, we pray for thee,
Till thou shalt come and make me whole.

And darker now the night doth seem,
The storm grows fiercer, list that blast!
Our frail barques one by one go down,
And some upon the rocks are cast!
Still, patient we would wait for thee,
Nor mercy's hour deem too long;
And soon to cheer thou wilt appear,
Our Hope and Healer, Joy and Song.

The Opening of the Seventh Seal.

"And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour."—Rev. 8: 1.

"Come near, ye nations, to hear; and hearken, ye people: let the earth hear, and all that is therein; the world, and all things that come forth of it. For the indignation of the LORD is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies: he hath utterly destroyed them; he hath delivered them to the slaughter." Here observe, what God purposes to do, is represented as already done: what follows explains it as future. "Their slain also shall be cast out, and their stink shall come up out of their carcases, and the mountains shall be melted with their blood. And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll: and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig tree." This is figurative language to represent the fall of armies expressly mentioned verse 2. As the Jewish armies fell when Jerusalem was taken by the Romans as the executioners of God's vengeance upon that nation, so all the armies of antichrist shall fall at the great day of the Lord's vengeance upon all the wicked nations. Hence the vine and fig tree, which are emblems of the Jewish nation, are introduced in making the comparison. "For my sword shall be bathed in heaven: behold it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment. The sword of the Lord is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams: for the Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumia. And the unicorns shall come down with them, and the bullocks with the bulls; and their land shall be soaked with blood, and their dust made fat with fatness." By the unicorns and bullocks must be meant the leaders and commanders of their armies, "the kings of the earth, the great men, the rich men, the chief captains, and the mighty men," Rev. 6: 15, who shall come down or fall with them—their armies. "All their host shall fall down," verse 4. "For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion." Here Zion seems to mean the true Church. This eighth verse is evidently parenthetical, thrown in as an explanation; for verse 9, "the streams thereof," refers not to Zion, but to "their land," verse 7. "And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch. It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up for ever: from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it for ever and ever." This language forcibly brings to mind the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah, Gen. 19: 24, from which our Lord derives an illustration and a warning, Luke 17: 29, 30,—"But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all: even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." Jude also, speaking of the destruction of "ungodly men," verse 4, says, verse 7, that "Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, are set forth as an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." But this in Isaiah is spoken of the land of all nations upon whom rests the indignation of the Lord, verse 2. The terms "for ever and ever," in this connection, cannot be designed to express endless duration; for the same land is ultimately to be made the abode of the righteous. "From generation to generation it shall lie waste"; and this must limit the signification of "for ever and ever" in this connection; and this may mean, from the end of the present order of things or dispensation, to the beginning of the new, which Christ calls "the regeneration," Matt. 19: 28; and Paul, "the dispensation of the fulness of times," Eph. 1 10.

The interim between the two dispensations is from generation to generation, the day of the Lord's vengeance, while the kingdoms of this world are being broken to pieces. The prophet continues:—"But the cormorant and the bittern shall possess it: and he (the Lord) shall stretch out upon it the line of confusion, and the stones of emptiness,"—referring to a mason who builds stone walls and bridges by a line. "They shall call the nobles thereof to the kingdom, but none (no kingdom, no permanent government) shall be there, and all her (the earth's) princes shall be nothing. And thorns shall come up in her palaces, and brambles in the fortresses thereof: and it shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls. The wild beasts of the desert shall also meet with the wild beasts of the island, and the satyr shall cry to his fellow; the screech owl also shall rest there, and find for herself a place of rest. There shall the great owl make her nest, and lay, and hatch, and gather under her shadow: there shall the vulture also be gathered, every one with her mate."

Here this doleful picture ends, and here the chapter should have ended. The last two verses evidently begin the opposite picture, and should have been placed at the beginning of the next chapter. "Seek ye out of the book of the Lord and read: no one of these shall fail, none shall want her mate." This certainly cannot be said of the vultures mentioned in the preceding verse, unless they were immortal; for when one died, the living would want her mate. The book of the Lord is the book of life, and none of those whose names are written therein shall fail, none shall want her mate or Husband, to whom the true church as a chaste virgin is espoused, 2 Cor. 11: 2, waiting, and making herself ready to become the bride at the marriage supper of the Lamb. Rev. 19: 7–9; and 21: 9. The church is composed of individuals; and hence none shall want her Mate; "for my mouth it hath commanded, and his Spirit it hath gathered them"—referring to those whose names are in the book of life, and who are called "the redeemed," and "the ransomed of the Lord." Isa. 35: 9, 10. "And he (the Lord) hath cast the lot for them (his redeemed), and his hand hath divided it (the land) unto them (referring to the division of the land of Canaan by Joshua 15: 1, and on): they shall possess it for ever; from generation to generation shall they dwell therein. The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them (the Lord's people, not the vultures); and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose." This is the same land that was laid waste, and inhabited by wild beasts of the desert, 34: 14. "It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon; they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God. Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not; behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will come and save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in the habitations of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass, with reeds and rushes." This shows conclusively, that the same land which was a habitation of dragons, 34: 13, is renewed; and consequently the term "for ever and ever," denoting the period during which none should pass through it, verse 10, cannot there mean endless duration. "And an high way shall be there, and it shall be called, The way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those (the redeemed): the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon; it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there: and the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

Thus ends the second picture; both of which are drawn by the Revelator between the opening of the sixth and seventh seals. The first picture had its primary fulfillment in the destruction of Jerusalem and the dissolution of that nation; the second was the result of preaching the gospel accompanied with the Holy Spirit. The opening of the seventh seal should have concluded chapter 7, instead of beginning chapter 8; for it is the conclusion of that vision, and another vision evidently begins with the seven trumpets. The division of the Bible into chapters and verses is a modern invention, and the work is often very improperly done. The seven trumpets are to be understood as giving a series of events in regular chronological order; for after the seals had all been opened, the book could then be read in the order in which it was written. The silence of half an hour after the opening of the seventh seal, indicates time given for a change in the mode of exhibition; and such a change we find takes place previous to the sounding of the first trumpet. In the former vision Christ appeared as a Lamb as it had been slain; in this he appears as another angel distinct from the seven, who came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer. "And there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand. And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into (or upon, margin) the earth; and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake." 8: 3–5. Our Lord himself best explains this figure, Luke 12: 49, 51,—"I am come to send fire on the earth, and what will I if it be already kindled? Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division." Consequently this vision represents the beginning of the gospel, and the effects which would result from preaching it. The angel ascending from the east, 7; 2 represents the same thing under a different figure. There Christ and the gospel ministry are represented as another angel distinct from the four standing on the four corners of the earth. There four were restrained for a time from hurting the earth by the voice of Christ. In 9; 14, by the same voice they are commanded to be loosed. The voice is heard from the four horns of the golden altar where Christ is represented in this vision as standing to offer incense with the prayers of all saints. In 5: 8, these prayers are represented as odors (or incense, margin), in the golden vials of the four beasts and four and twenty elders; while Christ is represented by one of the elders as a Lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David, and seen by John as a Lamb that had been slain, about to begin the work of opening the seals of the book. In 10: 1, 2, Christ appears as an angel, "another mighty angel," distinct from the seventh, in the days of whose voice the mystery of God should be finished, verse 7, having in his hand a little book open; which undoubtedly is the same book the seals of which he had now opened. By comparing verse 6 with Dan. 12: 7, it is evident that the same person is represented in both. There it is said that it should be a time, times, and an half to the end of these wonders or mysteries. Here it is said that it should not be a time before the mystery of God should be finished; as I understand the phrase "time no longer," as explained in the following verse: "But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets"; evidently referring to this vision of Daniel.

After John had eaten the book as directed, by which I understand, had thoroughly studied its contents under the guidance of the angel, he was told that he must prophesy again, verse 11; and the same angel, Christ, then immediately gives him the length of the vision the same as in Daniel 12: 7, to the last time of which he had previously been brought. It is plain, therefore, that he was required to go back and review what he had already gone over, and give a more full explanation of it by the use of other symbols. The angel said, "Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple, leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months. And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days clothed in sackcloth." 11: 1–3.

Charity.

Charity, or Divine love, is the mainspring of genuine christianity. It is the heart of vital godliness. It subdues human propensities, and controls the mind. It regulates the motives, and sways the heart of its possessor. Angelic eloquence is nothing without it. Eyes that can distinctly discern boundless futurity, are worthless without it. Ability to untangle perplexing mysteries, is valueless without it. Unlimited knowledge will avail nothing without it. Faith that can chase mountains to the remotest parts of earth, is of no consequence without it. Benevolence that would even rob self to feed the poor, is useless without it. A martyr's spirit even, is of no account without it. Charity is the gem of gems. Nothing is of worth without it. It guides its possessors in paths of peace here, and leads them to regions of felicity hereafter. Without it, christianity is a bubble, and religion a farce. Its characteristics are so distinctly given, that every one may easily decide whether they possess it.

1. Charity "suffereth long." The heart that is regulated by charity is not destitute of the spirit of long-suffering. Do we possess this spirit? 2. "It is kind." The spirit of unkindness is not the offspring of charity. When governed by charity, we are "kind." 3. It "envieth not." When the heart is fully under the influence of charity, it will not harbor envy. 4. It "vaunteth not itself,"—or is not rash. It will subdue this feeling in every heart that it rules. 5. It "is not puffed up." Nor will the man be "puffed up" who is governed by it. Does it fully govern us? 6. It "doth not behave itself unseemly," or unbecomingly. 7. It "seeketh not her own;" or, is not selfish. Are our hearts under its control? 8. It "is not easily provoked." It regulates the passions. Does it thus regulate our lives? 9. It "rejoiceth not in iniquity." It never joins affinity with iniquity, directly or indirectly.

These are the characteristics of charity, and these are the characteristics also of the heart that is under its control. Have we charity? W. SHELDON.

"Judge Not!"

"Judge not that ye be not judged."—Matt. 7: 1

Judge intransitive. 1. To compare facts or ideas, and perceive their agreement or disagreement, and thus to distinguish truth from falsehood. 2. To form an opinion; to bring to issue the reasoning or deliberations of the mind. 3. To hear and determine, as in causes on trial; to pass sentence. 4. To discern; to distinguish; to consider accurately, for the purpose of forming an opinion or conclusion.

Judge transitive verb. 1. To hear and determine a case; to examine and decide. 2. To try; to examine and pass sentence on. 3. Rightly to understand and discern. 4. To censure rashly; to pass severe sentence. 5. To esteem; to think; to reckon. 6. To rule or govern. 7. To doom to punishment; to punish. By understanding the various significations of the word "judge," we can see why the word of the Lord in some places forbids us to judge, and in others requires us to do it. For instance, our text says, "Judge not"; and Rom. 14: 10, "But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. . . . Let us not therefore judge one another any more; but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way"; and 1 Cor. 4: 5,—"Judge nothing before the time."

We learn from these and other similar texts, that it is wrong to censure rashly; to pass severe sentence; to doom to punishment; to punish. We do believe it is wrong for any man to set himself up as a judge of other men's motives on the ground that he has the gift of discerning of spirits. But this does not abrogate the fact, as illustrated by the great Head of the church in Matt. 7: 20,—"Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them." Have we not a right to form an opinion, at least in some cases? Can we avoid it? Is it not enjoined upon us not only to do so but in some cases to express it? In John 7: 24, Jesus says, "Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment." And Paul says, in Cor. 5: 12, 13,—"For what have I to do to judge them that are without? do not ye judge them that are within? But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among you that wicked person."

Do we not express an opinion when we obey the command of the apostle in 2 Thess 3: 6,—"Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which ye received of us"? and also when we mark them that cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine of the apostle and avoid them? Finally, may the Lord help us to discern between truth and error, and sanctify us through the truth. Amen. S. B. MUNN.

Of Truth in Things False.

Error is a hardy plant; it flourisheth in every soil;
In the heart of the wise and good, alike with the wicked and foolish;
For there is no error so crooked but it hath in it some lines of truth:
Nor is any poison so deadly that it serveth not some wholesome use:
And the just man, enamored of the right, is blinded by the spuriousness of wrong,
And the prudent, perceiving an advantage, are content to overlook the harm.
On all things created remaineth the half-effaced signature of God,
Somewhat of fair and good, though blotted by the finger of corruption;
And if error cometh in like a flood, it mixeth with streams of truth;
And the Adversary loveth to have it so, for thereby many are decoyed.
Providence is dark in its permissions; yet one day, when all is known,
The universe of reason shall acknowledge how just and good they were;
For the wise man leaneth on his wisdom, and the righteous trusteth to his righteousness,
And those who thirst for independence are suffered to drink of disappointment.
Wherefore? to prove and humble them, and to teach the idolators of truth
That it is but the ladder unto Him on whom only they should trust.
• • • • • • •
Verily, there is nothing so true that the damps of error have not warped it;
Verily, there is nothing so false that a sparkle of truth is not in it.
For the enemy, the father of lies, the giant Upas of creation,
Whose deadly shade hath blasted this once green garden of the Lord,
Can but pervert the good, but may not create the evil,
He destroyeth, but cannot build, for he is not antagonist deity:
Mighty is his stolen power, yet he is a creature and a subject;
Not a maker of abstract wrong, but a spoiler of concrete right;
The fiend hath not a royal crown; he is but a prowling robber,
Suffered, for some mysterious end, to haunt the King's highway;
And the keen sword he beareth once was a simple ploughshare;
Yea, and his panoply of error is but a distortion of the truth.
The sickle that once reaped righteousness, beaten from its useful curve,
With axe, and spike, and bar, headeth the marauder's halbert.
Seek not further, O man, to solve the dark riddle of sin;
Suffice it that thine own bad heart is to thee thine origin of evil.

Who are Blessed?

Will Jesus come again?

Will he? Lo these eighteen hundred years he has been absent, and what have we but his promise that he will come again? Ah! but what more do we need? Can anything be more certain than the promise of one who cannot lie? Nay, verily. He will come again. Yes, and will come in his own good time, however many or few may be ready for the event; and when he does come all his children will shout Amen! But how many who profess to be his children can now say, Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly? Ah, how many? Can you, my brother, my sister? We, who have been looking for Him lo, these many years, have thus given some evidence that we love his appearing.

But how is it with the great mass of professors? How long have they looked for his appearing? And how much have their ministers preached about his second coming? How much? To the extent that they have left the impression that they love his appearing? Have they? Lamentable though it be, is it not patent even to the most casual observer that such is not the fact? But why have they not preached the second coming of Christ? The reason to me is obvious. It is because they are expecting by another agent, death, what we are expecting by Christ's second coming, viz., eternal life, or as one of the pillars (so called) of the M. E. Church here more than once expressed it, "Death is the door to endless bliss." Therefore to whom "death is the door to endless bliss," what can the coming of Christ be? What? I ask. What can they expect Christ to do for them when he comes? Can he do for them more than death? What beyond "endless bliss" do such expect? D. D. CHAFFEE.

For the Crisis.

A Mournful Letter.

Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, my friends, for the hand of affliction has fallen heavily upon me. My heart is breaking with very grief, and mine eyes are drowned in tears. I refuse to be comforted, because my children are not, because of the invasion of a cruel foe. Not the voice that Jesus sends, never! never! It was a cruel enemy that broke the happy circle; that tore so relentlessly from their stem my fairest flowers, and in their stead has left gloom and sadness. Our two and only daughters, Mary and Lizzie, have fallen victims to that dreadful disease, diphtheria, which has been making such awful ravages in Maine. I presume that many of our dear brethren and sisters with whom we are acquainted, would be glad to know the particulars respecting their sickness and death; some have already written to me to that effect. My feeble state of health will not permit me to answer you individually. This must suffice. My pen refuses, or has refused, to describe the scene through which we have passed this dreadful winter.

Lizzie had been sick ten days when Mary was taken very violently with the same disease, and died on the morning of Jan. 14th, '62, having been sick only four days, aged twenty-one years and nine months. She thought she should get well till the last night, when she became sensible that her case was beyond the reach of human aid. She requested her father to pray for her. The request was complied with, after which she prayed for herself, and then joined her father in singing—

"I have given all for Christ."

She said she had rather live if she could live to do good, but if not, she chose to die. She said to me a short time before she died, I believe Jesus is my friend, and I can say, His will be done. Never so lamb-like and gentle did she seem as through those days of dreadful suffering. Not a murmur escaped her lips, scarcely a groan. It was remarked by a friend who assisted me in taking care of her, that she did not seem like Mary. Her breathing became so distressingly difficult, that with her own hands she tried to extract the false membrane from her throat, and, oh! can my pen reveal it! she died almost instantly in the attempt. O that I could forget the agony of that dreadful scene! Some four or five years since she dreamed she died, and that Elder Ross attended her funeral. She had previously requested that it might be so when she should die. When I saw in the Crisis his list of appointments extending East, I asked myself, Is Bro. R. coming to attend Mary's funeral? She was then in usual health. The answer has been more than mere echo,—the heart-rending reality has passed before my eyes. Some three weeks subsequent to her death her funeral service was attended at Corinna, where Bro. A. Ross addressed a solemn audience from 1 Thess. 4: 18.

Lizzie was away from home with the sick and dying, when at once the blasting hand of early sorrow and withering disease was ruthlessly lain upon her. She had but just returned from the grave of him with whom she had buried the fondest hopes of earthly happiness, when she was seized with the dreadful malady which terminated her sacrificed life, and in just six weeks from that fatal day, she too was carried to the grave. We immediately sought medical aid, but on account of the dreadful storm none could be obtained for nearly one week. It was a week of dreadful suspense, but Lizzie was the most cheerful one among us. She sought to comfort us amid the gloom with which every thing seemed enshrouded. It was an element of her lovely nature which continued to develop itself to the very last. She likewise sought anew the Savior, and found sweet peace, which she longed to tell to the world. She suffered much, but bore all without a murmur. When told by her physician that she must die, she calmly answered, "Well, I am not afraid to die, but still would rather live;" for she well knew a mother's broken heart would hardly bear such dreadful wounds in such quick succession. She exhorted me to trust in the Lord and continue to pray. God help me to remember it. She faithfully exhorted all present, taking each by the hand, bidding them farewell. It was with great difficulty she could talk at all; but as she could not see all of her young friends, she said to me, "Tell them for me to prepare to meet me soon,—now won't you, mother?" As far as I can go, I mean to bear the message. Her encounter with the king of terrors was most terrible. It seemed almost sometimes as if struggling nature would gain the victory; but at length, after an engagement of more than twenty-four hours, the monster secured his prey, and instead of the bridal attire, she wears the habilaments of death. She died on the morning of Feb. 8th, 1862, aged nineteen years and six months. We carried her to Corinna, where, according to her request, Eld. J. Billings addressed us from the blessed language of the prophet recorded in Jer. 31: 15–17.

We have lain our lovely ones side by side, near the place where they spent their childhood days. Our hearts are mute with grief because the music of our home is hushed. The family harp is kept in sacred silence because its sweetest chords are missing. O how we miss them everywhere! The brother weeps because his sisters are gone. All the world to him looks cheerless and drear because he is alone. This truly is the night of weeping. O when will the morning dawn? Let it hasten! Let the voice of the Son of God be heard, when all that are in the graves shall come forth,—when all the children shall come to their own border, and the wail of the bereaved mother be heard no more. Amen.

For the Crisis.

"Missed his Calling."

Who put man in judge over the appointed work of man? Suppose you that brother has prayed in vain night and day, months and years, to know his duty? Has not the Lord marked out his work, and made duty plain? Ought he not to know the mind of the Spirit concerning him? He has given himself up to be led by a divine hand; God leads him. He has prayed (O how earnestly!) for light. It has come on his path, filling his soul with "perfect peace." He now endeavors to walk in the light. Be careful, ye who have improved on the one talent till nine have been added,—condemn and discourage not thy brother who is trying to improve upon his.

Ye men of God,—watchmen on Zion's walls,—worn and weary shepherds in Israel,—death and the grave are making ready for you. When ye are gone from the world, who will tell sinners of a Savior? Others must live. Let them live. All must be children once. They must walk before they can run. Let them walk. O! for Jesus' sake, hinder them not. If they stumble, encourage and lift them up. The bravest have discouragements; then what think you of the young and inexperienced? Give them your sympathies. Bid them "God speed." Criticise not too closely. Speak not too sharply. One discouraging word may cause them to fall. When the trembling one comes forth to warn sinners in the name of the Lord, don't cry out, "Missed your calling!" though he may not talk very fluently. Give him time to improve his gifts. There are thousands laboring against the careless neglect of their fathers in Israel, who, though not gifted as orators, are so gifted with the Holy Ghost as to convert many a soul from error's ways. May God continue to bless them with the consolation and encouragements that man so cruelly withholds. Let these "little ones" be remembered in our prayers. God will certainly bless them.

☞ Mr. Cecil was pacing to and fro in the Botanic Garden at Oxford, England, when he observed a fine specimen of the pomegranate almost cut through the stem. On asking the gardener the reason, he got an answer which explained the words of his own bleeding spirit. "Sir, this tree used to shoot so strong that it bore nothing but leaves. I was, therefore, obliged to cut it in this manner; and when it was almost cut through, then it began to bear plenty of fruit." Ye suffering members of Christ, be thankful, for every sorrow weakens a lust or strengthens a grace. Though it should cut to the heart, be thankful for every sin and idol thrown away. Be thankful that it was the pruning-knife, and not the weeding-hook which you felt.

Waiting.

We wait the resurrection power,
When from their silent sleeping
The saints shall bidden be to rise,
And leave death's potent keeping.
A stronger hand, at God's command,
The spoiler spoils and binds him too;
No more to stain his fair domain,
Whose power createth all things new.

We wait the coming of that hour,
That grand and glorious dawning,
That scatters all of night, and brings
The one eternal morning.
Now the warning of that morning's
Near approach with joy we hail,—
Holy joy nought can alloy,
'Tis His word that cannot fail.

We wait the time of earth's releasing
From her sighs, her groans, her tears,
When her tormentor's power ceasing,
Peace succeeds to pangful fears.
Pain, anguish, blood, a surging flood,
Lo! these do mark her portion now,—
Restorer great! the hour we wait
That writeth joy upon her brow.

And we her sorrowing children wait,
So weak, so frail, oft near despair,
We pray, O Savior, haste the hour
That moulds us in thine image fair.
Now is the hour of evil's power,
O! Healer of the sin-sick soul,
We wait for thee, we pray for thee,
Till thou shalt come and make me whole.

And darker now the night doth seem,
The storm grows fiercer, list that blast!
Our frail barques one by one go down,
And some upon the rocks are cast!
Still, patient we would wait for thee,
Nor mercy's hour deem too long;
And soon to cheer thou wilt appear,
Our Hope and Healer, Joy and Song.

The Opening of the Seventh Seal.

"And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour."—Rev. 8: 1.

"Come near, ye nations, to hear; and hearken, ye people: let the earth hear, and all that is therein; the world, and all things that come forth of it. For the indignation of the LORD is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies: he hath utterly destroyed them; he hath delivered them to the slaughter." Here observe, what God purposes to do, is represented as already done: what follows explains it as future. "Their slain also shall be cast out, and their stink shall come up out of their carcasses, and the mountains shall be melted with their blood. And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll: and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig tree." This is figurative language to represent the fall of armies expressly mentioned verse 2. As the Jewish armies fell when Jerusalem was taken by the Romans as the executioners of God's vengeance upon that nation, so all the armies of antichrist shall fall at the great day of the Lord's vengeance upon all the wicked nations. Hence the vine and fig tree, which are emblems of the Jewish nation, are introduced in making the comparison. "For my sword shall be bathed in heaven: behold it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment. The sword of the Lord is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams: for the Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumia. And the unicorns shall come down with them, and the bullocks with the bulls; and their land shall be soaked with blood, and their dust made fat with fatness." By the unicorns and bullocks must be meant the leaders and commanders of their armies, "the kings of the earth, the great men, the rich men, the chief captains, and the mighty men," Rev. 6: 15, who shall come down or fall with them—their armies. "All their host shall fall down," verse 4. "For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion." Here Zion seems to mean the true Church. This eighth verse is evidently parenthetical, thrown in as an explanation; for verse 9, "the streams thereof," refers not to Zion, but to "their land," verse 7. "And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch. It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up for ever: from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it for ever and ever." This language forcibly brings to mind the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah, Gen. 19: 24, from which our Lord derives an illustration and a warning, Luke 17: 29, 30,—"But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all: even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." Jude also, speaking of the destruction of "ungodly men," verse 4, says, verse 7, that "Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, are set forth as an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." But this in Isaiah is spoken of the land of all nations upon whom rests the indignation of the Lord, verse 2. The terms "for ever and ever," in this connection, cannot be designed to express endless duration; for the same land is ultimately to be made the abode of the righteous. "From generation to generation it shall lie waste"; and this must limit the signification of "for ever and ever" in this connection; and this may mean, from the end of the present order of things or dispensation, to the beginning of the new, which Christ calls "the regeneration," Matt. 19: 28; and Paul, "the dispensation of the fulness of times," Eph. 1 10.

The interim between the two dispensations is from generation to generation, the day of the Lord's vengeance, while the kingdoms of this world are being broken to pieces. The prophet continues:—"But the cormorant and the bittern shall possess it: and he (the Lord) shall stretch out upon it the line of confusion, and the stones of emptiness,"—referring to a mason who builds stone walls and bridges by a line. "They shall call the nobles thereof to the kingdom, but none (no kingdom, no permanent government) shall be there, and all her (the earth's) princes shall be nothing. And thorns shall come up in her palaces, and brambles in the fortresses thereof: and it shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls. The wild beasts of the desert shall also meet with the wild beasts of the island, and the satyr shall cry to his fellow; the screech owl also shall rest there, and find for herself a place of rest. There shall the great owl make her nest, and lay, and hatch, and gather under her shadow: there shall the vulture also be gathered, every one with her mate."

Here this doleful picture ends, and here the chapter should have ended. The last two verses evidently begin the opposite picture, and should have been placed at the beginning of the next chapter. "Seek ye out of the book of the Lord and read: no one of these shall fail, none shall want her mate." This certainly cannot be said of the vultures mentioned in the preceding verse, unless they were immortal; for when one died, the living would want her mate. The book of the Lord is the book of life, and none of those whose names are written therein shall fail, none shall want her mate or Husband, to whom the true church as a chaste virgin is espoused, 2 Cor. 11: 2, waiting, and making herself ready to become the bride at the marriage supper of the Lamb. Rev. 19: 7–9; and 21: 9. The church is composed of individuals; and hence none shall want her Mate; "for my mouth it hath commanded, and his Spirit it hath gathered them"—referring to those whose names are in the book of life, and who are called "the redeemed," and "the ransomed of the Lord." Isa. 35: 9, 10. "And he (the Lord) hath cast the lot for them (his redeemed), and his hand hath divided it (the land) unto them (referring to the division of the land of Canaan by Joshua 15: 1, and on): they shall possess it for ever; from generation to generation shall they dwell therein. The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them (the Lord's people, not the vultures); and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose." This is the same land that was laid waste, and inhabited by wild beasts of the desert, 34: 14. "It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon; they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God. Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not; behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will come and save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in the habitations of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass, with reeds and rushes." This shows conclusively, that the same land which was a habitation of dragons, 34: 13, is renewed; and consequently the term "for ever and ever," denoting the period during which none should pass through it, verse 10, cannot there mean endless duration. "And an high way shall be there, and it shall be called, The way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those (the redeemed): the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon; it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there: and the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

Thus ends the second picture; both of which are drawn by the Revelator between the opening of the sixth and seventh seals. The first picture had its primary fulfillment in the destruction of Jerusalem and the dissolution of that nation; the second was the result of preaching the gospel accompanied with the Holy Spirit. The opening of the seventh seal should have concluded chapter 7, instead of beginning chapter 8; for it is the conclusion of that vision, and another vision evidently begins with the seven trumpets. The division of the Bible into chapters and verses is a modern invention, and the work is often very improperly done. The seven trumpets are to be understood as giving a series of events in regular chronological order; for after the seals had all been opened, the book could then be read in the order in which it was written. The silence of half an hour after the opening of the seventh seal, indicates time given for a change in the mode of exhibition; and such a change we find takes place previous to the sounding of the first trumpet. In the former vision Christ appeared as a Lamb as it had been slain; in this he appears as another angel distinct from the seven, who came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer. "And there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand. And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into (or upon, margin) the earth; and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake." 8: 3–5. Our Lord himself best explains this figure, Luke 12: 49, 51,—"I am come to send fire on the earth, and what will I if it be already kindled? Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division." Consequently this vision represents the beginning of the gospel, and the effects which would result from preaching it. The angel ascending from the east, 7: 2 represents the same thing under a different figure. There Christ and the gospel ministry are represented as another angel distinct from the four standing on the four corners of the earth. There four were restrained for a time from hurting the earth by the voice of Christ. In 9: 14, by the same voice they are commanded to be loosed. The voice is heard from the four horns of the golden altar where Christ is represented in this vision as standing to offer incense with the prayers of all saints. In 5: 8, these prayers are represented as odors (or incense, margin), in the golden vials of the four beasts and four and twenty elders; while Christ is represented by one of the elders as a Lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David, and seen by John as a Lamb that had been slain, about to begin the work of opening the seals of the book. In 10: 1, 2, Christ appears as an angel, "another mighty angel," distinct from the seventh, in the days of whose voice the mystery of God should be finished, verse 7, having in his hand a little book open; which undoubtedly is the same book the seals of which he had now opened. By comparing verse 6 with Dan. 12: 7, it is evident that the same person is represented in both. There it is said that it should be a time, times, and an half to the end of these wonders or mysteries. Here it is said that it should not be a time before the mystery of God should be finished; as I understand the phrase "time no longer," as explained in the following verse: "But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets"; evidently referring to this vision of Daniel.

After John had eaten the book as directed, by which I understand, had thoroughly studied its contents under the guidance of the angel, he was told that he must prophesy again, verse 11; and the same angel, Christ, then immediately gives him the length of the vision the same as in Daniel 12: 7, to the last time of which he had previously been brought. It is plain, therefore, that he was required to go back and review what he had already gone over, and give a more full explanation of it by the use of other symbols. The angel said, "Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple, leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months. And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days clothed in sackcloth." 11: 1–3.

Charity.

Charity, or Divine love, is the mainspring of genuine christianity. It is the heart of vital godliness. It subdues human propensities, and controls the mind. It regulates the motives, and sways the heart of its possessor. Angelic eloquence is nothing without it. Eyes that can distinctly discern boundless futurity, are worthless without it. Ability to untangle perplexing mysteries, is valueless without it. Unlimited knowledge will avail nothing without it. Faith that can chase mountains to the remotest parts of earth, is of no consequence without it. Benevolence that would even rob self to feed the poor, is useless without it. A martyr's spirit even, is of no account without it. Charity is the gem of gems. Nothing is of worth without it. It guides its possessors in paths of peace here, and leads them to regions of felicity hereafter. Without it, christianity is a bubble, and religion a farce. Its characteristics are so distinctly given, that every one may easily decide whether they possess it.

1. Charity "suffereth long." The heart that is regulated by charity is not destitute of the spirit of long-suffering. Do we possess this spirit? 2. "It is kind." The spirit of unkindness is not the offspring of charity. When governed by charity, we are "kind." 3. It "envieth not." When the heart is fully under the influence of charity, it will not harbor envy. 4. It "vaunteth not itself,"—or is not rash. It will subdue this feeling in every heart that it rules. 5. It "is not puffed up." Nor will the man be "puffed up" who is governed by it. Does it fully govern us? 6. It "doth not behave itself unseemly," or unbecomingly. 7. It "seeketh not her own;" or, is not selfish. Are our hearts under its control? 8. It "is not easily provoked." It regulates the passions. Does it thus regulate our lives? 9. It "rejoiceth not in iniquity." It never joins affinity with iniquity, directly or indirectly.

These are the characteristics of charity, and these are the characteristics also of the heart that is under its control. Have we charity? W. SHELDON.

"Judge Not!"

"Judge not that ye be not judged."—Matt. 7: 1

Judge intransitive. 1. To compare facts or ideas, and perceive their agreement or disagreement, and thus to distinguish truth from falsehood. 2. To form an opinion; to bring to issue the reasoning or deliberations of the mind. 3. To hear and determine, as in causes on trial; to pass sentence. 4. To discern; to distinguish; to consider accurately, for the purpose of forming an opinion or conclusion.

Judge transitive verb. 1. To hear and determine a case; to examine and decide. 2. To try; to examine and pass sentence on. 3. Rightly to understand and discern. 4. To censure rashly; to pass severe sentence. 5. To esteem; to think; to reckon. 6. To rule or govern. 7. To doom to punishment; to punish. By understanding the various significations of the word "judge," we can see why the word of the Lord in some places forbids us to judge, and in others requires us to do it. For instance, our text says, "Judge not"; and Rom. 14: 10, "But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. . . . Let us not therefore judge one another any more; but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way"; and 1 Cor. 4: 5,—"Judge nothing before the time."

We learn from these and other similar texts, that it is wrong to censure rashly; to pass severe sentence; to doom to punishment; to punish. We do believe it is wrong for any man to set himself up as a judge of other men's motives on the ground that he has the gift of discerning of spirits. But this does not abrogate the fact, as illustrated by the great Head of the church in Matt. 7: 20,—"Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them." Have we not a right to form an opinion, at least in some cases? Can we avoid it? Is it not enjoined upon us not only to do so but in some cases to express it? In John 7: 24, Jesus says, "Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment." And Paul says, in Cor. 5: 12, 13,—"For what have I to do to judge them that are without? do not ye judge them that are within? But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among you that wicked person."

Do we not express an opinion when we obey the command of the apostle in 2 Thess 3: 6,—"Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which ye received of us"? and also when we mark them that cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine of the apostle and avoid them? Finally, may the Lord help us to discern between truth and error, and sanctify us through the truth. Amen. S. B. MUNN.

Of Truth in Things False.

Error is a hardy plant; it flourisheth in every soil;
In the heart of the wise and good, alike with the wicked and foolish;
For there is no error so crooked but it hath in it some lines of truth:
Nor is any poison so deadly that it serveth not some wholesome use:
And the just man, enamored of the right, is blinded by the spuriousness of wrong,
And the prudent, perceiving an advantage, are content to overlook the harm.
On all things created remaineth the half-effaced signature of God,
Somewhat of fair and good, though blotted by the finger of corruption;
And if error cometh like a flood, it mixeth with streams of truth;
And the Adversary loveth to have it so, for thereby many are decoyed.
Providence is dark in its permissions; yet one day, when all is known,
The universe of reason shall acknowledge how just and good they were;
For the wise man leaneth on his wisdom, and the righteous trusteth to his righteousness,
And those who thirst for independence are suffered to drink of disappointment.
Wherefore? to prove and humble them, and to teach the idolators of truth
That it is but the ladder unto Him on whom only they should trust.
• • • • • •
Verily, there is nothing so true that the damps of error have not warped it;
Verily, there is nothing so false that a sparkle of truth is not in it.
For the enemy, the father of lies, the giant Upas of creation,
Whose deadly shade hath blasted this once green garden of the Lord,
Can but pervert the good, but may not create the evil;
He destroyeth, but cannot build, for he is not antagonist deity:
Mighty is his stolen power, yet he is a creature and a subject;
Not a maker of abstract wrong, but a spoiler of concrete right;
The fiend hath not a royal crown; he is but a prowling robber,
Suffered, for some mysterious end, to haunt the King's highway;
And the keen sword he beareth once was a simple ploughshare;
Yes, and his panoply of error is but a distortion of the truth.
The sickle that once reaped righteousness, beaten from its useful curve,
With axe, and spike, and bar, headeth the marauder's halbert.
Seek not further, O man, to solve the dark riddle of sin;
Suffice it that thine own bad heart is to thee the origin of evil. LOUISA J. BEACH.

Who are Blessed?

Dear Brn. and Srs., readers of the Crisis; I do not intend to start or proclaim any new doctrine or idea, but I do wish to stir up your minds by way of remembrance. O! Lord, help me do it in thy name and strength. Who are the blessed? In answering this important question, I shall resort to the word of the Lord. The Word says, "Blessed are they that do his commandments." In doing this, certain things must be observed, and duties performed. According to Christ's teaching, the poor in spirit, and they that truly mourn for sin, are blessed; the meek, and those that hunger and thirst after righteousness, are blessed; the merciful and the pure in heart shall see God in peace; they are blessed; the peace makers, and those that are persecuted for righteousness' sake are blessed, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Blessed are they that hear the word of the Lord and do it; blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiven; blessed are they who are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb; blessed are they that watch and keep their garments; blessed are they that have part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power. Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly; blessed is he that trusteth in the Lord always; blessed is he that feareth the Lord with a filial fear; blessed is he that endureth temptation and resisteth the devil, causing him to flee from him. Blessed are all they that fear God and keep his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, enter in through the gate into the city, and dwell forever with the Lord. Amen.

Will Jesus come again?

Will he? Lo these eighteen hundred years he has been absent, and what have we but his promise that he will come again? Ah! but what more do we need? Can anything be more certain than the promise of one who cannot lie? Nay, verily. He will come again. Yes, and will come in his own good time, however many or few may be ready for the event; and when he does come all his children will shout Amen! But how many who profess to be his children can now say, Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly? Ah, how many? Can you, my brother, my sister? We, who have been looking for Him lo, these many years, have thus given some evidence that we love his appearing.

But how is it with the great mass of professors? How long have they looked for his appearing? And how much have their ministers preached about his second coming? How much? To the extent that they have left the impression that they love his appearing? Have they? Lamentable though it be, is it not patent even to the most casual observer that such is not the fact? But why have they not preached the second coming of Christ? The reason to me is obvious. It is because they are expecting by another agent, death, what we are expecting by Christ's second coming, viz., eternal life, or as one of the pillars (so called) of the M. E. Church here more than once expressed it, "Death is the door to endless bliss." Therefore to whom "death is the door to endless bliss," what can the coming of Christ be? What? I ask. What can they expect Christ to do for them when he comes? Can he do for them more than death? What beyond "endless bliss" do such expect? D. D. CHAFFEE.

For the Crisis.

A Mournful Letter.

Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, my friends, for the hand of affliction has fallen heavily upon me. My heart is breaking with very grief, and mine eyes are drowned in tears. I refuse to be comforted, because my children are not, because of the invasion of a cruel foe. Not the voice that Jesus sends, never! never! It was a cruel enemy that broke the happy circle; that tore so relentlessly from their stem my fairest flowers, and in their stead has left gloom and sadness. Our two and only daughters, Mary and Lizzie, have fallen victims to that dreadful disease, diphtheria, which has been making such awful ravages in Maine. I presume that many of our dear brethren and sisters with whom we are acquainted, would be glad to know the particulars respecting their sickness and death; some have already written to me to that effect. My feeble state of health will not permit me to answer you individually. This must suffice. My pen refuses, or has refused, to describe the scene through which we have passed this dreadful winter.

Lizzie had been sick ten days when Mary was taken very violently with the same disease, and died on the morning of Jan. 14th, '62, having been sick only four days, aged twenty-one years and nine months. She thought she should get well till the last night, when she became sensible that her case was beyond the reach of human aid. She requested her father to pray for her. The request was complied with, after which she prayed for herself, and then joined her father in singing—

"I have given all for Christ."

She said she had rather live if she could live to do good, but if not, she chose to die. She said to me a short time before she died, I believe Jesus is my friend, and I can say, His will be done. Never so lamb-like and gentle did she seem as through those days of dreadful suffering. Not a murmur escaped her lips, scarcely a groan. It was remarked by a friend who assisted me in taking care of her, that she did not seem like Mary. Her breathing became so distressingly difficult, that with her own hands she tried to extract the false membrane from her throat, and, oh! can my pen reveal it! she died almost instantly in the attempt. O that I could forget the agony of that dreadful scene! Some four or five years since she dreamed she died, and that Elder Ross attended her funeral. She had previously requested that it might be so when she should die. When I saw in the Crisis his list of appointments extending East, I asked myself, Is Bro. R. coming to attend Mary's funeral? She was then in usual health. The answer has been more than mere echo,—the heart-rending reality has passed before my eyes. Some three weeks subsequent to her death her funeral service was attended at Corinna, where Bro. A. Ross addressed a solemn audience from 1 Thess. 4: 18.

Lizzie was away from home with the sick and dying, when at once the blasting hand of early sorrow and withering disease was ruthlessly lain upon her. She had but just returned from the grave of him with whom she had buried the fondest hopes of earthly happiness, when she was seized with the dreadful malady which terminated her sacrificed life, and in just six weeks from that fatal day, she too was carried to the grave. We immediately sought medical aid, but on account of the dreadful storm none could be obtained for nearly one week. It was a week of dreadful suspense, but Lizzie was the most cheerful one among us. She sought to comfort us amid the gloom with which every thing seemed enshrouded. It was an element of her lovely nature which continued to develop itself to the very last. She likewise sought anew the Savior, and found sweet peace, which she longed to tell to the world. She suffered much, but bore all without a murmur. When told by her physician that she must die, she calmly answered, "Well, I am not afraid to die, but still would rather live;" for she well knew a mother's broken heart would hardly bear such dreadful wounds in such quick succession. She exhorted me to trust in the Lord and continue to pray. God help me to remember it. She faithfully exhorted all present, taking each by the hand, bidding them farewell. It was with great difficulty she could talk at all; but as she could not see all of her young friends, she said to me, "Tell them for me to prepare to meet me soon,—now won't you, mother?" As far as I can go, I mean to bear the message. Her encounter with the king of terrors was most terrible. It seemed almost sometimes as if struggling nature would gain the victory; but at length, after an engagement of more than twenty-four hours, the monster secured his prey, and instead of the bridal attire, she wears the habilaments of death. She died on the morning of Feb. 8th, 1862, aged nineteen years and six months. We carried her to Corinna, where, according to her request, Eld. J. Billings addressed us from the blessed language of the prophet recorded in Jer. 31: 15–17.

We have lain our lovely ones side by side, near the place where they spent their childhood days. Our hearts are mute with grief because the music of our home is hushed. The family harp is kept in sacred silence because its sweetest chords are missing. O how we miss them everywhere! The brother weeps because his sisters are gone. All the world to him looks cheerless and drear because he is alone. This truly is the night of weeping. O when will the morning dawn? Let it hasten! Let the voice of the Son of God be heard, when all that are in the graves shall come forth,—when all the children shall come to their own border, and the wail of the bereaved mother be heard no more. Amen.

For the Crisis.

"Missed his Calling."

Who put man in judge over the appointed work of man? Suppose you that brother has prayed in vain night and day, months and years, to know his duty? Has not the Lord marked out his work, and made duty plain? Ought he not to know the mind of the Spirit concerning him? He has given himself up to be led by a divine hand; God leads him. He has prayed (O how earnestly!) for light. It has come on his path, filling his soul with "perfect peace." He now endeavors to walk in the light. Be careful, ye who have improved on the one talent till nine have been added,—condemn and discourage not thy brother who is trying to improve upon his.

Ye men of God,—watchmen on Zion's walls,—worn and weary shepherds in Israel,—death and the grave are making ready for you. When ye are gone from the world, who will tell sinners of a Savior? Others must live. Let them live. All must be children once. They must walk before they can run. Let them walk. O! for Jesus' sake, hinder them not. If they stumble, encourage and lift them up. The bravest have discouragements; then what think you of the young and inexperienced? Give them your sympathies. Bid them "God speed." Criticise not too closely. Speak not too sharply. One discouraging word may cause them to fall. When the trembling one comes forth to warn sinners in the name of the Lord, don't cry out, "Missed your calling!" though he may not talk very fluently. Give him time to improve his gifts. There are thousands laboring against the careless neglect of their fathers in Israel, who, though not gifted as orators, are so gifted with the Holy Ghost as to convert many a soul from error's ways. May God continue to bless them with the consolation and encouragements that man so cruelly withholds. Let these "little ones" be remembered in our prayers. God will certainly bless them.

☞ Mr. Cecil was pacing to and fro in the Botanic Garden at Oxford, England, when he observed a fine specimen of the pomegranate almost cut through the stem. On asking the gardener the reason, he got an answer which explained the words of his own bleeding spirit. "Sir, this tree used to shoot so strong that it bore nothing but leaves. I was, therefore, obliged to cut it in this manner, and when it was almost cut through, then it began to bear plenty of fruit." Ye suffering members of Christ, be thankful, for every sorrow weakens a lust or strengthens a grace. Though it should cut to the heart, be thankful for every sin and idol thrown away. Be thankful that it was the pruning-knife, and not the wedding-hook which you felt.

For the Crisis.

Waiting.

We wait the resurrection power,
  When from their silent sleeping
The saints shall bidden be to rise,
  And leave death's potent keeping.
A stronger hand, at God's command,
  The spoiler spoils and binds him too;
No more to stain his fair domain,
  Whose power createth all things new.

We wait the coming of that hour,
  That grand and glorious dawning,
That scatters all of night, and brings
  The one eternal morning.
Now the warning of that morning's
  Near approach with joy we hail,—
Holy joy nought can alloy,
  'Tis His word that cannot fail.

We wait the time of earth's releasing
  From her sighs, her groans, her tears,
When her tormentor's power ceasing,
  Peace succeeds to pangful fears.
Pain, anguish, blood, a surging flood,
  Lo! these do mark her portion now,—
Restorer great! the hour we wait
  That writeth joy upon her brow.

And we her sorrowing children wait,
  So weak, so frail, oft near despair,
We pray, O Savior, haste the hour
  That moulds us in thine image fair.
Now is the hour of evil's power,
  O! Healer of the sin-sick soul,
We wait for thee, we pray for thee,
  Till thou shalt come and make me whole.

And darker now the night doth seem,
  The storm grows fiercer, list that blast!
Our frail barques one by one go down,
  And some upon the rocks are cast!
Still, patient we would wait for thee,
  Nor mercy's hour deem too long;
And soon to cheer thou wilt appear,
  Our Hope and Healer, Joy and Song.

For the Crisis.

The Opening of the Seventh Seal.

"And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour."—Rev. 8: 1.

"Come near, ye nations, to hear; and hearken, ye people: let the earth hear, and all that is therein; the world, and all things that come forth of it. For the indignation of the LORD is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies: he hath utterly destroyed them; he hath delivered them to the slaughter." Here observe, what God purposes to do, is represented as already done: what follows explains it as future. "Their slain also shall be cast out, and their stink shall come up out of their carcasses, and the mountains shall be melted with their blood. And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll: and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig tree." This is figurative language to represent the fall of armies expressly mentioned verse 2. As the Jewish armies fell when Jerusalem was taken by the Romans as the executioners of God's vengeance upon that nation, so all the armies of antichrist shall fall at the great day of the Lord's vengeance upon all the wicked nations. Hence the vine and fig tree, which are emblems of the Jewish nation, are introduced in making the comparison. "For my sword shall be bathed in heaven: behold it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon the people of my curse, to judgment. The sword of the Lord is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams: for the Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumia. And the unicorns shall come down with them, and the bullocks with the bulls; and their land shall be soaked with blood, and their dust made fat with fatness." By the unicorns and bullocks must be meant the leaders and commanders of their armies, "the kings of the earth, the great men, the rich men, the chief captains, and the mighty men," Rev. 6: 15, who shall come down or fall with them—their armies. "All their host shall fall down," verse 4. "For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion." Here Zion seems to mean the true Church. This eighth verse is evidently parenthetical, thrown in as an explanation; for verse 9, "the streams thereof," refers not to Zion, but to "their land," verse 7. "And the streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch. It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up for ever: from generation to generation it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it for ever and ever." This language forcibly brings to mind the fate of Sodom and Gomorrah, Gen. 19: 24, from which our Lord derives an illustration and a warning, Luke 17: 29, 30,—"But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all: even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." Jude also, speaking of the destruction of "ungodly men," verse 4, says, verse 7. that "Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, are set forth as an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." But this in Isaiah is spoken of the land of all nations upon whom rests the indignation of the Lord, verse 2. The terms "for ever and ever," in this connection, cannot be designed to express endless duration; for the same land is ultimately to be made the abode of the righteous. "From generation to generation it shall lie waste"; and this must limit the signification of "for ever and ever" in this connection; and this may mean, from the end of the present order of things or dispensation, to the beginning of the new, which Christ calls "the regeneration," Matt. 19: 28; and Paul, "the dispensation of the fulness of times," Eph. 1 10.

The interim between the two dispensations is from generation to generation, the day of the Lord's vengeance, while the kingdoms of this world are being broken to pieces. The prophet continues:—"But the cormorant and the bittern shall possess it: and he (the Lord) shall stretch out upon it the line of confusion, and the stones of emptiness,"—referring to a mason who builds stone walls and bridges by a line. "They shall call the nobles thereof to the kingdom, but none (no kingdom, no permanent government) shall be there, and all her (the earth's) princes shall be nothing. And thorns shall come up in her palaces, and brambles in the fortresses thereof: and it shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls. The wild beasts of the desert shall also meet with the wild beasts of the island, and the satyr shall cry to his fellow; the screech owl also shall rest there, and find for herself a place of rest. There shall the great owl make her nest, and lay, and hatch, and gather under her shadow: there shall the vulture also be gathered, every one with her mate."

Here this doleful picture ends, and here the chapter should have ended. The last two verses evidently begin the opposite picture, and should have been placed at the beginning of the next chapter. "Seek ye out of the book of the Lord and read: no one of these shall fail, none shall want her mate." This certainly cannot be said of the vultures mentioned in the preceding verse, unless they were immortal; for when one died, the living would want her mate. The book of the Lord is the book of life, and none of those whose names are written therein shall fail, none shall want her mate or Husband, to whom the true church as a chaste virgin is espoused, 2 Cor. 11: 2, waiting, and making herself ready to become the bride at the marriage supper of the Lamb. Rev. 19: 7–9; and 21: 9. The church is composed of individuals; and hence none shall want her Mate; "for my mouth it hath commanded, and his Spirit it hath gathered them"—referring to those whose names are in the book of life, and who are called "the redeemed," and "the ransomed of the Lord." Isa. 35: 9, 10. "And he (the Lord) hath cast the lot for them (his redeemed), and his hand hath divided it (the land) unto them (referring to the division of the land of Canaan by Joshua 15. 1, and on): they shall possess it for ever; from generation to generation shall they dwell therein. The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them (the Lord's people, not the vultures); and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose." This is the same land that was laid waste, and inhabited by wild beasts of the desert, 34: 14. "It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon; they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God. Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not; behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense; he will come and save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb sing: for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert. And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water: in the habitations of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass, with reeds and rushes." This shows conclusively, that the same land which was a habitation of dragons, 34: 13, is renewed; and consequently the term "for ever and ever," denoting the period during which none should pass through it, verse 10, cannot there mean endless duration. "And an high way shall be there, and it shall be called, The way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those (the redeemed): the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon; it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there: and the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

Thus ends the second picture; both of which are drawn by the Revelator between the opening of the sixth and seventh seals. The first picture had its primary fulfillment in the destruction of Jerusalem and the dissolution of that nation; the second was the result of preaching the gospel accompanied with the Holy Spirit. The opening of the seventh seal should have concluded chapter 7, instead of beginning chapter 8; for it is the conclusion of that vision, and another vision evidently begins with the seven trumpets. The division of the Bible into chapters and verses is a modern invention, and the work is often very improperly done. The seven trumpets are to be understood as giving a series of events in regular chronological order; for after the seals had all been opened, the book could then be read in the order in which it was written. The silence of half an hour after the opening of the seventh seal, indicates time given for a change in the mode of exhibition; and such a change we find takes place previous to the sounding of the first trumpet. In the former vision Christ appeared as a Lamb as it had been slain; in this he appears as another angel distinct from the seven, who came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer. "And there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand. And the angel took the censer, and filled it with fire of the altar, and cast it into (or upon, margin) the earth; and there were voices, and thunderings, and lightnings, and an earthquake." 8: 3–5. Our Lord himself best explains this figure, Luke 12: 49, 51,—"I am come to send fire on the earth, and what will I if it be already kindled? Suppose ye that I am come to give peace on earth? I tell you, Nay; but rather division." Consequently this vision represents the beginning of the gospel, and the effects which would result from preaching it. The angel ascending from the east, 7; 2 represents the same thing under a different figure. There Christ and the gospel ministry are represented as another angel distinct from the four standing on the four corners of the earth. There four were restrained for a time from hurting the earth by the voice of Christ. In 9; 14, by the same voice they are commanded to be loosed. The voice is heard from the four horns of the golden altar where Christ is represented in this vision as standing to offer incense with the prayers of all saints. In 5: 8, these prayers are represented as odors (or incense, margin), in the golden vials of the four beasts and four and twenty elders; while Christ is represented by one of the elders as a Lion of the tribe of Judah, the root of David, and seen by John as a Lamb that had been slain, about to begin the work of opening the seals of the book. In 10: 1, 2, Christ appears as an angel, "another mighty angel," distinct from the seventh, in the days of whose voice the mystery of God should be finished, verse 7, having in his hand a little book open; which undoubtedly is the same book the seals of which he had now opened. By comparing verse 6 with Dan. 12: 7, it is evident that the same person is represented in both. There it is said that it should be a time, times, and an half to the end of these wonders or mysteries. Here it is said that it should not be a time before the mystery of God should be finished; as I understand the phrase "time no longer," as explained in the following verse: "But in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when he shall begin to sound, the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants the prophets"; evidently referring to this vision of Daniel.

After John had eaten the book as directed, by which I understand, had thoroughly studied its contents under the guidance of the angel, he was told that he must prophesy again, verse 11; and the same angel, Christ, then immediately gives him the length of the vision the same as in Daniel 12: 7, to the last time of which he had previously been brought. It is plain, therefore, that he was required to go back and review what he had already gone over, and give a more full explanation of it by the use of other symbols. The angel said, "Rise, and measure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worship therein. But the court which is without the temple, leave out, and measure it not; for it is given unto the Gentiles: and the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months. And I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days clothed in sackcloth." 11: 1–3.

Charity.

Charity, or Divine love, is the mainspring of genuine christianity. It is the heart of vital godliness. It subdues human propensities, and controls the mind. It regulates the motives, and sways the heart of its possessor. Angelic eloquence is nothing without it. Eyes that can distinctly discern boundless futurity, are worthless without it. Ability to untangle perplexing mysteries, is valueless without it. Unlimited knowledge will avail nothing without it. Faith that can chase mountains to the remotest parts of earth, is of no consequence without it. Benevolence that would even rob self to feed the poor, is useless without it. A martyr's spirit even, is of no account without it. Charity is the gem of gems. Nothing is of worth without it. It guides its possessors in paths of peace here, and leads them to regions of felicity hereafter. Without it, christianity is a bubble, and religion a farce. Its characteristics are so distinctly given, that every one may easily decide whether they possess it.

1. Charity "suffereth long." The heart that is regulated by charity is not destitute of the spirit of long-suffering. Do we possess this spirit? 2. "It is kind." The spirit of unkindness is not the offspring of charity. When governed by charity, we are "kind." 3. It "envieth not." When the heart is fully under the influence of charity, it will not harbor envy. 4. It "vaunteth not itself,"—or is not rash. It will subdue this feeling in every heart that it rules. 5. It "is not puffed up." Nor will the man be "puffed up" who is governed by it. Does it fully govern us? 6. It "doth not behave itself unseemly," or unbecomingly. 7. It "seeketh not her own;" or, is not selfish. Are our hearts under its control? 8. It "is not easily provoked." It regulates the passions. Does it thus regulate our lives? 9. It "rejoiceth not in iniquity." It never joins affinity with iniquity, directly or indirectly.

These are the characteristics of charity, and these are the characteristics also of the heart that is under its control. Have we charity? W. SHELDON.

"Judge Not!"

"Judge not that ye be not judged."—Matt. 7: 1

Is this text always correctly applied? As the word "judge" occurs in many places in the Scriptures, and some texts seem to contradict others, we are led to ask the meaning of the word "judge."

Judge intransitive. 1. To compare facts or ideas, and perceive their agreement or disagreement, and thus to distinguish truth from falsehood. 2. To form an opinion; to bring to issue the reasoning or deliberations of the mind. 3. To hear and determine, as in causes on trial; to pass sentence. 4. To discern; to distinguish; to consider accurately, for the purpose of forming an opinion or conclusion.

Judge transitive verb. 1. To hear and determine a case; to examine and decide. 2. To try; to examine and pass sentence on. 3. Rightly to understand and discern. 4. To censure rashly; to pass severe sentence. 5. To esteem; to think; to reckon. 6. To rule or govern. 7. To doom to punishment; to punish. By understanding the various significations of the word "judge," we can see why the word of the Lord in some places forbids us to judge, and in others requires us to do it. For instance, our text says, "Judge not"; and Rom. 14: 10, "But why dost thou judge thy brother? or why dost thou set at nought thy brother? for we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. . . . Let us not therefore judge one another any more; but judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling-block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way"; and 1 Cor. 4: 5,—"Judge nothing before the time."

We learn from these and other similar texts, that it is wrong to censure rashly; to pass severe sentence; to doom to punishment; to punish. We do believe it is wrong for any man to set himself up as a judge of other men's motives on the ground that he has the gift of discerning of spirits. But this does not abrogate the fact, as illustrated by the great Head of the church in Matt. 7: 20,—"Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them." Have we not a right to form an opinion, at least in some cases? Can we avoid it? Is it not enjoined upon us not only to do so but in some cases to express it? In John 7: 24, Jesus says, "Judge not according to the appearance, but judge righteous judgment." And Paul says, in Cor. 5: 12, 13,—"For what have I to do to judge them that are without? do not ye judge them that are within? But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among you that wicked person."

Do we not express an opinion when we obey the command of the apostle in 2 Thess 3: 6,—"Now we command you, brethren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which ye received of us"? and also when we mark them that cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine of the apostle and avoid them? Finally, may the Lord help us to discern between truth and error, and sanctify us through the truth. Amen. S. B. MUNN.

Of Truth in Things False.

Error is a hardy plant; it flourisheth in every soil;
In the heart of the wise and good, alike with the wicked and foolish;
For there is no error so crooked but it hath in it some lines of truth:
Nor is any poison so deadly that it serveth not some wholesome use:
And the just man, enamored of the right, is blinded by the spuriousness of wrong,
And the prudent, perceiving an advantage, are content to overlook the harm.
On all things created remaineth the half-effaced signature of God,
Somewhat of fair and good, though blotted by the finger of corruption;
And if error cometh in like a flood, it mixeth with streams of truth;
And the Adversary loveth to have it so, for thereby many are decoyed.
Providence is dark in its permissions; yet one day, when all is known,
The universe of reason shall acknowledge how just and good they were;
For the wise man leaneth on his wisdom, and the righteous trusteth in his righteousness,
And those who thirst for independence are suffered to drink of disappointment.
Wherefore? to prove and humble them, and to teach the idolators of truth
That it is but the ladder unto Him on whom only they should trust.
* * * * * *
Verily, there is nothing so true that the damps of error have not warped it;
Verily, there is nothing so false that a sparkle of truth is not in it
For the enemy, the father of lies, the giant Upas of creation,
Whose deadly shade hath blasted this once green garden of the Lord,
Can but pervert the good, but may not create the evil,
He destroyeth, but cannot build, for he is not antagonist deity:
Mighty is his own power, yet he is a creature and a subject;
Not a maker of abstract wrong, but a spoiler of concrete right,
The fiend hath not a royal crown, he is but a prowling robber,
Suffered, for some mysterious end, to haunt the King's highway;
And the keen sword he beareth once was a simple ploughshare;
Yea, and his panoply of error is but a distortion of the truth.
The sickle that once reaped righteousness, beaten from its useful curve,
With axe, and spike, and bar, headeth the marauder's halbert
Seek not further, O man, to solve the dark riddle of sin;
Suffice it that thine own bad heart is to thee thine origin of evil

Who are Blessed?

Will Jesus come again?

Will he? Lo these eighteen hundred years he has been absent, and what have we but his promise that he will come again? Ah! but what more do we need? Can anything be more certain than the promise of one who cannot lie? Nay, verily. He will come again. Yes, and will come in his own good time, however many or few may be ready for the event; and when he does come all his children will shout Amen! But how many who profess to be his children can now say, Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly? Ah, how many? Can you, my brother, my sister? We, who have been looking for Him lo, these many years, have thus given some evidence that we love his appearing.

But how is it with the great mass of professors? How long have they looked for his appearing? And how much have their ministers preached about his second coming? How much? To the extent that they have left the impression that they love his appearing? Have they? Lamentable though it be, is it not patent even to the most casual observer that such is not the fact? But why have they not preached the second coming of Christ? The reason to me is obvious. It is because they are expecting by another agent, death, what we are expecting by Christ's second coming, viz., eternal life, or as one of the pillars (so called) of the M. E. Church here more than once expressed it, "Death is the door to endless bliss." Therefore to whom "death is the door to endless bliss," what can the coming of Christ be? What? I ask. What can they expect Christ to do for them when he comes? Can he do for them more than death? What beyond "endless bliss" do such expect? D. D. CHAFFEE.

A Mournful Letter.

Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, my friends, for the hand of affliction has fallen heavily upon me. My heart is breaking with very grief, and mine eyes are drowned in tears. I refuse to be comforted, because my children are not, because of the invasion of a cruel foe. Not the voice that Jesus sends, never! never! It was a cruel enemy that broke the happy circle; that tore so relentlessly from their stem my fairest flowers, and in their stead has left gloom and sadness. Our two and only daughters, Mary and Lizzie, have fallen victims to that dreadful disease, diphtheria, which has been making such awful ravages in Maine. I presume that many of our dear brethren and sisters with whom we are acquainted, would be glad to know the particulars respecting their sickness and death; some have already written to me to that effect. My feeble state of health will not permit me to answer you individually. This must suffice. My pen refuses, or has refused, to describe the scene through which we have passed this dreadful winter.

Lizzie had been sick ten days when Mary was taken very violently with the same disease, and died on the morning of Jan. 14th, '62, having been sick only four days, aged twenty-one years and nine months. She thought she should get well till the last night, when she became sensible that her case was beyond the reach of human aid. She requested her father to pray for her. The request was complied with, after which she prayed for herself, and then joined her father in singing—

"I have given all for Christ."

She said she had rather live if she could live to do good, but if not, she chose to die. She said to me a short time before she died, I believe Jesus is my friend, and I can say, His will be done. Never so lamb-like and gentle did she seem as through those days of dreadful suffering. Not a murmur escaped her lips, scarcely a groan. It was remarked by a friend who assisted me in taking care of her, that she did not seem like Mary. Her breathing became so distressingly difficult, that with her own hands she tried to extract the false membrane from her throat, and, oh! can my pen reveal it! she died almost instantly in the attempt. O that I could forget the agony of that dreadful scene! Some four or five years since she dreamed she died, and that Elder Ross attended her funeral. She had previously requested that it might be so when she should die. When I saw in the Crisis his list of appointments extending East, I asked myself, Is Bro. R. coming to attend Mary's funeral? She was then in usual health. The answer has been more than mere echo,—the heart-rending reality has passed before my eyes. Some three weeks subsequent to her death her funeral service was attended at Corinna, where Bro. A. Ross addressed a solemn audience from 1 Thess. 4: 13.

Lizzie was away from home with the sick and dying, when at once the blasting hand of early sorrow and withering disease was ruthlessly lain upon her. She had but just returned from the grave of him with whom she had buried the fondest hopes of earthly happiness, when she was seized with the dreadful malady which terminated her sacrificed life, and in just six weeks from that fatal day, she too was carried to the grave. We immediately sought medical aid, but on account of the dreadful storm none could be obtained for nearly one week. It was a week of dreadful suspense, but Lizzie was the most cheerful one among us. She sought to comfort us amid the gloom with which every thing seemed enshrouded. It was an element of her lovely nature which continued to develop itself to the very last. She likewise sought and knew the Savior, and found sweet peace, which she longed to tell to the world. She suffered much, but bore all without a murmur. When told by her physician that she must die, she calmly answered, "Well, I am not afraid to die, but still would rather live;" for she well knew a mother's broken heart would hardly bear such dreadful wounds in such quick succession. She exhorted me to trust in the Lord and continue to pray. God help me to remember it. She faithfully exhorted all present, taking each by the hand, bidding them farewell. It was with great difficulty she could talk at all; but as she could not see all of her young friends, she said to me, "Tell them for me to prepare to meet me soon,—now won't you, mother?" As far as I can go, I mean to bear the message. Her encounter with the king of terrors was most terrible. It seemed almost sometimes as if struggling nature would gain the victory; but at length, after an engagement of more than twenty-four hours, the monster secured his prey, and instead of the bridal attire, she wears the habilaments of death. She died on the morning of Feb. 8th, 1862, aged nineteen years and six months. We carried her to Corinna, where, according to her request, Eld. J. Billings addressed us from the blessed language of the prophet recorded in Jer. 31: 15–17.

We have lain our lovely ones side by side, near the place where they spent their childhood days. Our hearts are mute with grief because the music of our home is hushed. The family harp is kept in sacred silence because its sweetest chords are missing. O how we miss them everywhere! The brother weeps because his sisters are gone. All the world to him looks cheerless and drear because he is alone. This truly is the night of weeping. O when will the morning dawn? Let it hasten! Let the voice of the Son of God be heard, when all that are in the graves shall come forth,—when all the children shall come to their own border, and the wail of the bereaved mother be heard no more. Amen.

"Missed his Calling."

Who put man in judge over the appointed work of man? Suppose you that brother has prayed in vain night and day, months and years, to know his duty? Has not the Lord marked out his work, and made duty plain? Ought he not to know the mind of the Spirit concerning him? He has given himself up to be led by a divine hand; God leads him. He has prayed (O how earnestly!) for light. It has come on his path, filling his soul with "perfect peace." He now endeavors to walk in the light. Be careful, ye who have improved on the one talent till nine have been added,—condemn and discourage not thy brother who is trying to improve upon his.

Ye men of God,—watchmen on Zion's walls,—worn and weary shepherds in Israel,—death and the grave are making ready for you. When ye are gone from the world, who will tell sinners of a Savior? Others must live. Let them live. All must be children once. They must walk, before they can run. Let them walk. O! for Jesus' sake, hinder them not. If they stumble, encourage and lift them up. The bravest have discouragements; then what think you of the young and inexperienced? Give them your sympathies. Bid them "God speed." Criticise not too closely. Speak not too sharply. One discouraging word may cause them to fall. When the trembling one comes forth to warn sinners in the name of the Lord, don't cry out, "Missed your calling!" though he may not talk very fluently. Give him time to improve his gifts. There are thousands laboring against the careless neglect of their fathers in Israel, who, though not gifted as orators, are so gifted with the Holy Ghost as to convert many a soul from error's ways. May God continue to bless them with the consolation and encouragements that man so cruelly withholds. Let these "little ones" be remembered in our prayers. God will certainly bless them.

To the Afflicted.

"From the end of the earth will I cry unto thee: lead me to the Rock that is higher than I."—Ps. 61: 2.

How expressive are the foregoing words of the Psalmist of the deepest feelings of the heart of the child of God, when bowed by some heavy affliction! Earthly objects are insufficient; they cannot speak peace to the troubled soul; they cannot raise to health the frame wasted by disease, nor stay the hand of the destroying angel when the grim messenger claims its victim. Yet of value more precious than I can tell is the kind word, the gentle deed, the voice of love, to the suffering child of humanity. But when the things of earth are receding, and we feel that we are fast passing away,—when the voices are hushed in death that were wont to breathe music around us,—what a comfort, what an unspeakable blessing it is, to feel that we have "the God of Jacob for our refuge"! I have often thought, as I have read from the pen of one and another of the children of affliction, of their sorrows, their trials, their sickness, how pleasant it was to speak words of comfort to the distressed; to smoothe the pillow of the sick and suffering; to whisper consolation to the aching heart, and, as far as possible, to direct them to that God who, "like as a father pitieth his children, . . . pitieth them that fear Him." There are many, many precious words of consolation and encouragement along the pages of inspiration, to the chastened children of God. And how sweet is the thought, that the "Captain of our salvation," the blessed Jesus, knows all our wants, sympathizes with us in all our afflictions, and will not suffer us to be tempted and tried more than is necessary for our own good.

I should esteem it a sweet privilege to be the happy instrument of lightening the burden of care which may have fallen upon any brother or sister. There are times when clouds and darkness seem to have shut from our mental vision the last ray of hope, and we are ready to cry out with anguish of heart, "All these things are against me!" If such an one should peruse these few lines, let me entreat of you, fellow pilgrim, to strive to be of good courage; the glad bearer of "the sun of righteousness" may yet dispel the gloom; strength may be given for weakness; praise may yet take the place of heaviness and sorrow. Of one thing we are certain, "God is faithful," and if we but trust in him, and faithfully serve him, we shall ere long be where no tear will dim the eye nor sickness pale the cheek, but where all is peace and love. That this may be our happy portion, is the wish of your sister in affliction,

How Saved?

"Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption."—1 Cor. 15: 50.

I think the apostle in this text declares that from Adam we do not inherit or take by descent immortality. "The first man is of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven." If we ever get into the kingdom of God, it will be because God has given his Son to die for us, and we are made new creatures by being born of the Spirit of God. We inherit our earthly life from Adam; this is first; and if we are new creatures by the Spirit of God, we shall love all men and "hate every false way." "But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels (or a little while inferior) for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man. . . Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same." "For we are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end."

SUSAN.

"Dare to forsake what you deem wrong;
Dare to walk in wisdom's way;
Dare to give where gifts belong;
Dare God's precepts to obey.
Do what conscience says is right;
Do what reason says is best;
Do with willing mind and heart;
Do your duty and be blest."

The Cause in Lowell.

I had the satisfaction of laboring a few days, including Sunday, 2d inst., with the brethren in this city, who have obtained the large and beautiful church on Lee street. We had several interesting meetings last week, with a good and solemn influence in every instance upon the minds of the people. On Sunday the congregations were large and deeply interested. In the evening we discovered an increase of the solemn interest upon the salvation of souls. Their large vestry was filled. Various churches being represented, many most earnest testimonies and urgent appeals were heard. Indeed, it was a time of seeking the Lord. A depth of feeling and interest pervaded the whole service. May God bless the efforts of the tried, faithful, and united church here.

"Covetous."

When the apostle was describing the people in "the last days," he says they will be "COVETOUS." As all things indicate that we are truly in "the last days" of the present dispensation, the time has come when covetousness must be a prominent characteristic in the lives of men. That it is so, no one will pretend to deny. People are as well satisfied of this fact as that the North and South are at war with each other. Covetousness results from the love of money, which "is the root of all evil." Again we read that covetousness "is idolatry," and that "idolaters . . . . shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone; which is the second death." The present generation, as all must know, is one noted for covetousness; Hence this sign of the end is before us. If this wicked propensity were confined to men who make no profession of religion, there would be less cause for mourning; but how different when we are compelled to admit that a large proportion of professors of religion are filled with this evil. Yet, if it were not so, we should not have reason to expect the immediate coming of Christ.

A distinguished English preacher and writer, when speaking of the state of the churches in England, says:—"The love of money is now the only passion that is left." And he very correctly remarks:—"If we look from the Old World to the New, we shall find Protestantism in the same position." Here are the two leading nations in Christendom, noted for their covetousness, not only among business men of the world, but among professors of religion. Truly such is a Laodicean state. They boast of their riches, their elegant meeting houses; but it cannot be said that there the poor have the gospel preached to them.

Says Robert Atkins, a noted and devoted minister of Liverpool, England:—"I must take my leave, for the present, of the rich churches, the churches who are possessed of goods, the churches that love not his [Christ's] appearing, the churches that scoffingly cry out, 'where is the promise of his coming?' the anti-christian, apostate, Gentile churches, who are fitting themselves for the fire with which God will shortly plead with them."

The foregoing is truly a sad picture, but as true as sad. And what is still worse, this spirit of covetousness is continually increasing, with no prospect of a change. As bodies, it is evident that they have passed by the point of reformation; consequently, the time has come for "the pure in heart" to "turn away" from such, as instructed by the apostle. Although a painful step to take, we see no other alternative left. If christians conform to the worldly and covetous spirit that now rules most of the popular ecclesiastical bodies of the day, they will certainly lose their sweet peace of mind, the witness that they are the children of God, besides neutralizing all their influence for good upon others. This is just what Satan desires. Let us do all we can to break up his purposes.

So far as the sign of covetousness is concerned, which should characterize "the last days," we see no reason why the coming of the Lord should be delayed another day in order that it may be accomplished.—G.

Spiritualism.

We purpose to keep our readers posted in relation to the progress of Spiritualism as far as is practicable; as we have means of information, which, perhaps, but few of them enjoy. We are aware that some think we give it too great importance; but did such know a tithe of what is before us on this subject, they would think we were quite moderate in our zeal in this matter. The half has not yet been told. We are fully satisfied that its future work will prove it to be the greatest opponent to christianity with which it has ever had to contend. It is the whirlpool that swallows up and ruins everything that is good; like the Upas tree, it infuses a deadly poison into all that come within its influence.

Satan has arranged it in varied forms and manifestations, so as to seduce all classes of mind, from the most ideal Swedenborgian, to the lowest form of hero-worship among the heathen. None but the highly imaginative can get any idea of the former—Swedenborgianism—and Satan knew well that these would not be satisfied with the lower manifestations, such as the moving of chairs and tables; neither would they be willing to renounce the Bible altogether; hence he has framed a system of spiritualizing the word of the Lord, which takes it entirely out of the hands of common people, among whom most of the children of the Lord are found; and at the same time turns it into a system of fables; so that its power over the human heart is neutralized, and the Scriptures are made to teach every thing but the truth. So long as the great adversary can keep them in this mazy labyrinth of ideal Spiritualism, he is sure of preventing them from seeing the glorious light of gospel truth. He spares no effort to establish in their minds an abhorrence of the literal, and the material, on the ground that it is gross, and unrefined; and by so doing, keeps them in the school of mysticism, "ever learning and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." Instead of being entertained by those who preach the simple word of the Lord, they think it too common place, turn away in disgust to listen to the teachings of those who can revel with eloquent strains in the airy regions of ideal fancy, till the plain truth of the Bible is entirely hidden from their view.—G.

Organization of Spiritualists.

On account of the secret, underground working of spiritualists, many are deluded into the belief that they are losing influence; but we are satisfied from incontrovertible facts, that they were never gaining ground faster than at the present time. Their victory is already so complete, that scarcely any one opposes their onward march. Many do not resist it, because they think it quite harmless. To them it looks "like a lamb," and they wonder why we should say so much about it. Such should remember that it speaks "as a dragon." Its doctrines are nearly the same as were those of the old Pagan Dragon, that supported hero-worship, and fought against the truth of the Bible.

In order that they may carry out their purposes more fully, they propose a political organization, which, we have reason to believe will be the next change in the government of this world, and the last before the coming of Christ. We expect its commencement at the close of the present war in the States. It is not probable that the new government will be known as one under the direction of the spirits and Spiritualists; yet they will arrange and work the wires. No doubt it will be the most popular political movement ever known, and the most extensive. Their motto will be, "PRINCIPLES NOT MEN"—"equal rights, and free speech"—"down with aristocrats, slavery, and all oppressors."

In the Banner of light, Jan. 4th, '62, says Edward B. Freeland, when speaking of the past developments:—

"This infantile stage of spiritualism is, however, at its close. The conviction is ripening in the minds of Spiritualists, that the inward preparation is already sufficiently advanced to demand an outward expression. It is also beginning to be perceived that the higher and grander results of Spiritualism can be achieved only by the methods of practical organization and combination."

This new movement will be managed with all the skill and cunning of which demons are master.

Now is the time for every friend of Jesus to separate himself from the corrupt institutions of this world, and prepare to meet his Redeemer at "the marriage supper of the Lamb."—G.

"Played Out."

There is much truth in the following remarks, taken from the Catholic Telegraph:—

"Protestantism is fast becoming like Know-Nothingism and Abolitionism—almost played out. Very few men believe in the loose, illogical system; in fact, there is nothing to believe. An indescribable jumble of contradictory creeds, containing no sound aliment for mind or heart, is offered to the applicant for conversion, and he takes his choice. . . . Is it any wonder that thoughtful men are becoming discontented with such a state of things?"

There is nothing to gain by concealing and denying the fact, that the present system of Protestantism is nearly "played out." The mass of its supporters are living such unchristian lives, that men are becoming infidels by the thousand, where twenty years ago not ten could be found, and the increase of sceptics is multiplying in a most alarming ratio. How like the days of Noah and Lot! "Worse and worse" is the order from this time to the end. Christian soldiers, be sure and keep clothed with "the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil.—G.

Try Company.

We are delighted with the prosperity of the TRY COMPANY. Those children who join and keep our pledge will never be sorry. We say "OUR PLEDGE" because, dear children, we have put our name down with yours. We love to be in such company. Let every one of the youth who read the Crisis unite with us. Come, let us break off every bad habit, turn from all that is sinful, and do all we can to please the Lord, so as to be ready to meet him when he comes.—G.

Reign of Terror.

Present aspects in political matters indicate that a "reign of terror" is rapidly advancing on both continents. It is said the crowned heads of Europe are beginning to shiver before its approach. A close observer says:—"Let no one be surprised if before the end of the present year all Europe should be in one universal blaze." Thank the Lord these things are no source of terror to the christian. No dark clouds bedim his peaceful horizon. He lifts up his head and rejoices, knowing that his redemption draweth nigh.—G.

Sunday Battles.

It is a noted fact, that most of the battles are fought on Sunday. The terrible fight at Pittsburg Landing, Tenn., commenced Sunday morning, April 6th, and lasted all day. On the evening of the same day, Island No. 10, in the Mississippi surrendered; the battle of Bull Run was on Sunday, July 21st, '62; Sunday, Jan. 19th, '62, battle of Mill Spring, Ky.; Sunday, Feb. 16th, Fort Donelson surrendered; Sunday, Feb. 23d, Gen. Nelson entered Nashville, Tenn.; Sunday, March 2nd, the Dupont expedition took possession of Brunswick, Ga.; Sunday, March 9th, battle between the Merrimac and Monitor, in Hampton Roads; Sunday, March 23d, battle of Winchester; and besides all these, a large number of skirmishes and military movements have taken place on Sunday. This day seems to be the favorite one for bloody deeds among the enemies of Christ.

"Free Market."

An extract from the Mobile [Ala.] Tribune, shows that there is great scarcity of food in that section; so much so that the people have been obliged to establish a FREE MARKET to supply the hungry multitudes. The Mayor says:—"Gaunt hunger and want are enemies to be fought and conquered as well as the armed soldiers of Lincoln." About eighteen hundred people are fed from the "free market."—G.

Pittsburg Landing.

Pittsburg Landing, where the late bloody battle of April 6th and 7th was fought, is in Tenn., on the west side of the Tennessee river, nearly opposite Savannah. Taking an air line, it is about one hundred and twenty miles south-west from Nashville, about a dozen miles west of Purdy, and twenty-five north-east from Corinth. It is a small place in the midst of a wild country.—G.

New Phases of Spiritualism.

The following extracts, taken from an "Address to the Church Militant," show something of the range of thought and cunning subtlety of those given over to this monstrous delusion. Who would have believed that Spiritualists would have sought to further their cause by endeavoring to incorporate with their notions the sublime doctrines of the Second Advent and the regenerate earth! Let unwary souls look well to their steps lest they fall into this snare of the devil. We are reminded of that power that "shall speak as a lamb."—M.

"When this Old Earth, Redeemed, will spontaneously produce
All fruits which are necessary for man's temporal use—
When Regenerated man no more for vile meats will lust,
And the now flesh-eating serpent shall feed upon dust.
Then Regenerated man will do as he would be done by,
And no harmless beast by his hand will then die;
As all lust to flesh—which from sin hath arisen—
Must vanish when the tempter is shut in his prison!
It is lamentable, indeed, that one soul should despise
The Messages from Heaven the many good spirits bring,
Thus continuing in league with the Old Father of lies,
In spurning the Love of our soon Coming KING!"

"A Shower of Brimstone."

Our correspondent, N. M. H., (author of "Hospital Rambles,") writes of a shower of brimstone in Illinois, covering an area of perhaps twelve or more miles square, which fell during a late violent rain. The fact was noticed by many persons, and seems to excite considerable attention, many not knowing how to account for the phenomenon. It is probable that the clouds which here discharged their contents, were surcharged with this element while passing over the crater of a burning volcano, and, lifted into a higher current of air, did not descend so as to be dissipated until they reached the prairies of Illinois.—M.

A DARK PROSPECT FOR ROME.—The following important item of news just now from Europe, is precisely such as the students of prophecy have expected for many years. Let us "lift up our heads and look up."—M.

Garibaldi's Address to the Italian Priesthood.—The following, which appears in the Turin press, is plain enough to be read running by the priests of Italy:

"Genoa, March 12. I shall not speak of faults. When I speak to crowds I quote from them these words of the gospel, 'let him who is without sin cast the first stone.' Harmony, therefore, between us if you wish it, but act well; hitherto you have acted ill. You have made Rome a den of wild beasts thirsting for the destruction of Italy. I am unhappily convinced that you cannot save the cardinals from perdition, but do it if you can. Moreover, cry to the four winds of heaven that you will have no companionship with the wicked, that you are Italians, that you will at least imitate the priesthood of Hungary, of Poland, of Greece, of China, of the savages of America, where the priest does not deny his fellow citizens, but combats together with them for the independence of their country. Let the Italian priest launch forth from the pulpit the sacred words of the redemption of the country, and of the damnation in hell of the Vatican. He will then have in the first place, the entire approbation of his own conscience, and secondly, the approbation and gratitude of millions of men. Revive the ancient christianity which proclaims self-denial, mutual forgiveness, and the holy doctrine of the equality of men. It is on these conditions that we can receive you as brethren. GARIBALDI."

☞ While reading the following, let it be remembered that it is written the nations "shall hate the harlot, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire."—M.

"We understand that several of the Bishops of the United States contemplate visiting Rome, in order to assist at the Canonization of the Japanese Martyrs. The French Government has prohibited the Bishops of the Empire from approaching the shrine of the Apostles, and that of Victor Emanuel intends to imitate the tyrannical example. But the concourse of Prelates from other parts of the world will fill up the void thus created, whilst a new argument for the necessity of absolute temporal independence of the Holy See to protect the exercise of its spiritual power is furnished by the very prohibitions in question. The Governments that prevent Bishops from visiting the head of the Church, would have no scruples in placing the Supreme Pontiff under restraint, could they do so with a semblance of legality."—From The Catholic.

Griesbach, with an interlineary translation, in which every Greek word is literally and grammatically construed as it stands in the book: a new Emphatic Version, based on the literal translation, the labors of the most eminent Biblical critics and translators, and the various readings of the Vatican Manuscript, (No. 1209 in the Vatican library); together with philological and exegetical foot notes, and a choice selection of references; to which is affixed an alphabetical appendix, containing all the geographical and proper names occurring in the New Testament, with difficult Greek words and phases critically examined. The whole forming a complete guide to the correct reading and study of the books of the New Covenant.

Nos. 17 and 18 are received. The publisher has been ill, but assures his patrons that he will proceed as fast as his health will permit, and that the numbers will be duly mailed as soon as ready. We look upon this as an enterprise of great importance to the Biblical scholar, and shall be glad to see it completed. The translator has now got as far as the book of Galatians.—M.

Biographical Sketches.—No. 4.

REV. JOHN CUMMING, D.D., F.R.S.E.

But we must not take leave of our transatlantic friends without noticing one more of the champions of this cause:—one who has contributed so largely to stir up the minds of all Christendom to the subject of the soon coming of the Lord,—the Rev. JOHN CUMMING, D. D., minister of the Scottish National Church, Crown Court, Covent Garden, London. A man justly styled "the most prolific author of the age." Whose works on the prophecies are eagerly sought and read alike by clergymen and laymen of all the evangelical churches of the whole Christian world. Dr. Cumming has recently published a couple of volumes—"The Great Tribulation"—which have perhaps excited as much or more attention than have all his other productions, since in them he has not disguised his convictions relative to the ending of the prophetic periods; which, after a number of years study, he believes, and honestly and fearlessly gives it as his opinion, will end in the vicinity of 1867–8. Probably we could not better serve the desire of the reader, than to give the subjoined extract from "A Pen and Ink Sketch, by John Ross Dix," published a few years since by J. P. Jewett and company in a volume of Dr. Cumming's works, but which few of our readers may have ever seen.—M.

"It is the morning of the Sabbath. From scores of church towers sound forth the 'church-going bells,' and we, with thousands of others, hurry along the streets towards one of the many hundred places of worship, which deck, like oases, the great moral metropolitan desert. Leaving the Strand on our right, we enter Covent Garden—its market place now silent, and almost forsaken; and, crossing that far-famed locality, we cross Bow-street, pass under the colonnade of the theatre, and, when half-way through it, step over the narrow strip of road-way, and enter Crown-court. A stranger might pass the entrance to this obscure thoroughfare a hundred times, and never suspect that a building of any magnitude was within a dozen yards of him; but, were he to lift his eyes, he might perceive, overhead, an inscription informing him that there was situated Crown-court Church.

We enter the court, and the Scotch church is on our left hand. As a building it has few claims to architectural consideration, being of no particular order, but rather of all the orders so blended that the distinctive features of no one can be made out. The gallery stairs are outside the front, presenting rather a curious appearance; but limited space, we presume, occasioned the unsightly arrangement. However that might be, we must not stay to speculate upon it; hundreds upon hundreds are passing up those stairs, and squeezing into the side doors; and 'the cry is, still they come.' Carriage after carriage is setting down its freight of fashion; cab after cab drives up, from which gentlemen hurriedly leap, and make their way to the doors of the edifice, and an unbroken stream of pedestrians flows in from either end of Crown-court. Watch for a moment the countenances of the church-goers; there is much curiosity and anxiety depicted upon them as might be witnessed in the faces of the impatient multitude who throng the doors of old Drury on the first night of a new piece. And well may such interest be evinced; for this morning one of the most renowned preachers of the day is to preach on an all-absorbing topic. Cardinal Wiseman has sounded forth his trumpet note of Romish defiance, and now the Protestant champion is about to enter the lists.

We are at length in the Scotch church. It is a large, oblong building; a gallery deep and commodious round one of the long and two of the short sides—the pulpit being placed in the centre of the other long side. The only national emblems to be seen are the thistle-shaped ground-glass shades of the gas-lights, and a thistle or two in the painted glass windows. In all other respects the place resembles an English dissenting chapel.

How densely the church is crowded—and how aristocratic appears the congregation! We are prepared for the 'quality,' by the glimpse we just now had outside of luxurious-looking carriages, with strawberry-leaved coronets on their panels. Let us, before we speak of the minister, glance for a moment at his congregation; for, sitting quietly in some of the pews, are men of mark.

Near the pulpit, on its left side, and in a secluded place under the gallery, sit a gentleman and lady, with two little children. The gentleman is of diminutive stature; his head is large, and thinly covered with dark-brown hair, which carelessly sweeps across his capacious forehead. His eyes are keen and cold, the nose longish and slightly turned up at its point, the mouth thin-lipped and compressed. Two apologies for whiskers appear just below the prominent cheek-bones. As a whole, the countenance is indicative of intellectual acquirements; but it wants energy of expression, or rather the expression of energy. There is something of insignificance about it. But its owner is no insignificant personage; for the little man who sits so quietly in that shaded pew is the Prime Minister of England, Lord John Russell, and those who sit beside him are his wife and children.

Not far from the premier is to be observed a gentleman tall and robust-looking. His face is florid and plump. He resembles a well-to-do country gentleman, rather than a member of the titled aristocracy. Nevertheless he is a lord. It is Lord Ducie, an amiable nobleman enough, we believe, but who is not likely to rival Brougham. He is a regular attendant on Dr. Cumming's ministry. We might point out many other noticeable people, but that would be traveling out of the record, perhaps; and, indeed, by the spontaneous rising of the congregation, and the sudden bursting forth of harmonious voices, we are reminded that the service has commenced.

'Beautiful exceedingly' is the singing at the Scotch church. There is no organ; but it is evident that the choir requires not the aid of that king of musical instruments. Never have we heard better congregational singing than at Dr. Cumming's; all may easily join in it, and indeed all present did,—at least so it seemed to us. Clear and distinct in its silvery sweetness was one female voice, which reminded us of that of Jenny Lind; and we have since heard that the lady to whom it belongs is generally known as the nightingale of of Crown-court Church. . . .

The psalm of praise and thankfulness has ceased; the congregation are seated, and the minister of the place ascends the stairs which lead to the pulpit. He is the observed of all observers. Every eye is fixed upon him; but, on his assuming the attitude of prayer, each head is bowed, reverence banishes curiosity, and a deep, solemn hush pervades the place.

The prayer commences. It is an extemporaneous one, and, as all prayers should be, it is deeply fervent and devotional. We have, before now, been absolutely disgusted with some exercises of this kind; for there are ministers whom we could name who have a vile habit of talking at God, instead of praying to him. They exhibit a familiarity when addressing the Deity which illustrates the fact that and which painfully affects many who hear them. John Foster, one of the profoundest thinkers of the age, pointedly refers to this practice, and severely reprobates it, in his essay 'On the Aversion of Men of Taste to Evangelical Religion.' Dr. Cumming's prayer was a model of its kind; there were no tiresome repetitions, no daring approaches to the Divine presence, no presumptuous requests. All was solemnity, humility and devotion, and the fervent aspirations of the creature to its Creator.

'Fools rush in where angels fear to tread,'

The prayer is ended. Another hymn has been sung, and the preacher rises to commence his discourse. But before he does so let us occupy a moment or two in sketching his portrait, faithfully as may be with pen and ink, as he now stands in the sacred desk.

DEER ISLAND.—It was our privilege to spend Sunday last on Deer Island, and speak to a large congregation—consisting of about seven hundred people—of Jesus and the resurrection. It is where our city has located its Reform School and House of Industry. Mr. and Mrs. Payson, the Superintendent and Matron of the Institution, have our thanks for the politeness of their invitation.—M.

For the Crisis.

The Christian Publication Society.

A word of explanation is proper regarding the previous silence on this subject. Our friends have responded nobly to the call for funds, and nearly the whole $500 called for has been raised, thus showing that there is money enough for the good work, when there is a way to use it properly. It was not desired to limit the amount to be raised to $500; any amount can be used; and none need withhold their offerings on that account. Orders are already issued for printing tracts and pamphlets, which will consume most of the money pledged and paid. These publications will be sold at reduced prices, or distributed freely and judiciously. We hoped to have had ere this a new tract on "The Signs of the Times" ready for issue, but only one tract was sent in response to the call of the committee, and that was not adapted to the object in view. Of course the Editorial Committee would not themselves write tracts competing for a premium which they were to adjudge; and so, while waiting for others, they did nothing themselves. The delay will not continue long, I think; and if the preaching brethren at large, who wish tracts to scatter, cannot make an effort to write them, when they can be published without expense to themselves, then others will have to do what they can.

Already quantities of tracts have been sent West and South to the hospitals for the soldiers, besides the quantities that I have continued to send from my own resources with the aid of friends as usual in various directions. Our stock is now nearly exhausted, and new editions of tracts, books and pamphlets will be issued as soon as possible. My own removal to Boston has delayed the proceedings somewhat, but the delay will, I trust, give place to increased activity. Probably early in May, not far from thirty thousand pamphlets and tracts will be in the hands of the Christian Publication Society ready for distribution. These publications are to be sold, as far as possible, at lower prices than ever before, and also to be sent out in the hands of faithful men, who will circulate them carefully, and pay what they can get for them into the treasury of the Publication Society again.

Now let all who wish to aid send in their mites; and let those who wish for tracts and books, be prepared to send in their orders as soon as the tracts are ready. All orders for the issues of the Society should be directed to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass. Orders intended for me, should be addressed to me at Boston, Mass. I trust that our work will not be long; let us be diligent till it is done. It is too late to spend our time in idleness, in mere complimentary labors and words. The age demands work! Let us gird ourselves to engage in it. It is too late to tear down truth, and too late to build up sectarian feelings upon its ruins. Now God calls for men who shall rally at the mention of Jesus' name, and be joyful and faithful in the hope of his return. Let us in that day be found ready to hail our Master with gladness, and enter into the joy of our Lord. Pray for us, that the word of God may have free course and be glorified.

Your Bro. in Christ,

H. L. HASTINGS, President of the Christian Publication Society.

Book Notices.

"HUMAN DESTINY. A Critique on Universalism. By C. F. Hudson. An elaborate but very condensed argument, carefully logical in form, for the doctrine of the final annihilation of the wicked, directed chiefly against the Universalists and Restorationists. It contains much matter of interest to those thinkers—more numerous than is commonly supposed—who from time to time consider this phase of the infinitely vast, weighty, and oppressive question of Hereafter."—N. Y. Independent, April 3d, 1862.

The above candid notice I copy from the Independent. The price of the book is 44 cents. Let it be widely circulated. For sale at this office and by H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass.

"THESSALONICA; OR, THE MODEL CHURCH." —It is a well written work. It contains much instruction, and abounds with good sober truth.—Millennial Harbinger.

Correspondence.

From J. Blain.

Bro. Grant:—I find it necessary again to remind brethren through the Crisis that I am much in need of what is due me for books they have sold. I am getting out new editions of my works, and though I have accounts due me in every state from Iowa to Maine, and C. W., I cannot meet my payments as heretofore, having received a mere fraction of what is due me for the past year. The war and other causes have kept me at home for eight months the past year, and but few books are called for; so I feel the need of making an earnest request for help. I want to go to Illinois and Wisconsin and spend the season if I can obtain means to pay for works to take with me. Shall be at home till the middle of May, and trust brethren East and West will heed this call before that time. Much is due in small amounts of one to three dollars, which I hope will not be forgotten. At least $200 are due in such amounts, which would be quite an item to me.

Buffalo, N. Y., April 18, '62.

From S. C. Wellcome.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—While reading some of the soul-stirring epistles in the Crisis, I have thought there were some that would like to read a line from a pilgrim in the far West. For the past six years I have been suffering from disease of the heart, and many times have felt that my work was done; and then again by the goodness of God I would be able to perform a little labor, and be tolerably free from pain. But for the last two months I have been confined to my bed most of the time; and when I read of good old Dr. Smith's death, with whom I once enjoyed precious seasons in prayer meetings and social conversation, I thought that I too must soon bid farewell to the scenes of earth, and felt willing to lay down and rest a little while until Jesus should come to take his children home; yet for many years it has been my desire, if God's will, to stand upon the earth in that glorious day, and I believe there are those on the earth who will have that glorious privilege: but whether I live or sleep I expect to see Jesus in the morning in all his beauty, and be made like him. It is this hope that cheers my heart and sustains me through all my trials. I have peace in believing, and joy in the Holy Ghost. I can say with the Psalmist, He makes all my bed in sickness. O how sweet to rest by faith on the bosom of the blessed Jesus! to feel the blessed assurance that he is ours and we are his, purchased by his precious blood! O! I love to dwell upon the love of God, and to enjoy it in my soul, and by the grace of God I will try and live a life of faith, and encourage all I can to enjoy a present and full salvation. I may rest in a little while, but I hope to meet you all in the Kingdom. May God bless you all, is the prayer of your unworthy brother in Christ.

Garden City, Minn.

From A. T. F.

Mr. Editor:—In glancing over the columns of your most worthy paper, I noticed a short letter, entitled, "An appeal to backsliders"; and ere I was aware of it I was deeply immersed in its perusal. It seemed that every word was written for my especial reading. Long ago, when I was a very young girl, I professed religion under the preaching of Elder Bragg; but I left home and mingled in the society of the worldly, and in a little while forgot I had ever known a better life. I forsook the house of God, and joined myself to that crowd that go in the broad road. I drank deep draughts of worldly pleasure, and yet in my gayest moments there was an aching void in my heart, a restless longing after something better, more worthy of the end to which I was created; and times without number was I tempted to forsake the vanities of this world and flee to the only refuge for sinners; but each time some new pleasure presented itself to lure me from my newly-formed resolution. And so years have passed, and I have held myself aloof from the society of christians, and hardened my heart to that still small voice that was pleading so earnestly for admittance, until it seemed my heart was turned to stone. But of late I have had opportunity to reflect more calmly. I have read much, and thought deeply. I have prayed until it seemed the heavens were brass, or the Spirit had ceased to strive with me; and when my attention was arrested by the title before mentioned I concluded to respond to it.

The authoress asks, "Do you not now and then have a desire for something more lasting than earthly pleasures?" and she thinks were we to speak the sentiments of our hearts we should say, Yes. It is not now and then that we long for higher joys; but a continual longing to be lifted up and enfolded in the embrace of the Savior; to be gathered back into the fold; to feel his protecting care and love; to feel that we are wholly and truly his. It is truly hard to break the chains that Satan has thrown around us; but I am willing to undergo the struggle, if I by any means may obtain salvation. I am living an aimless, useless life, neither benefitting myself or my fellow creatures; and religion is just what I need to help me to live a useful life, and inherit life eternal when the earth shall bloom anew in Eden beauty. For that end pray for me, pray that I may live a better life here, and have abundant entrance into God's everlasting kingdom.

Obituary Notices.

In compliance with the dying request of a dear loved one, I mournfully record the death of Lucian Jerome, son of Lucian and Julia French, who died of diphtheria in Sangerville, Me., Dec. 29th, 1861, aged twenty-three years.

Alas! how suddenly are blooming hopes cut off and the cup of happiness dashed away just as the eager hand is extended to grasp it. Only a few days previous to his death Lucian was full of life and hope, enjoying the respect and esteem of a large circle of acquaintance, with a fair prospect of becoming a prominent and useful member of society. As a classmate and teacher, he was beloved and successful. But in an unexpected moment he was met by the destroyer, and in spite of every claim, was borne to the land of the enemy, where so many precious jewels are deposited, there to mingle with the dust until He who has promised that our children shall come again, shall be the plague of death and the destruction of the grave. It may not be expedient to reiterate the past; suffice it to say, as death made his stealthy appearance, he fled again for refuge, and found a ready and rich supply of dying love, which in other days he had not been ashamed to confess by being buried with Christ in baptism. He regretted his unfaithfulness, and with humble contrition confessed his backslidings, faithfully warning and exhorting all around him to seek an immediate preparation to meet the Lord. He wished his love remembered to his scholars, whom he had left a few nights before to visit a sick sister at home, with the expectation of returning in the morning to his post of duty as teacher; and to all, with the admonition to prepare to meet him soon. Thus rejoicing in the blessed hope of life through Christ, he passed calmly and triumphantly away.

In just one week the bitter cup was again drained to the very dregs by the afflicted parents. Dear Emily, the lovely daughter and sister, was likewise captured by a cruel enemy, to be held in his icy chains till He who has tasted death for every man shall bring down the keys of hades. Then will the loved one come forth a fadeless gem in the crown of Him who is Lord of all. Emily died in peace, like a precious lamb tenderly folded in the arms of the Good Shepherd. The lovely twain are laid away, side by side, quietly waiting to be called forth.

On account of sickness in the family, their funeral services were not attended until the 9th of February, when, according to the request of dear Lucian, Eld. J. Billings addressed a crowded house of friends and acquaintance from Hosea 13: 14,—"I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death. O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction. Repentance shall be hid from mine eyes." As we were living at the time in S., we had the privilege of being present to receive a share in the consolation administered on that mournful occasion. Never can the scene be forgotten in the neighborhood. The next day our dear Lizzie was consigned to the grave, and some of the kind young men who served as bearers, had served as such four days in succession for the same neighborhood. A sackcloth of sorrow hangs over the place, while the wail of the bereaved is heard on every hand. I anxiously ask, "Watchman! tell us, does the morning of fair Zion seem to dawn?"

Lydia Damman.

Died, in Blandford, Mass., March 14th, 1862, Sister Susan A., wife of Thomas Harrington, aged twenty-six years.

Her disease was diphtheria. About three weeks previous to her death she was administering aid and comfort to Sister Orin Phelps and children, who, with three of her children, are sleeping in the cold valley of death, having all died with that terrible disease, diphtheria, within four weeks time. While with them Sister H. took the disease which occasioned her death, after an illness of three weeks. She was not considered particularly dangerous until the day previous to her death. When informed of her danger, she calmly replied that it did not seem as though the work for her to do for the Lord was all done, but if it was she was prepared to die. She then very calmly distributed some articles of apparel among her sisters, and selected her text from which she wished her funeral discourse preached, which was from 1 Thess. 4: 18. As death approached, she met it with the fortitude of a true follower of Jesus. It is useless for us to speak eulogizingly of her, as all who knew Sister Harrington feel assured that she was a christian, and delighted in administering to the wants of the poor and afflicted. Bro. Harrington needs the prayers and sympathy of God's children to enable him to bear up under this stroke. He is left with two little boys, one aged four and the other seven. Her funeral was attended by the writer. While disease, war and peril are spreading abroad, may we not truly feel, "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

Wm. A. Fenn.

Died, in Conway, N. H., March 9th, of diphtheria, Clara C. Colby, aged seven years and ten months.

March 12th, Charles H. Colby, aged six years and four days.

March 18th, Lenora E. Colby, aged four years and four months.

March 27th, Philander M. Colby, aged two years and eight months.

April 4th, Hiram E. L. Colby, aged one year and two months.

Thus in twenty-six days all the children of Bro. Charles H. and Emily Colby fell victims to the enemy, and were laid in the grave to wait the morn of the resurrection; when with "Rachel's" they will come from the land of the enemy, and be brought to their own borders. May this sad and sudden bereavement, deeply afflictive as it must be, be overruled for the good of the parents in their loneliness and sorrow. Nothing can be so comforting as the "blessed hope," which is their only hope, that He that hath the keys of death and hades will soon come, open the graves, and summon all to judgment, when reward will be given according to deeds done in the body. Therefore, dear Bro. and Sr., be comforted with the soon coming One to to resuscitate and give life eternal to all who sleep in Jesus.

L. Boutell.

Died, from a wound received in the battle at Newburn, March 19th, 1862, Wm. C., second son of Alden and Hannah Soule.

He died in the Hospital, near the place of engagement. Funeral discourse preached by the writer in East Otis, Mass., April 6th. Text, Rev. 20: 12.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

The War.—Gen. McClellan, some time since, gave his opinion that this would probably be a short war—desperate, perhaps, but not of long continuance. He has chosen to go to Richmond by way of the region between the James and York rivers. Of course, he finds Yorktown in his way—a place that, according to all report, is more strongly fortified—more capable of protracted defence, than Manassas Junction. With the Merrimac commanding the James river, his operations against the rebel position are seriously obstructed. The monster must be sunk or the siege may continue for a long period.

If in the conflict which we suppose, is about to take place, the Merrimac should have the better and then be able to sweep the Roads, would not Gen. McClellan's army be in a bad predicament?

All the reports indicate that the rebels are concentrating most of their available force at Yorktown, and that our troops now on the Rappahannock may advance towards Richmond. They will probably be opposed at every step by a force inferior indeed, but able to offer a serious opposition.

Perhaps it is expected that Yorktown will be evacuated when Gen. McDowell shall be able to approach near Richmond. But this may not be the case for several weeks, if the rebels destroy roads and bridges and obstruct the route as far as possible.—Republican Standard.

Fortress Monroe, April 14. A flag of truce from Craney Island brought Norfolk papers, which were taken to headquarters, and every effort made to keep the good news of the fall of Fort Pulaski from the representatives of the Press. The Baltimore American, however, succeeded in gleaning the following:

Corporal Law of the Pulaski Guards, who left Fort Fort Thunderbolt after the Pulaski's flag was hauled down, brings intelligence of the event. The surrender was unconditional. Seven large breaches were made in the south wall by the Federal battery of light Parott guns at King's Landing. All the barbette guns on that side were dismounted; also three casemates, leaving only one gun bearing on that point. Three balls entered the magazine, and a clean breach was made in it. The conical balls of the Parott guns went through the walls at nearly every fire.

Col. Olmstead telegraphed on the previous evening that no human being could stand upon the ramparts a single moment, and that thousands of large shells had exploded within the fort.

The Republican gives no particulars as to the number of men and officers in the Fort at the time of its surrender.

Chicago, April 19. A special dispatch from Cairo says when Gen. Mitchell reached Decatur, he took possession of the telegraph office and cut the wires, leaving Decatur and Corinth only in communication.

Beauregard sent a message to Jeff. Davis demanding reinforcements for Corinth, declaring otherwise he could not hold the position. Gen. Mitchell promised the reinforcements. Important movements have taken place, the particulars of which we are not allowed to publish at present. At the latest dates the two armies at Pittsburg were nearing each other slowly.

Gen. Mitchell is now at Julia, Miss., having burned the bridges across the Tennessee river at Decatur and Florence.

Recent intelligence from Corinth confirms the reports concerning the magnitude of the enemy's force. Reinforcements for Beauregard were arriving at an unexampled rate. He has now 10,000 men, and is fortifying Corinth, building intrenchments and constructing an abattis. The rebels entertain no doubt of success.

The rebel army has its headquarters at the foot of Pea Ridge, extending two miles from Corinth. The advanced Federal forces are eight miles from Pittsburg, leaving only two miles between the opposing armies. A battle may be fought at any moment. We have the strongest assurances that our army is ready for the encounter.

Pittsburg Landing, April 14. A force of 5000 men, on five transports, left here Saturday night, accompanied by the gunboats Tyler and Lexington, and proceeded up the Tennessee river to a point near Eastport, Miss., landed, and proceeding to Bear creek bridge, destroyed the two bridges on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad. A force of 150 rebel cavalry were there, who, after having four killed, retreated. The expedition returned on Sunday night without loosing a man. This cuts off all communication of the main rebel body at Corinth with Alabama and the rest of rebeldom, except New Orleans.

A flag of truce arrived at the outposts yesterday with a son of Gov. Johnson of Kentucky, asking for his father.

New York, April 20. Four companies of the 8th Connecticut regiment had a skirmish on the 12th with a force of 150 rebels, who made a sortie from Fort Macon and drove in our packets. After a sharp engagement the rebels were driven back to Fort Macon. Captain Schaeffer and one private of Company H were severely wounded. The rebels took four of their men into the fort, one of whom was supposed to be dead. During the engagement Fort Macon fired seventy shots at the engaging forces.

The building of fortifications is still going on, and great preparations are making for bombarding Fort Macon. Operations will be opened on the 21st with mortars and siege guns.

The New Orleans correspondent of the Memphis Appeal says that the Confederate Government is now constructing in New Orleans thirteen large iron-clad gunboats, one of which is intended for sea service and the rest for sea service and the river. The largest is built by Murray, and is armed with thirty guns. The projector is confident that with it alone he will be able to drive the Lincoln fleet from the Mississippi. They are cased with railroad iron, and are considered invulnerable.

New York, April 21. The Herald's letter from Nashville gives the following telegram intercepted by Gen. Mitchell:

Corinth, April 9.

To Gen. S. Cooper, Richmond, Va.:

"All present probabilities are that whenever the enemy move on this position he will do so with an overwhelming force of not less than 85,000 effectives. Van Dorn may possibly join us in a few days with about 15,000 more. Can we not be reinforced from Pemberton's army? If defeated here we lose the Mississippi valley, and probably our cause; whereas we could even afford to lose for a while at Charleston and Savannah; for the purpose of defeating Buell's army, which would not only insure us the valley of the Mississippi, but our independence."

G. T. Beauregard.

ADVANCE OF GENERAL BANKS.

Camp, near Sparta, April 20. Everything is quiet in front. Yesterday cavalry reconnoissances penetrated the valley several miles toward Harrisonburg. They report large quantities of forage and provisions there. Deserters report Jackson's advance at McGougheystown, east of Harrisonburg, and still retreating.

Ashby's command still forms the rear guard.

Signal officers report that the enemy's cavalry was in sight yesterday afternoon.

Deserters believe that Jackson means to cross the Blue Ridge and reach Gordonsville. Others think he intends to make a detour North in the valley of the South Fork of the Shenandoah, and attack our left flank.

Heavy Freshets are reported in the Connecticut, Merrimac, and other rivers throughout the north, in many instances doing serious damage. The Manchester Mirror says:—

"There were two feet of consolidated snow in this region on an average, Tuesday morning of last week, and on Friday, by the intermediate power of the sun alone, it was completely melted, the roads dried and the fields fitted for the plow. The sward is as green as it had been under a vernal sun for a month."

Montreal, April 21. There are heavy freshets throughout Lower Canada. Many villages are flooded, causing great destruction of property. The locks and dams near Ottawa City are in danger. Western trains have been interrupted for the last three days. The road is washed out near Cornwall. It will be repaired to-day.

Pure Sorghum Seed.—It is opportune, in the present scarcity of pure seed, to know that small quantities may be had, by applying by mail to Mr. I. W. Briggs, Macedon, Wayne Co., N. Y. His supply is a portion of a large and perfectly matured crop, harvested from a field of one hundred acres, on the plantation of Hon. R. Peters of Atlanta, Georgia. Samples, near an ounce in weight, will be put up in paper bags, with printed directions for cultivation. Applicants need only send their address plainly written on an envelope, with a one cent stamp on the right upper corner. In planting sugar cane seed, care should be taken not to have Doura corn, Broom corn, Guinea corn, or any other of the Sorghum family near enough to hybridize. Want of this care has filled the country with impure seed.

To Remove Ink from Linen.—Dilute muriatic acid one half with soft water, wet the stain with warm soft water, and then apply the acid with a feather to the stain till it is thoroughly wet, rinse out quickly in warm suds; repeat the operation two or three times, and the stain will have disappeared.

For the Crisis.

Campmeeting.

As some of our brethren think a Campmeeting further east than Wilbraham would serve many better in these hard times, Bro. Munger proposes the first Monday in June for this meeting, and I think very favorably of the time. New Market Junction, N. H., is the place, if we can get it. What say brethren? Is there any objection?

NOTES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

H. V. R.—Both your letters are received. The Englishman's Hebrew Concordance is published in London, in 2 vols. 8vo. The price to import it is about $22. It cannot be got much if any cheaper than that. The postage on it would be, I presume, one dollar more. I am hoping to make an arrangement soon with the author to obtain some copies at a cheaper rate. If I succeed, which is uncertain, I will let you know and remember you. The book is one which all should have. The Englishman's Greek Concordance costs only $4. I can supply that at any time; it is invaluable as an aid in the study of the New Testament.

H. G. M.—The tracts, etc., sent you, are all paid for from the Tract Fund. You owe me nothing; thank the Lord for the tracts. If they have done good to the hundreds so eager to get them, the praise is His. If you can collect any money for them, send it and get more tracts. If you cannot send money, you can have tracts without. The Publication Society will soon have a host of tracts to sell or give away, and I shall soon have a full assortment for the same purpose. So if you want tracts, send for what you wish, and pay for what you can, and we will give the rest.

W. S.—Send in your orders. We will send you tracts free, or for pay, as many as you will need for your meetings. Books can go in the box, and you can raise funds there to pay freight. Give particular directions how and where to send them from Boston. The other matter is under consideration.

C. L. P.—You shall be remembered in the distribution of publications when they are ready.

March 10th, 1862. H. L. Hastings.

[illegible] of the Crisis:—Please insert the following poem. It is very expressive of the deep emotions of the believer, when the trials of this long and difficult pilgrimage become intense. Such have come to be the trials of many in this solemn time. I truly feel the force of this language.

Respectfully, P. D. CAMPBELL.

The Inner Calm.

BY HORATIUS BONAR, D. D.

Calm me, my God, and keep me calm
 While these hot breezes blow,
Be like the night dews' cooling balm
 Upon earth's fevered brow.

Calm me, my God, and keep me calm,
 Soft resting on thy breast;
Soothe me with holy hymn and psalm,
 And bid my spirit rest.

Calm me, my God, and keep me calm,
 Let thine outstretching wing
Be like the shade of Elim's palm
 Beside her desert spring.

Yes, keep me calm, though loud and rude
 The sounds my ear that greet—
Calm in the closet's solitude,
 Calm in the bustling street:

Calm in the hour of buoyant health,
 Calm in my hour of pain,
Calm in my poverty or wealth,
 Calm in my loss or gain.

Calm in the sufferance of wrong,
 Like him who bore my shame;
Calm 'mid the threatening, taunting throng,
 Who hate thy holy name.

Calm when the great world's news with power
 My listening spirit stir:
Let not the tidings of the hour
 E'er find too fond an ear:

Calm as the ray of sun or star
 Which storms assail in vain,
Moving unruffled through earth's war,
 The eternal calm to gain.

For the Crisis.

Report of the R. I. Quarterly Conference.

DANIELSONVILLE, Mar. 26th, 1862.

Wednesday, Mar. 26th, Conference met at 2 P. M. The afternoon was spent in social worship—a goodly number of preachers, delegates and others present. The Lord met with us. In the evening Bro. Chas. Goodrich preached from Acts 2: 37, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Lost men were clearly shown the way of life and salvation. Before preaching we were cheered by very many ready and pointed testimonies from young converts and old veterans of the cross.

Thursday, 27th, Conference met at 9 o'clock A. M., Bro. P. C. Rodman in the Chair. Prayer was offered by Bro. J. D. Brown. Report of last conference read, corrected and adopted. The Treasurer reported 11,200 pp. of tracts bought for free distribution since last conference, and a balance of cash on hand—$6,83. Preaching brethren present were invited to join us in our exercises. Bro. J. D. Brown reported Providence church. No conversions. Love one towards another continues even amid trials. Not quite enough missionary spirit. Visited occasionally by some who like controversy. Social meetings exceedingly refreshing. Bro. V. P. Simmons reported Danielsonville church. Thirty had expressed a desire to become christians. Twenty had taken a decided stand for Christ. Many backsliders have been reclaimed; twelve have been baptized, and others are about to go forward. Ten have received the right hand of fellowship. One very devoted and active member has been received into fellowship from the Methodist church. Wives who have for a long time prayed for their husbands have seen them converted to God. Those who are with us in labor and sympathy number about one hundred. Much religious feeling still exists in the community. Bro. Wm. Stone confirmed Bro. Simmons' report; felt thankful for God's blessings upon us which he had showed; spake with much feeling of the patient labors of their pastor. He had sown the seed—had called in help to gather the harvest—had prepared the timber, and Bro. Grant, under God's blessing, was aiding him in erecting a large house—was sorry he felt it duty to leave. We are and have been a united people in doctrine and in the support of our pastor. Bro. Babcock reported River Point Church. Interest rather low. Bro. Pardon Peckham reported Central Mills church, Coventry, R. I. Church small but well united. Social meetings neglected too much the past winter, owing partly to bad weather and traveling, but mostly to a lack of interest; the church loved strong meat; had but little preaching; hoped preachers would come. Bro. Carey reported East Killingly, Ct., church. Numbers few, but meetings quite interesting. His companion had embraced Christ of late—he thanked God. They were poor, yet had something for God's servants whom he desired to come and help them. Dr. Huntington reported the church in Abington, Ct. Had nothing very encouraging. He thought the state of the country accounted in part fot lack of interest. They were small and poor. Two had been baptized since he last met in conference. Bro. Brackett added that although they held some different sentiments they were united and loved one another. Maintained two social meetings every week. God was with them. Interest increasing. Their Congregational neighbors came in occasionally, and confessed the Spirit of God was there.

Bro. J. D. Brown introduced an extract from an eloquent advocate of war, showing how utterly recoopilable was war with Christianity. Bro. E. Bellows introduced the apostle's representation of the last days, James 5. Remarks were then made upon the duty of christians at this crisis by Brn. Brown, Carpenter, Peckham, Bellows, and others, adding much to the interest of the meeting. The Clerk reported Putnam, Ct. A few noble-hearted souls are striving together for the gospel in that place. He had been there five times, and had been much blessed. Several in Baptist church were much interested. Preaching brethren are invited to make appointments for this place when about to pass that way. Adjourned till to-morrow, 9 o'clock A. M. 2 P. M.. We listened with much interest to a very timely and refreshing discourse from our aged Bro. Dr. Huntington, founded upon Matt. 8: 4. We were fed. The discourse was followed by testimonies which inspired our hearts with love and confidence toward God, and tuned our lips with loudest praise, while our souls were filled with unspeakable joy. 6 45 P. M. A love feast for forty-five minutes, made rich by brief, heartfelt utterances, from fresh volunteers in the army of the cross. Bro. J. D. Brown then made an affectionate and impressive appeal to perishing men, founded upon Luke 8: 18,—"Take heed therefore how ye hear." Solemn and soul-stirring exhortations were then made by Brn. E. Bellows and H. L. Hastings. God's Spirit rested mightily upon the people.

Friday, Mar. 28th. Conference met at 9 A. M. Bro. Chas. Goodrich opened the exercises with prayer. He then by request reported his labors. Had labored in several States, seen souls converted, backsliders reclaimed. Had seen on the whole a good year. New fields were opening continually. Good had been done in Sharon, Ct. Southington, Ct., had taken a new start since Brn. Hastings and Rodman labored there. Some there had taken a decided stand for peace; had lost or refused employment in consequence; but God had opened for several of them more profitable and honorable employment than making implements of human slaughter. In Plainville, Ct., a good interest has sprung up from the labors of Brn. Grant, Hastings, and Munger. Souls have been converted of late under Bro. Munger's labors in the Methodist house. At Collinsville a few are holding on. The church in Winsted are now united in the work of God and of course are blessed. Bro. E. Bellows reported his labors. Quite an interest in Willington, Ct. Church had begun to see the necessity of gospel order. He spoke of the duty of ordaining Elders in every church, and standing by them in the time of trial. There is a prospect of good in the region of Willington. Bro. O. Hopkins said he had not labored much on account of sickness. Labor had been blessed in Gloucester, R. I. A small church had been raised up that were decided to go on. A door had opened in East Woodstock, Ct. Two sisters who live there had made many friends by scattering tracts among the people and lending the Crisis; had obtained a hall; people wanted to hear. He had enjoyed preaching to them; meant to go out more now that God had given him better health. Bro. M. R. Phetteplace reported the Foster church by letter. They were in a state of Spirituality. He himself was afflicted with poor health—was not able to ride so far as to the conference.

Bro. P. C. Rodman reported his labors. Never knew such an interest to hear the truth as now. Had been out in weakness and fear, but God had been with him in power. God had brought him through many apparent difficulties. He had fared better than his Master. Had visited Winsted, Ct., where they were in the best condition since '54. At Ware House Point, found them disheartened; gave them "milk" and they seemed strengthened. At South Windsor they came from three to four miles to hear the word. At Collinsville the Devil had rolled many of them in the mud and made them look bad; a few have escaped him. At Bakerville had a blessed time with a few. At Pleasant Valley the enemy was not entirely out of employment. Had visited also Northfield, Litchfield, New Britain, Southington and Willington; was blessed in all those places. In R. I. he had labored in Warwick Plains, amid no general interest,—at Carolina Mills, where the church was in good working order. In Westerly backsliders had been reclaimed, and prayer meetings revived. In New London and several other places which he had visited there was an interest to hear, and the word of the Lord had not yet lost its edge. The more he worked, the more burden for souls he felt. He meant to be in the Kingdom. Bro. Rodman's report was full of interest and deep feeling. We wept and rejoiced together as we listened to God's dealings with him. May the Lord continue to bless him. Bro. Goodrich commended the missionary spirit of Winsted. They go out in loads to distant places to hold prayer meetings; had been as far as 20 miles. Hoped it would be imitated. "Retribution" was doing a good work in Western Ct.

The Clerk reported his connection with church in D. Had been with it in trial; he now saw it in strength and triumph. Now that it was strong, duty seemed to call him away from it. It might be his calling to be with churches in their trials; he expected them in the future, but was assured of God's blessing. Several stirring and cheering testimonies were given in by God's children, after which the conference adjourned to meet at River Point June 25th, 1862. 2 P. M. Bro. P. C. Rodman preached unto us Jesus, from 2 Cor. 4, 5. As we listened we were inspired to sing,

"I love thee, my Savior,
I love thee, my God."

The social interview which followed will not soon be forgotten. The place was "Bethel" to us all. At 7 P. M. Bro. V. P. Simmons was ordained to the ministry of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Ordaining prayer by Bro. E. Bellows. Charge by H. F. Carpenter. Brn. Goodrich and Rodman participated in the exercises. Bro. Bellows then preached an impressive discourse upon the Resurrection.

Thus closed one of the best conferences we ever attended. May the spirit of this attend the next, and we who shared this share that also with many more whom we trust will come.

Correspondence.

From Bro. S. Hale.

BRO. GRANT:—I have long felt a desire to say a few words through the Crisis and Second Advent Messenger to the scattered flock who are looking for and loving the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ; "whom not having seen we love, though now we see him not, yet believing, we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." It is then, brethren, we shall receive the end of our faith, even the salvation of our souls. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be," saith the beloved John. We are now in the pilgrim's garb. We are strangers here. We are in an enemy's country, the inhabitants of which wonder what it is that we are seeking for—how it is that we endure under such adverse circumstances. It is enough for us to know that we are in the King's highway, the way that is cast up for the ransomed of the Lord. This is the highway of holiness. Do we not know that none but the willing and obedient can travel in this way? Our language must be the pure language of Canaan. This we shall find will be in perfect harmony with the last will and testament of our heavenly Father as revealed unto us by his Son Jesus Christ—the Prince of Peace—the Captain of our salvation—the author and finisher of our faith. Do we not find among those who are wedded to this world a decided apathy to these great and glorious truths we hold so dear? It is by the exercise of that faith that works by love, that purifies the heart, that overcomes the world, that gives us courage, virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, charity. It is designed by the great Head of the church that these things should so be.

It doth not yet appear. One word in this expression (yet) does not exclude us from the fact that we may not know what we are to be, what we are to receive for this our hope. "But hope that is seen is not hope; for what a man seeth what doth he yet hope for? But if we hope for that we see not, then shall we with patience wait for it." And this (it) is what will appear to our vision when He who is our life shall appear—then shall we be like him and see him as he is." What manner of persons ought we to be in all our conversation? If we shall be like him then (when he doth appear,) shall we not seek with all our hearts to be like him as we pass through the dark valley of the shadow of death, fearing no evil? "Perfect love casteth out fear." How may we obtain perfect love? Peter was instruted to tell us—Through the sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience and the sprinkling of the blood of Christ. It is on these three great living principles that God's election and foreknowledge is based, and just so sure as we are saved, it will be by our complete and perfect conformity to his will and purpose. This is the highway of holiness that is cast up for the ransomed of the Lord to walk in.

In this narrow way we'll watch and pray,
Lest we into temptation stray.

Do I speak the sentiments of those who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and in truth? Shall we not pray to our heavenly Father to energize every faculty of our nature in this great work? It seems to me this should be, for we are living in perilous times. And we should remember that we are not our own, we are bought with a price, even the precious blood of Jesus. Hence we should labor for that meat that endureth unto everlasting life. O be faithful, brethren, and in a little from this the Prince of peace, the King of glory, will come.

Troy, N. Y.

From Sr. H. Humphreyville.

BRO. GRANT:—The Lord has been manifesting his love to me in a more special manner for the past two years in laying his chastening hand upon me. I have been confined to my bed mostly, and more than one quarter of that time I have not been so as to bear my weight on my feet; but while I think I can see his kind hand in all his dealings with me, I try by his grace to bring my own will in subjection to his, and lie passive in his hand. Pray for me that my faith fail not. I have learned how to sympathize with those who have long suffered from disease incident to these mortal bodies. Oh! that grace and peace may be multiplied unto them. I feel to praise God for what he has done for me and my family. I look back with interest to the time we were "begotten again to a living hope through the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading, preserved in the heavens for us who by the power of God are guided through faith to the salvation prepared, to be revealed in the last time." (Macknight.) Concerning which salvation the prophets inquired and searched diligently. On account of which we who are poor invalids may rejoice and be exceeding glad, though now for a little while in these last days of peril and trial it may seem needful that we suffer afflictions, that our faith may be tried; yet we have the promise of our heavenly Father, who is "too wise to err, and too good to be unkind," that all things shall work together for good to them that love God. Yet I fear that some have become invalids for want of being properly exercised unto godliness. I often think of a remark Sister Mathewson made in a love feast, just after we embraced the Advent faith. When she ought to be a mother in Israel, she found she was but a babe in Christ. She had come to the decision that she would remain so no longer. I often feel to inquire, where are the fathers and mothers in Israel, who are ready to take the young, the weak, the tried, the tempted ones by the hand, and speak a word of encouragement to them? Oh, that each one might feel the weight of the responsibility that rests on them. And if those in health could realize the privileges they enjoy, and improve the little time that remains, I think there would be a coming up to the help of the Lord.

We have meetings here in our house occasionally, which prove great blessings to me. I would hardly doubt that I had passed from death unto life, if I had no other evidence only the love I feel towards those that are living and those that are sleeping, which I have seen, and with those I have never seen, I expect to be gathered, when Jesus comes, where there will be no more sickness, and where his soft hand will wipe all tears from every eye. I can say from a full heart—Come! oh, my Savior, Come!

Northfield, Ct.

From Bro. George Moyer.

BRO. GRANT:—I left home, La Porte Co., Ind., Friday before the second Sunday in February, for Earlville, Ill., where there are a few brethren striving to let their light shine. The meeting-house which our brethren have the privilege of occupying half of the time, being then occupied by the Methodists in holding a protracted meeting, I concluded to push on to Amboy, a distance of twenty-five miles, where I arrived Saturday evening, and found Brn. McCullock and Clark holding a protracted meeting of some considerable interest. I preached for them a few times, remaining over Sunday and part of the following week. The meetings increased in interest; a few started for the kingdom of God, and quite a number more were also under conviction that it was their duty to obey the gospel.

Thursday, Feb. 13th, in company with Bro. S. Clark, I left Amboy for Millroy, Knox Co., Ill., where Brn. Clark and McCullock had a short time previous held a meeting. This is a new field, and one where the people manifested a willingness to hear. We held a meeting of eight days, and baptized eight intelligent believers into the Christ, who, with those that had been previously baptized, make now about twenty firm and intelligent believers in the glad tidings concerning the kingdom of God. We organized a church in accordance with the Bible, expecting on our return to see quite a number more added to their numbers. Many are ready to say the Bible is a new book to them, and sorely regret that they were kept in the dark so long; while others confess that nothing short of the truth of the Bible could ever have reached them. Many are inquiring for tracts and books. There is great anxiety on the part of some to read. There is a great want of tracts on life and death, for as a general thing people wish to know the truth with reference to this subject first, and tracts treating upon these topics are great help. Cannot Bro. Hastings' Tract Society afford to send us a few, that is, some small tracts on life and death? If so, send them to J. C. Show, Watага, Knox Co., Ill., or to Homer King, Galva, Knox Co., Ill.

On the close of our meeting at Millroy, Bro. Clark, in company with Bro. Homer King, a young man just beginning the work of preaching, started in one direction, and myself in another, laboring in different localities in the neighboring vicinities. But at present, March 10th, we are holding meetings in Henderson, one of the oldest villages in this (Knox) county. There is a small church here, and they are looking for the coming of the Just One. The prospect is good for an increase in their numbers; but of this hereafter. May the blessing of God attend our labors.

From T. W. Smith.

BRO. GRANT:—The Lord has remembered us in much mercy. We have been made to rejoice in seeing the ungodly forsake his wickedness and obey the gospel, and sectarianism gradually receding. I spoke of the opposition that I encountered at the first here; but, praise the Lord, we have seen the children of some of those people come and join us in defence of the truth; their parents also repenting of their evil ways and acknowledging their faults. I see among my hearers now many who reviled and bitterly persecuted us. Last week the good Lord remembered his servants, and strengthened us by adding six noble souls to the church. We now number eighteen strong, earnest, faithful souls. I think before this week passes away we may be rewarded by a number more. The society has chosen your unworthy brother as their under shepherd. The church is now fully organized, having the proper officers, and meeting regularly once a month to partake of the Lord's Supper. The church is known as Mount Zion Christian Church. Mt. Zion is merely a local name. I am preaching constantly. The Lord has enabled me to speak about forty-seven times since I have been here.

I wish to correct a mistake that a good brother out here seems to be laboring under, namely, that our dear Sister Henry is the only Advent preacher in Southern Illinois. If the brother means that none other preaches the sentiments advocated by the Crisis than our sister, he is greatly mistaken, for we have labored faithfully in defence of these truths. But if he means she is the only one that is known as an Adventist, he may be correct, for I, for one, reject the name as a denominational or party name, as strongly as I do Methodist or Calvinist, or any other human cognomen. To me there is no name as expressive, as beautiful, and as scriptural as "Christian." I want the brethren to understand that, while I preach what may be called the Advent faith, I cannot take any name but Christ. I hope our brethren will see that, by clinging to this name, they are helping to widen the breach now existing in the church, caused by party names. Let us be one. Brethren, pray for us.

Vandalia, Ill., Feb. 23d.

A more recent letter (March 5th) from Bro. S., mentions the conversion of three souls, and the baptism of a young man, once a bitter opposer. The church, he states, contains twenty-four members. Feb. 28th, Bro. S. was ordained to the work of the ministry, and for the present acts as pastor over the church in the place from which he writes.—O.

Don't neglect the Children.—No. 2.

From the Latin preposition e, from, or out of, and duco, to lead, comes our English word education; and it is very comprehensive in its meaning, implying an inductive process from what is merely instinctive to the higher endowments of physical, intellectual, moral and religious growth. To the little child, that at birth is apparently the most feeble and dependent of the animated creation, the acquisition of knowledge is not intuitive. Hence, to lead forth its tender and susceptible mind from the mystical shades and the illusive wonders which surround it on every hand; to properly develope all its incipient and growing powers, demands our earliest and most unwearied attention. And however various the opinions entertained by different persons respecting the most available methods of unfolding the growing capacities of the youthful mind, certain it is, no ordinary circumstances in life should exempt any parent or guardian from the performance of this arduous duty.

During the dark ages, amid the reign of papal power and superstition, no common-school instruction was devised for the intellectual, rational and religious education of the young, if we except that of the followers of the illustrious Peter Waldo, "of whom the world was not worthy." It is conceded that a system of instruction was in use among that oppressed and despised, but pious and devoted people, which would have done credit to later ages, and which shone as a light in a dark place. But it was not until the time of the Reformation that anything like general information began to be diffused among the masses. No sooner had the reading of the sacred Scriptures become common among the people, than a desire was promoted for mental, moral and religious instruction; and for ages prior to this period, morally speaking, "darkness had covered the land and gross darkness the people." And this principle has ever held true in all subsequent times, namely, that wherever the pure, unsophisticated, and unmystified doctrines and precepts of the Bible have been most faithfully read, preached and understood among the people, we find the most actual and elevated standard of freedom in a social, civil, intellectual and religious point of view. And it is here we find the doors of the Sabbath School thrown open every week by those taught of God for the reception of the children, that they may learn from the sacred pages the principles of that "godliness which is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come." Here, too, we find the bright and verdant spots in earth's moral desert, where a host of patriarchs, prophets, apostles, confessors and martyrs have held their post through all the tribulations of this life. They now repose in Jesus, awaiting the dawn of a millennial morning. Of what vital importance, then, that the children and youth of our land be early taught the truths and principles of that holy book which has proved an unfailing passport to those bright examples whose lives and virtues furnish the most exalted standard for emulation.

To elicit attention and promote an impulse among the brethren in favor of Sabbath School instruction, is the object of the foregoing remarks. Let us do what we can before the sunset of this dispensation.

NEVER MURMUR AT GOD'S PROVIDENCE.—A merchant was one day returning from market. He was on horseback, and behind him was a valise filled with money. The rain fell with violence, and the good old man was wet to the skin. At this he was vexed, and murmured because God had given him such bad weather for his journey. He soon reached the borders of a thick forest. What was his terror on beholding on one side of the road a robber, with levelled gun, aiming at him, and attempting to fire! But the powder being wet by the rain, the gun did not go off, and the merchant giving spurs to his horse, fortunately had time to escape. As soon as he found himself safe he said to himself, "How wrong was I not to endure the rain patiently as sent by Providence! If the weather had been dry and fair I should not, probably, have been alive at this hour, and my little children would have expected my return in vain. The rain which caused me to murmur came at a fortunate moment to save my life and preserve my property."

Letter from Albany.

BRO. GRANT:—We, the undersigned, having resolved to abstain altogether from tea, coffee, tobacco, and all intoxicating drinks as a beverage, desire to become members of your Try Company. Bennie is but a little fellow, not three years old, and of course cannot understand much about it, although he says, "I join the Try Company," yet we will ever be watchful to guard him from every appearance of evil. We will all be free from temptation at home, as father and mother no longer drink tea or coffee. In giving them up they have got rid of all bad feelings in their head, and besides, are going to save the money they used to spend for tea, coffee, and sugar, to take them to camp-meeting next fall. Sr. Robertson tells us it is best not to drink at all while eating, so, belonging to the Try Company, we adopt this plan. We get up bright and early mornings, and walk out with Sr. Robertson, and are a healthy, happy family. Mother keeps unleavened Graham cakes in the stone jar now instead of doughnuts. We love them very much, and know they are healthy.

We want to be an unbroken family in the kingdom, and are trying hard to get there. We cannot understand doctrines much, but the Bible tells little children to obey their parents, to love one another, and to love Jesus. This we can understand, and pray to God for new hearts, and the Holy Spirit to help us do it. We have heard of a bright little company Bro. Rufus Wendell had at the campmeeting last fall, and would love to join it next if we could. We know we cannot be there, but would like to meet all these children, and many others, in the kingdom. Children, let us all be a Try Company for the kingdom.

ISAAC L. ALLEN, Jr., 12 yrs. DAVID G. ALLEN, 10 yrs. EVA JANE ALLEN, 8 yrs. NELLIE M. ALLEN, 6 yrs. BENNIE ALLEN, two and a half years.

FROM MARTIN L. HOWARD.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to invite all the members of the Try Company, who do not love the Savior, to give their hearts to him. Jesus said,—"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." I am glad he ever spake those words. I have found peace in believing on him. Come, dear children, let us love the Lord, and when Jesus comes he will save us in his kingdom.

I will answer some of the questions asked by the Try Company. You will find the answer to the second question in 2 Kings 20: 1. Fourth question in 1 Chron. 13: 9, 10. The fifth question in Deut. 34: 5, 6. The next is in Acts 9: 17. Please read Matt. 3: 13–17. That will tell you who baptized Jesus. You will find the answer to the enigma, composed by Emily, in Luke 14: 17,—"Come, for all things are now ready."

Where did Aaron die, and how long did the congregation mourn for him?

MARTIN L. HOWARD.

FROM MARGARET [illegible].

Bro. Grant:—I am a little girl fourteen years old. I am much pleased with the Try Company, and wish to become a member. I use no tea nor coffee, and I like the Crisis very much. I think it is the best paper in the world. I hope it will teach the members of the Try Company to seek Jesus.

Thoughts at the Communion Table.

Lord, we meet our hearts to cheer
With thoughts of morning light,
Casting off our every fear,
Our sky becometh bright.
Tears of love bedew each eye,
And notes of sadness thrill,
As we look to Thee and cry,
The Master's absent still!

Ah! we see a vacant seat,
Though many throng the board;
Still our number's not complete,
For One is not restored;
And within our midst, we find
A place none else can fill;
Blessed Jesus, sad our mind,
For thou art absent still.

While we speak, and while we sing,
We miss thy charming voice;
Come, our Savior! come, our King!
And bid our hearts rejoice.
Spread thy table far and wide
Upon the better shore;
Bid the hungry, thirsty bride,
Eat and bewail no more.

We will strive with feeble might
To serve thee while we roam,
Cheer us in time's dreary night
With visions of our home.
Sigh we for that joyful day,
As bright as many suns,
When the Lord, in heaven's array,
Shall "serve" his ransomed ones.

For the Crisis.

It Hasteth!

Do we, amid the business, the pleasure, and the scheming of this degenerate age, comprehend our true position as christians? Do we know that we are now amid the scenes that are swiftly winding up the present dispensation? Do we comprehend that the kingdom of God is at hand? Do we know that the Judge standeth before the door? Do we feel that soon we must see his face in gladness or in woe? Are we drunken with the golden cup? Do we sleep and not as children of the night and of darkness? Are we about our business, or our pleasure, secure as the Sodomites on the morning of their overthrow? Have we settled down like the antediluvians, careless of the warning, and presuming upon the long suffering of God? Do we forget that "judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and damnation slumbereth not?"

Have we fallen from the grandeur of the christian's mission? Have we left the seeking of the lost for paltry disputations, for personal controversies, for hollow compliments, and heartless smooth speaking? Have we got so sure that God will never call us to account, that we can make compromises with error and worldliness in the spirit of mere carnal policy? Are all the old anchor-hopes of the church mere whims? Are the foundations but of sand? Do we need to return to the feeding of milk again? Must we teach again to those, who for the time ought themselves to be teachers, what be the principles of the doctrine of Christ? Must we again lay the foundation,—repentance from dead works, faith towards God, the teaching of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment? Must we see all these cast aside, and yet receive those that do it, and bid them God speed, no matter what doctrine they bring? Will it be profitable? Will it pay? Can we make ourselves friends in this way, and prosper in the work and sight of God? Or shall we find our schemes trampled in the dust by the footsteps of providence, and learn that God would have us open, honest, guiltless and sincere?

Do we need alarms to work virtue in us? Cannot we be christians, except when we are sure of our reward or doom at some certain day or date? Or have we principle enough to do right at whatever hazard, and leave the event with God? Can we not stand for God and the right, even though we stand alone? Can we not stand unmoved, even though mocked by foes, backbitten by hypocrites, and sneered at by lukewarm friends? Can we not endure hardness as good soldiers? Can we not rejoice in honest poverty, and even in privation and toil, for the sake of Jesus Christ? Have we forgotten the fountain of sympathy, the source of blessing? Do we know the deep love that dwells in Jesus' brother-heart? Can we not cast our care on him, and leave our foes to spit their fury to the winds? Ah! there is a hiding place for the poor and the oppressed; and when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm, then God shelters them like a protecting wall. Do we know the secret refuges where Jesus keeps his little ones? Have we learned that the name of the Lord is a strong tower, and that the righteous runneth into it and is safe? Have we ever, when pursued by the violence of foes and the strife of tongues, felt that God came forth to deliver us, and bring us in? Have we ever felt ourselves led by him through the dark labyrinths and the narrow passages, through the straight places and the dungeon-like doors, until at length he had brought us where no foe could find or harm us, and from the turrets and battlements of his strength, bade us to look forth with uplifted heads upon the impotent rage of our enemies beneath?

Do we know where our strength is? Do we know that though we are alone with God, we have more than a majority? Do we often ask ourselves the question, "Who is he that shall harm you if ye be followers of that which is GOOD? Are we sure that they that are for us are more than they that are against us? or do we need to hire or coax all the hosts of Amelek, Egypt and Babylon into our ranks, in order to strengthen our hands? Is quantity so much more important than quality? Do we know that the day is coming when numbers will not count? Do we understand that before the great white throne no policy, hypocrisy, or subterfuge can avail? Are we aware that majorities there are nothing? that sounding trumpets are there but sounding brass? that every act and word and thought must there be weighed?

"There shall sit the Judge unerring,
No just sentence then deferring."

Do we comprehend that that scene and that day are at hand? Do we hear the distant thunder which portends the coming storm? Do we mark the dire abominations that abuse and wear out the long suffering of God? Do we hear the low mutterings which herald on the earthquake's tramp? Do we know that ten thousand voices of providence and prophecy unite to cry, "The GREAT DAY of the LORD is NEAR; it is NEAR, IT HASTETH GREATLY, even the voice of the day of the Lord; the mighty man shall cry there bitterly"?

It hasteth! Are we ready for that day? It hasteth! Is our work done? It hasteth! Are our treasures and possessions safe from its fires? It hasteth! Are our lamps trimmed and burning? It hasteth! Are we doing all that we can, according to the working that worketh in us mightily, to prepare ourselves and others for its solemn grandeurs?

Men of God, awake! The day of God cometh. It hasteth. Let us be ready. Wanderer from God, the judgment storm bursts on the world, and you are far from the fold, on the dark mountains, stumbling in your way. Lost sheep, lo! in earth's dim twilight Jesus the good Shepherd goes once more to seek YOU, and bring you home. Will you come? Shall he find you? Shall he bring you home rejoicing, or will you stay till there gathers on your pathway the blackness of eternal night, and till you are lost forever? Shall heaven rejoice over your return, or shall Jesus weeping say: "How oft would I have GATHERED you, BUT YE WOULD NOT"?

Man of the world, sinner in darkness and in folly, the day of the Lord cometh! This word must be sounded in your ears. This gospel must be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; then shall the end come. I know you not, I may never see your face. But to-day I bear you this witness. I tell you these things. The kingdom of God is at hand,—it cometh! and Christ shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and at his kingdom. I testify this fact to you. God will judge you, will judge me. Pass where you may, you have been warned. To-day I serve this summons upon you. Meet me in the presence of the Lord in peace! Meet me at the right hand of the Judge. Meet me among those who wash their robes in the blood of the Lamb. Will you meet me among the saved in that day? If not, then I bear you witness of the judgment to come, the lake of fire, the second death. May God save you ere that day, and bring us to his kingdom in peace. Amen.

The Opening of the Seventh Seal.

NUMBER SEVEN.—Concluded.

"And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour."—Rev. 8: 1.

Nothing has thus far been said on Popery, or the little horn of Dan. 7; but all commentators agree that the fifth trumpet gives the rise of Mohammedism, or the little horn of Dan. 8; and the sixth trumpet gives the rise of the Ottoman empire, or the Turkish power, which also carried the Mohammedan religion with their armies. The Mohammedan, therefore, is one of the Gentile powers which shall tread the holy city under foot forty-two months, or 1260 years; and this is the same power of which Daniel is speaking 12: 7. "And when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished": for he had spoken of the Papacy in connection with the Roman power in the previous chapter; "and at the time of the end" of that power as a universal monarchy, verse 40, "the king of the south shall push at him":—Mohammed with his armies of Saracens or Arabians; and the king of the north, or the Turks, follow, and utterly subvert the eastern empire, which had now become one of the two horns of the Papacy. Rev. 13: 11,—"And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon." By the two horns as a lamb must be meant the eastern and western divisions of the Roman empire which were given to the Pope who ruled by authority professedly derived from Christ the Lamb. But the Revelator did not touch upon Popery, or the pale horse, until he had finished the vision of Mohammedism, or the black horse. The two witnesses prophesied in sackcloth during the reign of both these powers; "And when they shall have finished their testimony, (in sackcloth,) the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them." 11: 7. This beast has its origin in the bottomless pit from whence Mohammedism arose, 9: 1, 2, a religion utterly destitute of any foundation in truth; and hence the bottomless pit may represent the origin of any similar system, and will emphatically apply to Atheism, or Polytheism. The secular Roman empire is represented as a beast rising out of the sea, 13: 1, and Dan. 7: 2, 3; Papal Rome, as a beast coming up out of the earth, having two horns like a lamb, verse 11; and as a little horn coming up among the ten, Dan. 7: 8, in which was a mouth speaking great things. To the secular Roman beast was given a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies, verse 5, in addition to the mouth as of a lion which the beast previously had, verse 2. This additional mouth, I think, was Popery engrafted into the secular Roman empire; and hence the forty-two months of his continuance, or making war (margin), refer to the Papacy, which, conjointly with Mohammedism tread the holy city under foot, it being sometimes under the dominion of one, sometimes under the other; these two being rival powers striving for the mastery of Jerusalem and the holy land, as the long and bloody Crusades will testify.

When secular Rome constituted the Pope "universal bishop," over both its eastern and western divisions, he, or Popery, became a beast coming up out of the Roman earth, having two horns like a lamb. Some have supposed the two horns to represent both his civil and ecclesiastical power; but both horns were like a lamb, and therefore cannot represent different things: but they may represent two divisions of the same government, just as the ten horns represent ten divisions of the Roman government, or rule over so many States or kingdoms. Rev. 17: 12, 13. This beast of Rev. 17, I think, is the old Roman polytheistical beast revived under the name of Atheism; for the belief in a plurality of gods is equivalent to a belief in no God. Both originate in a bottomless pit. "The beast that thou sawest, was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition," verse 8. This is the same beast that kills the two witnesses. This vision represents the "judgment," not the reign of the woman, "MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT," verses 1–5. The ten horns of this beast are not her supporters, but her destroyers, verse 16. Hence this vision represents scenes which have transpired, and are now passing before our eyes. Spiritualism is but a more refined term for Atheism, and multitudes are being drawn into its awful vortex. To deny the Word of God, is virtually to deny the being of a God. Any religious system not founded upon the Word, has its origin in the bottomless pit, and must go into perdition.

No civil government on earth has the Word of God for its basis. All are maintained by the sword; and "he that killeth with the sword, must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints."—Rev. 13: 10. The kingdom of the saints is here contrasted with the kingdoms of this world which kill with the sword. If they also kill with the sword, then they must in like manner be killed with the sword, and hence their kingdom perish. The two witnesses cannot mean the saints, or the true church, as many suppose; for the united body of believers is always spoken of as a unit. "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office; so we, being many, are one body in Christ." Rom. 12: 4, 5. "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit."—1 Cor. 12: 13. Hence the two witnesses cannot mean the Jewish church, and the church gathered from the Gentiles under the Christian dispensation. "For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition . . for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace."—Eph. 2: 14. 15. "Neither pray I for these alone; but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." John 17: 20, 21. This is sufficient to establish the unity of believers, and hence they cannot be represented as two witnesses. Again, "If any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed. These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy (in sackcloth—the famine foretold by Amos 8: 11–13): and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues as often as they will."—Rev. 11: 5, 6. Such power the Christian church has never had. Indeed they were expressly forbidden to exercise such power, had it been given them. Luke 9: 54, 55,—"Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them even as Elias did? But he turned and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."

Having thus proved from the Word of God who the two witnesses are not, I will now endeavor to prove from the same Word who they are. My witness is one who testifies for me against my adversary. Christ said to the unbelieving Jews, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me."—John 5: 39. These were the Jewish scriptures which testified for Christ against the unbelief of that nation, in which Christ says in the previous verses, "The Father himself hath borne witness of me, and ye have not his word abiding in you." "When Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finished, . . . [he] commanded the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, saying, Take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, that it may be there for a witness against thee." Deut. 31: 24–26. Compare this with Rev. 11: 19, which follows the ascension of the witnesses. "And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament," or covenant; evidently referring to the ark in which the book of the law was deposited. This seems to explain that the book of the law was a witness against the unbelieving Jews. Christ, foretelling the end of all nations, says, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto, [or against,] all nations; and then shall the end come."—Matt. 24: 14. The gospel would soon have ceased to be preached had it not been written; hence the written gospel is the witness against all nations to whom it is sent, as the book of the law was against the Jews to whom it was given. Compare Rev. 11: 5,—"If any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed," with what Christ says of his own written book of Revelation, 22: 18, 19,—"For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book. And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life (or from the tree of life, margin), and out of the holy city, and from the things that are written in this book." What is here said of the book of Revelation is doubtless true of all scripture which is given by inspiration; and hence if any man will hurt them, the Scriptures, by adding to or taking from them, he must be killed in the manner described at the close of this holy book.

Thus I have endeavored to prove, from the Word alone, that the Law and the Gospel are the two witnesses. They are killed after the sounding of the sixth trumpet, and before the sounding of the seventh. Nothing in the history of the past with which I am acquainted seems to be so exact a fulfillment of the prediction as the destruction of the Bible by infidel France during the short reign of Atheism. Says the historian, "In 1793, the decree passed the French Assembly suppressing the Bible. Just three years after, a resolution was introduced into the Assembly, going to supersede the decree, and giving toleration to the Scriptures. That resolution lay on the table six months, when it was taken up, and passed without a dissenting vote." Thus in just three years and a half, corresponding to the "three days and a half," after the witnesses were killed by the decree under which the Bibles were gathered and burned, they again stood upon their feet; and their extensive circulation since in nearly all languages, and the high estimation in which they are held by the Lord's believing people, explains the figure, "And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud."

In this exposition of the seven seals, I have attached more importance to them than has commonly been done by writers upon the Bible. In the examination of Scripture testimony, my own mind has been enlightened; and if the result shall be the same to my readers, then I have not labored in vain.

"While o'er life's wide and darkling plain,
Unheeding as we roam,

God leads his children home;

The Coming Kingdom.

"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever."—Rev. 11: 15

This is a great event—no less than the final triumph of Christ; the end of the kingdoms of this world, and the introduction of the glorious kingdom of the Savior; the overturning of the power and the dominion of human apostasy, and the transfer of the royalty and the diadem of the earth to Him whose right it is to reign, and of whose dominion there shall be no end.

The relations of this great event to the future destiny of man, and to all our present efforts to spread throughout the world the knowledge of the gospel by which he is to be saved, are immediately apparent. To a consideration of some great facts and principles connected with it, I shall devote the present address:

1. The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. They are not so now. They are not only not identical, they are completely separate and opposed. They have no other relations than those which are possible between opposing elements commingling upon the same area of manifestation; occasionally, severally conquering, and severally overcome; and awaiting, in this changing process of development, the final adjudication of their contest, and the conclusive settlement of the victory.

The governments or kingdoms of this world are but the organized dominion of human apostasy from God. They have ruled under the four distinct aspects of Paganism, Mohammedanism, Popery, and Infidelity; but always in opposition to our Lord and his Christ. The will and the word of God have never yet been adopted by men as the rule of earthly authority. Noah looked upon the world as corrupt before God. Abraham, Moses, and Daniel beheld it, in their successive ages, as still wholly apostate. Seven hundred years after the last of these, St. John declared it was everywhere still lying in the wicked one. Eighteen hundred years later, we survey a field vastly more extended, but maintaining the same universal characteristics; and we are, in our turn, compelled to proclaim that the governments of this world are still everywhere apostate from God and his Christ.

His word is, indeed, more or less tolerated as the possession of individuals, as his providence restrains and overrules the hostility of men. His glorious revelation of redeeming love, so dear and precious to the hearts of his chosen people, is suffered in more or less public profession; is sometimes, indeed, protected, in its civil aspect as the chosen and valued property and right of individual men. But not one nation, as a nation, professes to reverence the authority of the Lord of hosts. And one or another of the shapes of human apostasy already mentioned, is everywhere still the garb and symbol, the rule and type of the government of men.

We easily trace the origin and course of human apostasy, as God has himself described it to us. Its combination of individuals, its organization as a combination, make up a painful part of the historic record of the Scripture. Near three thousand years before the Savior's coming, was the first earthly kingdom established. Three other great empires have since succeeded it, occupying the same theatre, ruling on the same field, and marked by the same characteristics. The rebellion against God which organized its dominion on the plain of Shinar, has filled the veins of human ambition, stimulated the lusts of human conquest, and sounded the triumphant shout, "We are the people;" "who is Jehovah, that we should serve him?" in every succeeding generation, and on every successively cultivated soil, to our day. Britain and America, as nations, no more really adopt the Divine authority as the rule of Government, than did Babylon or Persia. The production of God's revealed word as the rule to be adopted for the government of men; the reverent assertion that his law should be the only line of human dominion; the position assumed that human society should be organized and governed for the purpose of spreading his truth, and giving knowledge of his salvation, was far less scorned when Jonah proclaimed its principle in Nineveh, or when Daniel announced its authority in Babylon, than it would be now in the Parliament of Great Britain, or in the Congress of the U. S.

The apostasy of man then ruled upon the plea of open idolatry, with all its earnestness, if with all its crimes. The same apostasy now rules on the more offensive and scornful ground of absolute infidelity, professedly ignoring all religions; conceding that one God, or a hundred gods, must be acknowledged and protected alike, if men shall so please; avowing that the present world is its whole lawful object, and human government has no end beyond the protection of man while he is in it, and in the enjoyment of the material benefits which it presents. Thus God, in his authority, is banished from his own earth, and the kingdoms of this world are, in their absolute profession, not the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ.

From the midst of this apostasy of man, God selected a line of grace, a family for himself, a people over whom he would rule, and by whom he would have his authority acknowledged and his name glorified. We may trace this line of grace from Adam downwards. Like a silver stream meandering in stillness through the plains of earth, often concealed by the showy verdure along its banks, and yet marked by the very verdure which itself has created, it springs even from the gate of a Paradise lost, where cherubim were stationed, the symbol of a reconciled and reconciling God. It wanders, and grows as it wanders. Yet in all the early ages of its course, this fifth stream, if I may call it so, seems comparatively small, when contrasted with the four heads of human rebellion, into which the river of original Eden has been divided. Countless millions make up the apostasy from God. The Savior's flock is still a little one in the earth. This selected demonstration of the Divine government among men is clearly marked as we come down to Noah, to Abraham, to Moses, to the time of the Savior's advent in the flesh. Its subjects are the sons of God, the people of God, the election of grace, the Church, the assembly of the living God. To them the promises were given, the revelations were made, the prophecies were uttered. And among them, in its various appointed methods of manifestation, the Divine presence was established and maintained. They were God's property, and God's people, in the midst of an unbelieving world. From Jacob's time, this line of grace was in his family peculiarly, perhaps alone. Whatever there was of true religion, of the knowledge of God, on the earth, was found among them. As a nation, they were organized professedly on Divine authority. Every nation outside of Israel was but a part of the organized apostasy from God. And though all Israel were not of the true Israel, yet among them was the covenant of God, the adoption of his children, the giving of his promises, and the remnant according to the election of grace. In the very organizing of Israel as a people, God had said to them, "If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure to me above all people; . . . and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation." They were constituted the kingdom of one Lord and of his Christ, abiding for centuries in the earth—a visible kingdom, a manifest kingdom, separate from the kingdoms of this world, and opposed to them in all the principles of their organization, and in the source and the whole arrangement of the authority by which they were governed. They stood in the earth, the witness for God—they only chosen from all the nations of the earth, to know his will, and to receive his law. The Lord their God was their King.

II. Thus have we the two subjective parts of the great contrast before us, and we may trace their separate but parallel course.

"The kingdoms of this world," in the triumphant annunciation of the Apocalypse before us, is a technical expression. It describes the actual dynasties of human government, the powers of the present world; but it describes them in a special relation to previous Scriptural testimony. It is the proclamation of the actual fulfillment of a divine prediction long before recorded for the encouragement and hope of the church of God. The prophet Daniel was appointed to record this complete history of the governments of this outer world, in the seventh century before the Savior's advent. He interpreted the great symbol of the metalic image, which Mede calls "the Great Almanac," and Faber "the Sacred Calendar" of prophecy, as a divine history of four successive kingdoms which were to arise in this world of apostasy, to constitute the whole course of its government, and the grand outline which its passing ages should fill up as they proceeded. The fourth of these kingdoms should close its individual history in a series of divisions which should never again coalesce in one empire under an earthly head. "But in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; a kingdom which shall not be left to other people; but shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and shall stand forever."

Fifty years later, the same great facts in the history of the world were revealed to the same prophet under another and very different shape of illustration. In the first exhibition, the four successive kingdoms of this world were displayed as the parts of an image in human form, "whose brightness was excellent, and the form thereof was terrible." Its head of gold, its breast and arms of silver, its belly and thighs of brass, its legs of iron, and its feet part of iron and part of clay, were declared to be the illustrations and symbols of these four successive monarchies, as they should arise and manifest themselves in their appointed place, and then pass in their turn away. In the second view of the same facts, these four monarchies were represented as four wild beasts of different form and character, coming up from the stormy sea, accomplishing their designated mission upon the earth, and each, in his turn, destroying the one which had preceded him; the last one destroyed by a new and divine kingdom which should succeed to the ruler of which should be given "dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away; and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

These four monarchies were to make up the history of man's apostasy. Their succession should include the whole course of earthly government. They should succeed each other upon the same field of manifestation, each absorbing into itself all that had preceded it. They should thus succeed in connection with each other, joined as the separate but connected links of a majestic chain, and depending upon this connection for the transmission and inheritance of the power and dominion which they exercised; and these four are the kingdoms of this world, whose dominion is to be superseded and absorbed at last by the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

Four such empires of human origin, ruling in apostasy from God, and in rebellion against God, have thus, in a perfect and precise parallel with the prophecy, made up the history of the government of men. They have successively controlled the whole historic world: connected with each other; absorbing each other; transferring the people, the lands, and the dominion of earth from one dynasty to another, [illegible] succession of masters, who have, each in their turn, fulfilled their appointed course, and left the field to the appointed successor to themselves. The fourth empire, in its final divided state, still remains, comprising the present actual condition of civilized men, and waiting for the sounding of that trumpet which shall proclaim with a heavenly voice, "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." [illegible] under him. But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor." [illegible] ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

Lord, we meet our hearts to cheer
With thoughts of morning light,
Casting off our every fear,
Our sky becometh bright.
Tears of love bedew each eye,
And notes of sadness thrill,
As we look to Thee and cry,
The Master's absent still!

Ah! we see a vacant seat,
Though many throng the board;
Still our number's not complete,
For One is not restored;
And within our midst, we find
A place none else can fill;
Blessed Jesus, sad our mind,
For thou art absent still.

While we speak, and while we sing,
We miss thy charming voice;
Come, our Savior! come, our King!
And bid our hearts rejoice.
Spread thy table far and wide
Upon the better shore;
Bid the hungry, thirsty bride,
Eat and bewail no more.

We will strive with feeble might
To serve thee while we roam,
Cheer us in time's dreary night
With visions of our home.
Sigh we for that joyful day,
As bright as many suns,
When the Lord, in heaven's array,
Shall "serve" his ransomed ones.

For the Crisis.

It Hasteth!

Do we, amid the business, the pleasure, and the scheming of this degenerate age, comprehend our true position as christians? Do we know that we are now amid the scenes that are swiftly winding up the present dispensation? Do we comprehend that the kingdom of God is at HAND? Do we know that the Judge standeth before the door? Do we feel that soon we must see his face in gladness or in woe? Are we drunken with the golden cup? Do we sleep and riot as children of the night and of darkness? Are we about our business, or our pleasure, secure as the Sodomites on the morning of their overthrow? Have we settled down like the antediluvians, careless of the warning, and presuming upon the long suffering of God? Do we forget that "judgment now of a long time lingereth not, and damnation slumbereth not?"

Have we fallen from the grandeur of the christian's mission? Have we left the seeking of the lost for paltry disputations, for personal controversies, for hollow compliments, and heartless smooth speaking? Have we got so sure that God will never call us to account, that we can make compromises with error and worldliness in the spirit of mere carnal policy? Are all the old anchor-hopes of the church mere whims? Are the foundations but of sand? Do we need to return to the feeding of milk again? Must we teach again to those, who for the time ought themselves to be teachers, what be the principles of the doctrine of Christ? Must we again lay the foundation,—repentance from dead works, faith towards God, the teaching of baptisms, and of laying on of hands, and of resurrection of the dead, and eternal judgment? Must we see all these cast aside, and yet receive those that do it, and bid them God speed, no matter what doctrine they bring? Will it be profitable? Will it pay? Can we make ourselves friends in this way, and prosper in the work and sight of God? Or shall we find our schemes trampled in the dust by the footsteps of providence, and learn that God would have us open, honest, guiltless and sincere?

Do we need alarms to work virtue in us? Cannot we be christians, except when we are sure of our reward or doom at some certain day or date? Or have we principle enough to do right at whatever hazard, and leave the event with God? Can we not stand for God and the right, even though we stand alone? Can we not stand unmoved, even though mocked by foes, backbitten by hypocrites, and sneered at by lukewarm friends? Can we not endure hardness as good soldiers? Can we not rejoice in honest poverty, and even in privation and toil, for the sake of Jesus Christ? Have we forgotten the fountain of sympathy, the source of blessing? Do we know the deep love that dwells in Jesus' brother-heart? Can we not cast our care on him, and leave our foes to spit their fury to the winds? Ah! there is a hiding place for the poor and the oppressed; and when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm, then God shelters them like a protecting wall. Do we know the secret refuges where Jesus keeps his little ones? Have we learned that the name of the Lord is a strong tower, and that the righteous runneth into it and is safe? Have we ever, when pursued by the violence of foes and the strife of tongues, felt that God came forth to deliver us, and bring us in? Have we ever felt ourselves led by him through the dark labyrinths and the narrow passages, through the straight places and the dungeon-like doors, until at length he had brought us where no foe could find or harm us, and from the turrets and battlements of his strength, bade us to look forth with uplifted heads upon the impotent rage of our enemies beneath?

Do we know where our strength is? Do we know that though we are alone with God, we have more than a majority? Do we often ask ourselves the question, "Who is he that shall harm you if ye be followers of that which is GOOD? Are we sure that they that are for us are more than they that are against us? or do we need to hire or coax all the hosts of Amelek, Egypt and Babylon into our ranks, in order to strengthen our hands? Is quantity so much more important than quality? Do we know that the day is coming when numbers will not count? Do we understand that before the great white throne no policy, hypocrisy, or subterfuge can avail? Are we aware that majorities there are nothing? that sounding trumpets are there but sounding brass? that every act and word and thought must there be weighed?

"There shall sit the Judge unerring,
No just sentence then deferring."

Do we comprehend that that scene and that day are at hand? Do we hear the distant thunder which portends the coming storm? Do we mark the dire abominations that abuse and wear out the long suffering of God? Do we hear the low mutterings which herald on the earthquake's tramp? Do we know that ten thousand voices of providence and prophecy unite to cry, "The GREAT DAY of the LORD is NEAR; it is NEAR, IT HASTETH GREATLY, even the voice of the day of the Lord; the mighty man shall cry there bitterly"?

It hasteth! Are we ready for that day? It hasteth! Is our work done? It hasteth! Are our treasures and possessions safe from its fires? It hasteth! Are our lamps trimmed and burning? It hasteth! Are we doing all that we can, according to the working that worketh in us mightily, to prepare ourselves and others for its solemn grandeurs?

Men of God, awake! The day of God cometh. It hasteth. Let us be ready. Wanderer from God, the judgment storm bursts on the world, and you are far from the fold, on the dark mountains, stumbling in your way. Lost sheep, lo! in earth's dim twilight Jesus the good Shepherd goes once more to seek YOU, and bring you home. Will you come? Shall he find you? Shall he bring you home rejoicing, or will you stay till there gathers on your pathway the blackness of eternal night, and till you are lost forever? Shall heaven rejoice over your return, or shall Jesus weeping say: "How oft would I have GATHERED you, BUT YE WOULD NOT"?

Man of the world, sinner in darkness and in folly, the day of the Lord cometh! This word must be sounded in your ears. This gospel must be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations; then shall the end come. I know you not, I may never see your face. But to-day I bear you this witness. I tell you these things. The kingdom of God is at hand,—it cometh! and Christ shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and at his kingdom. I testify this fact to you. God will judge you, will judge me. Pass where you may, you have been warned. To-day I serve this summons upon you. Meet me in the presence of the Lord in peace! Meet me at the right hand of the Judge. Meet me among those who wash their robes in the blood of the Lamb. Will you meet me among the saved in that day? If not, then I bear you witness of the judgment to come, the lake of fire, the second death. May God save you ere that day, and bring us to his kingdom in peace. Amen.

The Opening of the Seventh Seal.

NUMBER SEVEN.—Concluded.

"And when he had opened the seventh seal, there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour."—Rev. 8: 1.

Nothing has thus far been said on Popery, or the little horn of Dan. 7; but all commentators agree that the fifth trumpet gives the rise of Mohammedism, or the little horn of Dan. 8; and the sixth trumpet gives the rise of the Ottoman empire, or the Turkish power, which also carried the Mohammedan religion with their armies. The Mohammedan, therefore, is one of the Gentile powers which shall tread the holy city under foot forty-two months, or 1260 years; and this is the same power of which Daniel is speaking 12: 7. "And when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished": for he had spoken of the Papacy in connection with the Roman power in the previous chapter; "and at the time of the end" of that power as a universal monarchy, verse 40, "the king of the south shall push at him":—Mohammed with his armies of Saracens or Arabians; and the king of the north, or the Turks, follow, and utterly subvert the eastern empire, which had now become one of the two horns of the Papacy. Rev. 13: 11,—"And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon." By the two horns as a lamb must be meant the eastern and western divisions of the Roman empire which were given to the Pope who ruled by authority professedly derived from Christ the Lamb. But the Revelator did not touch upon Popery, or the pale horse, until he had finished the vision of Mohammedism, or the black horse. The two witnesses prophesied in sackcloth during the reign of both these powers; "And when they shall have finished their testimony, (in sackcloth,) the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them." 11: 7. This beast has its origin in the bottomless pit from whence Mohammedism arose, 9: 1, 2, a religion utterly destitute of any foundation in truth; and hence the bottomless pit may represent the origin of any similar system, and will emphatically apply to Atheism, or Polytheism. The secular Roman empire is represented as a beast rising out of the sea, 13: 1, and Dan. 7: 2, 3; Papal Rome, as a beast coming up out of the earth, having two horns like a lamb, verse 11; and as a little horn coming up among the ten, Dan. 7: 8, in which was a mouth speaking great things. To the secular Roman beast was given a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies, verse 5, in addition to the mouth as of a lion which the beast previously had, verse 2. This additional mouth, I think, was Popery engrafted into the secular Roman empire; and hence the forty-two months of his continuance, or making war (margin), refer to the Papacy, which, conjointly with Mohammedism tread the holy city under foot, it being sometimes under the dominion of one, sometimes under the other; these two being rival powers striving for the mastery of Jerusalem and the holy land, as the long and bloody Crusades will testify.

When secular Rome constituted the Pope "universal bishop," over both its eastern and western divisions, he, or Popery, became a beast coming up out of the Roman earth, having two horns like a lamb. Some have supposed the two horns to represent both his civil and ecclesiastical power; but both horns were like a lamb, and therefore cannot represent different things: but they may represent two divisions of the same government, just as the ten horns represent ten divisions of the Roman government, or rule over so many States or kingdoms. Rev. 17: 12, 18. This beast of Rev. 17, I think, is the old Roman polytheistical beast revived under the name of Atheism; for the belief in a plurality of gods is equivalent to a belief in no God. Both originate in a bottomless pit. "The beast that thou sawest, was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition," verse 8. This is the same beast that kills the two witnesses. This vision represents the "judgment," not the reign of the woman, "MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT," verses 1–5. The ten horns of this beast are not her supporters, but her destroyers, verse 16. Hence this vision represents scenes which have transpired, and are now passing before our eyes. Spiritualism is but a more refined term for Atheism, and multitudes are being drawn into its awful vortex. To deny the Word of God, is virtually to deny the being of a God. Any religious system not founded upon the Word, has its origin in the bottomless pit, and must go into perdition.

No civil government on earth has the Word of God for its basis. All are maintained by the sword; and "he that killeth with the sword, must be killed with the sword. Here is the patience and the faith of the saints."—Rev. 13: 10. The kingdom of the saints is here contrasted with the kingdoms of this world which kill with the sword. If they also kill with the sword, then they must in like manner be killed with the sword, and hence their kingdom perish. The two witnesses cannot mean the saints, or the true church, as many suppose; for the united body of believers is always spoken of as a unit. "For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office; so we, being many, are one body in Christ." Rom. 12: 4, 5. "For by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one Spirit."—1 Cor. 12: 13. Hence the two witnesses cannot mean the Jewish church, and the church gathered from the Gentiles under the Christian dispensation. "For he is our peace, who hath made both one, and hath broken down the middle wall of partition . . for to make in himself of twain one new man, so making peace."—Eph. 2: 14, 15. "Neither pray I for these alone; but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." John 17: 20, 21. This is sufficient to establish the unity of believers, and hence they cannot be represented as two witnesses. Again, "If any man will hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies: and if any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed. These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy (in sackcloth—the famine foretold by Amos 8: 11–13): and have power over waters to turn them to blood, and to smite the earth with all plagues as often as they will."—Rev. 11: 5, 6. Such power the Christian church has never had. Indeed they were expressly forbidden to exercise such power, had it been given them. Luke 9: 54, 55,—"Lord, wilt thou that we command fire to come down from heaven, and consume them even as Elias did? But he turned and rebuked them, and said, Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of. For the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them."

Having thus proved from the Word of God who the two witnesses are not, I will now endeavor to prove from the same Word who they are. My witness is one who testifies for me against my adversary. Christ said to the unbelieving Jews, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me."—John 5: 39. These were the Jewish scriptures which testified for Christ against the unbelief of that nation, in which Christ says in the previous verses, "The Father himself hath borne witness of me, and ye have not his word abiding in you." "When Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finished, . . [he] commanded the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, saying, Take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, that it may be there for a witness against thee." Deut. 31: 24–26. Compare this with Rev. 11: 19, which follows the ascension of the witnesses. "And the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament," or covenant; evidently referring to the ark in which the book of the law was deposited. This seems to explain that the book of the law was a witness against the unbelieving Jews. Christ, foretelling the end of all nations, says, "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto, [or against,] all nations; and then shall the end come."—Matt. 24: 14. The gospel would soon have ceased to be preached had it not been written; hence the written gospel is the witness against all nations to whom it is sent, as the book of the law was against the Jews to whom it was given. Compare Rev. 11: 5,—"If any man will hurt them, he must in this manner be killed," with what Christ says of his own written book of Revelation, 22: 18, 19,—"For I testify unto every man that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book, If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book. And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life (or from the tree of life, margin), and out of the holy city, and from the things that are written in this book." What is here said of the book of Revelation is doubtless true of all scripture which is given by inspiration; and hence if any man will hurt them, the Scriptures, by adding to or taking from them, he must be killed in the manner described at the close of this holy book.

Thus I have endeavored to prove, from the Word alone, that the Law and the Gospel are the two witnesses. They are killed after the sounding of the sixth trumpet, and before the sounding of the seventh. Nothing in the history of the past with which I am acquainted seems to be so exact a fulfillment of the prediction as the destruction of the Bible by infidel France during the short reign of Atheism. Says the historian, "In 1793, the decree passed the French Assembly suppressing the Bible. Just three years after, a resolution was introduced into the Assembly, going to supersede the decree, and giving toleration to the Scriptures. That resolution lay on the table six months, when it was taken up, and passed without a dissenting vote." Thus in just three years and a half, corresponding to the "three days and a half," after the witnesses were killed by the decree under which the Bibles were gathered and burned, they again stood upon their feet; and their extensive circulation since in nearly all languages, and the high estimation in which they are held by the Lord's believing people, explains the figure, "And they ascended up to heaven in a cloud."

In this exposition of the seven seals, I have attached more importance to them than has commonly been done by writers upon the Bible. In the examination of Scripture testimony, my own mind has been enlightened; and if the result shall be the same to my readers, then I have not labored in vain.

"All is Well."

"While o'er life's wide and darkling plain,
Unheeding as we roam,
Through many a path of joy and pain
God leads his children home;
And though sometimes, while in prospect viewed,
The winding way seems dark and rude,
Ah! who the backward scene hath scanned,
But blessed the Father's guiding hand."

The Coming Kingdom.

"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever."—REV. 11: 15.

This is a great event—no less than the final triumph of Christ; the end of the kingdoms of this world, and the introduction of the glorious kingdom of the Savior; the overturning of the power and the dominion of human apostasy, and the transfer of the royalty and the diadem of the earth to Him whose right it is to reign, and of whose dominion there shall be no end.

The relations of this great event to the future destiny of man, and to all our present efforts to spread throughout the world the knowledge of the gospel by which he is to be saved, are immediately apparent. To a consideration of some great facts and principles connected with it, I shall devote the present address:

1. The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. They are not so now. They are not only not identical, they are completely separate and opposed. They have no other relations than those which are possible between opposing elements commingling upon the same area of manifestation; occasionally, severally conquering, and severally overcome; and awaiting, in this changing process of development, the final adjudication of their contest, and the conclusive settlement of the victory.

The governments or kingdoms of this world are but the organized dominion of human apostasy from God. They have ruled under the four distinct aspects of Paganism, Mohammedanism, Popery, and Infidelity; but always in opposition to our Lord and his Christ. The will and the word of God have never yet been adopted by men as the rule of earthly authority. Noah looked upon the world as corrupt before God. Abraham, Moses, and Daniel beheld it, in their successive ages, as still wholly apostate. Seven hundred years after the last of these, St. John declared it was everywhere still lying in the wicked one. Eighteen hundred years later, we survey a field vastly more extended, but maintaining the same universal characteristics; and we are, in our turn, compelled to proclaim that the governments of this world are still everywhere apostate from God and his Christ.

His word is, indeed, more or less tolerated as the possession of individuals, as his providence restrains and overrules the hostility of men. His glorious revelation of redeeming love, so dear and precious to the hearts of his chosen people, is suffered in more or less public profession; is sometimes, indeed, protected, in its civil aspect as the chosen and valued property and right of individual men. But not one nation, as a nation, professes to reverence the authority of the Lord of hosts. And one or another of the shapes of human apostasy already mentioned, is everywhere still the garb and symbol, the rule and type of the government of men.

We easily trace the origin and course of human apostasy, as God has himself described it to us. Its combination of individuals, its organization as a combination, make up a painful part of the historic record of the Scripture. Near three thousand years before the Savior's coming, was the first earthly kingdom established. Three other great empires have since succeeded it, occupying the same theatre, ruling on the same field, and marked by the same characteristics. The rebellion against God which organized its dominion on the plain of Shinar, has filled the veins of human ambition, stimulated the lusts of human conquest, and sounded the triumphant shout, "We are the people;" "who is Jehovah, that we should serve him?" in every succeeding generation, and on every successively cultivated soil, to our day. Britain and America, as nations, no more really adopt the Divine authority as the rule of Government, than did Babylon or Persia. The production of God's revealed word as the rule to be adopted for the government of men; the reverent assertion that his law should be the only line of human dominion; the position assumed that human society should be organized and governed for the purpose of spreading his truth, and giving knowledge of his salvation, was far less scorned when Jonah proclaimed its principle in Nineveh, or when Daniel announced its authority in Babylon, than it would be now in the Parliament of Great Britain, or in the Congress of the U. S.

The apostasy of man then ruled upon the plea of open idolatry, with all its earnestness, if with all its crimes. The same apostasy now rules on the more offensive and scornful ground of absolute infidelity, professedly ignoring all religions; conceding that one God, or a hundred gods, must be acknowledged and protected alike, if men shall so please; avowing that the present world is its whole lawful object, and human government has no end beyond the protection of man while he is in it, and in the enjoyment of the material benefits which it presents. Thus God, in his authority, is banished from his own earth, and the kingdoms of this world are, in their absolute profession, not the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ.

From the midst of this apostasy of man, God selected a line of grace, a family for himself, a people over whom he would rule, and by whom he would have his authority acknowledged and his name glorified. We may trace this line of grace from Adam downwards. Like a silver stream meandering in stillness through the plains of earth, often concealed by the showy verdure along its banks, and yet marked by the very verdure which itself has created, it springs even from the gate of a Paradise lost, where cherubim were stationed, the symbol of a reconciled and reconciling God. It wanders, and grows as it wanders. Yet in all the early ages of its course, this fifth stream, if I may call it so, seems comparatively small, when contrasted with the four heads of human rebellion, into which the river of original Eden has been divided. Countless millions make up the apostasy from God. The Savior's flock is still a little one in the earth. This selected demonstration of the Divine government among men is clearly marked as we come down to Noah, to Abraham, to Moses, to the time of the Savior's advent in the flesh. Its subjects are the sons of God, the people of God, the election of grace, the Church, the assembly of the living God. To them the promises were given, the revelations were made, the prophecies were uttered. And among them, in its various appointed methods of manifestation, the Divine presence was established and maintained. They were God's property, and God's people, in the midst of an unbelieving world. From Jacob's time, this line of grace was in his family peculiarly, perhaps alone. Whatever there was of true religion, of the knowledge of God, on the earth, was found among them. As a nation, they were organized professedly on Divine authority. Every nation outside of Israel was but a part of the organized apostasy from God. And though all Israel were not of the true Israel, yet among them was the covenant of God, the adoption of his children, the giving of his promises, and the remnant according to the election of grace. In the very organizing of Israel as a people, God had said to them, "If ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure to me above all people; . . . and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and a holy nation." They were constituted the kingdom of one Lord and of his Christ, abiding for centuries in the earth—a visible kingdom, a manifest kingdom, separate from the kingdoms of this world, and opposed to them in all the principles of their organization, and in the source and the whole arrangement of the authority by which they were governed. They stood in the earth, the witness for God—they only chosen from all the nations of the earth, to know his will, and to receive his law. The Lord their God was their King.

II. Thus have we the two subjective parts of the great contrast before us, and we may trace their separate but parallel course.

"The kingdoms of this world," in the triumphant annunciation of the Apocalypse before us, is a technical expression. It describes the actual dynasties of human government, the powers of the present world; but it describes them in a special relation to previous Scriptural testimony. It is the proclamation of the actual fulfillment of a divine prediction long before recorded for the encouragement and hope of the church of God. The prophet Daniel was appointed to record this complete history of the governments of this outer world, in the seventh century before the Savior's advent. He interpreted the great symbol of the metalic image, which Mede calls "the Great Almanac," and Faber "the Sacred Calendar" of prophecy, as a divine history of four successive kingdoms which were to arise in this world of apostasy, to constitute the whole course of its government, and the grand outline which its passing ages should fill up as they proceeded. The fourth of these kingdoms should close its individual history in a series of divisions which should never again coalesce in one empire under an earthly head. "But in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed; a kingdom which shall not be left to other people; but shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and shall stand forever."

Fifty years later, the same great facts in the history of the world were revealed to the same prophet under another and very different shape of illustration. In the first exhibition, the four successive kingdoms of this world were displayed as the parts of an image in human form, "whose brightness was excellent, and the form thereof was terrible." Its head of gold, its breast and arms of silver, its belly and thighs of brass, its legs of iron, and its feet part of iron and part of clay, were declared to be the illustrations and symbols of these four successive monarchies, as they should arise and manifest themselves in their appointed place, and then pass in their turn away. In the second view of the same facts, these four monarchies were represented as four wild beasts of different form and character, coming up from the stormy sea, accomplishing their designated mission upon the earth, and each, in his turn, destroying the one which had preceded him; the last one destroyed by a new and divine kingdom which should succeed to the ruler of which should be given "dominion and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away; and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."

These four monarchies were to make up the history of man's apostasy. Their succession should include the whole course of earthly government. They should succeed each other upon the same field of manifestation, each absorbing into itself all that had preceded it. They should thus succeed in connection with each other, joined as the separate but connected links of a majestic chain, and depending upon this connection for the transmission and inheritance of the power and dominion which they exercised; and these four are the kingdoms of this world, whose dominion is to be superseded and absorbed at last by the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

Four such empires of human origin, ruling in apostasy from God, and in rebellion against God, have thus, in a perfect and precise parallel with the prophecy, made up the history of the government of men. They have successively controlled the whole historic world; connected with each other; absorbing each other; transferring the people, the lands, and the dominion of earth from one dynasty to another, in a succession of masters, who have, each in their turn, fulfilled their appointed course, and left the field to the appointed [illegible] to themselves. The fourth empire, in its final divided state, still remains, comprising the present actual condition of civilized men, and waiting for the sounding of that trumpet which shall proclaim with a heavenly voice, "the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." "We see not yet all things put under him. But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels, for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honor." And we wait, until, having received his kingdom, he shall return to reign for ever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

Sixteen hundred years before the [illegible]

of Daniel, the first great empire of man's apostasy arose, which culminated as the "head of gold" in Nebuchadnezzar. During Daniel's life, Cyrus overthrew this first kingdom, and established the second, the Persian, "the breast of silver," in its place. Within three hundred years afterwards, Alexander took the city of Babylon, overthrew the Persian empire, and set up the Grecian, "the thighs of brass," over the same nations, and upon the same field. In three hundred years more, Augustus established, as "the legs of iron," the empire of Rome, which grasped within its bounds all the territories and all the nations that had known and yielded to the previous dominions. These have made the four kingdoms of this world. A fifth, to reconstruct and combine again the divided elements of the last, and eventually set up a universal earthly throne, has been the bait of ambition to many of the mighty ones of earth since. But there the completed record still remains, and the fifth monarchy is yet to be revealed.

This appointed succession made up the prophetic almanac of Scripture, and this succession human testimony has remarkably confirmed. The famous astronomer Ptolemy, who lived one hundred and forty years after Christ, seven hundred and forty-five years after Daniel, constructed a chronology of the reigns before his time; and his continuous arrangement is the same as Daniel's. He describes a succession of four great monarchies as reigning over the same empire, making the Persian Cyrus the immediate successor of Belshazzar, the Grecian Alexander the successor of Darius, the Roman Augustus the successor of Cleopatra, as in the same line, and in a continuous dominion, with no reference to their previous government in their separate States. It is an unbroken line from Nebuchadnezzar to Augustus Cæsar. This, Daniel said, should be the fact of human history. This, Ptolemy says, had been the fact, as recorded in his day. The prophet and the astronomer combine to give the history of an unbroken imperial rule under four successive dynasties, as the history of the government of man.

"Prove all things."

"And the foolish said unto the wise, Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out."—Matt. 25 : 8.

We have, from the pen of the Apostle, that "Scripture is given by inspiration of God."—2 Tim. 3 : 16. David says, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path."—Ps. 119 : 105. Now if the Word is the lamp, and the light it now gives was first produced by the Holy Spirit, is it not the Holy Spirit that must feed it and keep it burning? Then those virgins that lacked oil are those that once had the Spirit of the Lord, but have grieved it away by their unbelief, or by some other means, and when it is all too late, seek to regain it. Now God has declared that "according to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt will I show marvellous things."—Micah 7 : 14. How was it there? Did not the magicians' rods imitate those miracles done by Aaron's rod, by turning into blood the waters, and by producing frogs, flies, lice, etc.? What was the effect? Did it not harden the heart of Pharaoh, by causing him to disbelieve that God had spoken to Moses; because these same things could be done by others? Exodus 7. Has the enemy lost any of his subtlety in these last days? And when God is clothing his chosen ones with the spirit and power of Elijah, shall we look for the enemy in the background? Will he not accomplish strange things in imitation of the "diversities of operations" of the Spirit of God, causing many to stumble? Dear Bros. and Srs., I beseech of you, do not attribute to Beelzebub those things which are done by the power of God. You certainly have a right to "prove all things," and to cast away all that is not in harmony with the inspired Word; but in so doing be careful that roots of bitterness do not spring up and push you off the track, by causing you to class all these things together, rejecting the whole, and you finally be found, with lamps to be sure, but no oil, when the Bridegroom comes.

Diary Notes.

Thursday, April 3d, we commenced meeting in Plainville, Ct. This is a pleasant village, situated at the junction of the Providence and Fishkill R. R. with the one from New Haven to Northampton. Another R. R. leads from P. to Collinsville. For a few years, Bro. and Sr. Geo. Morgan have resided in this place, and have kept a light burning to cheer the pilgrims who who might pass that way on their journey to the better land. Recently, the Lord has been doing a good work in P., and Bro. Morgan has now several noble souls to sympathize with him, who have just embraced the blessed hope of the gospel. We have rarely seen a company of christians who were in a better condition than those in Plainville. Several of them have been members of other churches. The change produced in their feelings when they saw and embraced the new light from the Bible, was nearly equal to the one at their conversion.

Like others who have their eyes opened to see the "blessed hope," they wonder how they could have been so blinded as not to have seen it before. They feel like prisoners let out of a dark dungeon, and are now rejoicing in the light, resolved, in the strength of the Lord, to be imprisoned no more in the darkness and gloom caused by believing the theological fables of these last days.

Our meetings increased in interest to their close, on April 6th, when two more were buried with Christ in baptism. In the evening of the Lord's day, we had an interesting time in commemorating the sufferings and death of our Savior, while surrounding the table of the Lord. We have since heard from them, and learn that new ones are becoming interested and taking a part in the meetings, and that all are pressing forward for the prize at the end of the christian race.

Tuesday evening, April 8th, we had a meeting in West Winsted, where we formerly lived. There is a good company in this place, who are determined, by the help of the Lord, to be heirs of the coming kingdom. Their hearts are fixed; they have counted the cost, and are willing to pay the price.

Wednesday evening, 9th, we commenced meetings in Bristol Ct., and continued till the 16th. The company of christian pilgrims in this place, who love the appearing of Jesus, has been greatly reduced by removals and death since we were here in 1857; but there is a goodly number of faithful ones left, who stand firmly for the right, and are shining lights in the vineyard of the Lord.

Lord's day, 13th, several came in from other towns, and we had a heavenly season in our love-feast, and other exercises of the day. Some of those who have been long in the service of the Lord, remarked that they had not been in so good a meeting for years. The Spirit of the Lord was truly with us to administer sweet comfort to the weary saints, who have been warring against the wiles of Satan. The day will be remembered with delight by those who shared in its holy joys.

While in B., we called on Bro. Ralph Williams, who is very feeble. His friends, as well as himself, entertain strong fears that he may never be any better. It has been some time since he has been able to preach, and he is now confined to his house, and suffering much pain.

On our return home, we spent Lord's day, April 20th, at Danielsonville, where we found the church in a healthy state, but mourning over the departure of our dear brother H. F. Carpenter, who has just moved to Poultney, Vt., to be the pastor of the church in that place. The consistent christian life of Bro. C. and his sound preaching, have produced very happy results in D. Many can thank the Lord he ever came there, and are resolved to meet him in the coming kingdom.

Bro. D. A. Jones, a skillful dentist, who formerly resided here, has returned again to make a home in D. For the last year he has been traveling as evangelist in Maine, where his labors have been highly appreciated and blessed; but on account of sickness in his family, he felt it duty to return to Ct., where we trust he will continue to sound an alarm to a sinful world. He is a faithful and consistent christian. It was through his influence that meetings were first held in this place.

In compliance with the request of many friends in D. and vicinity, he intends to devote a portion of his spare time to the dental profession. Those who wish good work of this kind will do well to give him a call.

YOUR NAME.—What of it? Please put it at the end of your articles. Let the people see one paper in which all the writers have the moral courage to sign their full names. It will add new interest to our paper.—C.

To Sister J. N.

DEAR SISTER:—In compliance with your request for "a few words of advice and consolation through the Crisis," we would say, that anything we can do to assist you in securing eternal life will be performed most cheerfully. You say your "mind has been shrouded in darkness for months. I am filled with fear and horrible forebodings, and tempted on every side." You also remark that your "heart's desire and daily prayer to God is, that he would cleanse you from all unrighteousness."

The first thing we would advise is to look over the past, and ask the Lord to show you where you have done wrong; and if you discover any unholy deeds, or where you was actuated by wrong motives, or manifested wrong feelings towards any one, confess and forsake them at once, and then look to the Lord for pardon, who will delight to forgive. Instead of asking him to "cleanse you from all unrighteousness," as the first work, remember we must "confess our sins" and forsake them, before we can be forgiven. The apostle says:—"Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord."—1 Cor. 7 : 1. Again, James says:—"Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded." Instead of waiting for the Lord to humble us, as he did Pharaoh, and the Jews, the apostle says:—"Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up."—James 4 : 8. 10. Again:—"Every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure."—1 John 3 : 3. These scriptures show that it is our work to reform, and then the Lord will forgive.

Dear Sister, it may be you have been impatient, or allowed a feeling of "variance" towards some one; or, on the contrary, have been indulging in light and trifling conversation, or spending your spare moments in reading novels, and thus neglected the Bible; or indulged in evil imaginations, which are an "abomination" in the sight of the Lord; or, you may have spoken evil of some one, and thus grieved the Spirit of the Lord. Make a thorough examination of the past, asking the Lord to show you what you have done, said, or thought, that was not right; and when he shows it to you, as he most certainly will if you come to him in sincerity, confess and forsake it at once, and pardon is sure.

But suppose you do not see any thing that you have done that is particularly wrong; then look again, and see if you have not neglected some duty. Many get into darkness in consequence of not doing any thing in the vineyard of the Lord. It is only the working class that are approved of God. We mistrust that your difficulty lies in this direction; if so, improve the first opportunity to do something for Jesus, by visiting the poor, the sick, and exhorting the careless to reform; and be assured you will be comforted, and the bright witness will return. When we cease laboring for the Lord, we wither like branches cut off from trees. We are living in times when every christian should be very actively engaged in efforts to arouse a sleeping world and church, exhorting them to prepare for the coming of Christ.

Dear Sister, if you will enter into this work according to your ability, God will bless you most gloriously, and fill you with peace and joy that passeth all understanding. This day give up all to Jesus for ever, and then he is yours and you are his eternally. Do not hesitate. Let it be done now. Will you consent? If so, Jesus will embrace you most affectionately, and angels will rejoice at the sight.—C.

DRYING UP.—The affairs of Pope Pius IX. are in a sad condition, and continually growing worse, with no prospect that they will ever be any better. The future must look dark to him. The streams of prosperity are "drying up" that once flowed so freely into Rome. Perhaps we may more properly say they are already dried up. The following item shows which way the wind blows:—C.

"It is said that the Pope's government is destroying a great mass of secret documents. Imagine the interesting materials which will be lost, and consider what such a transaction indicates. Careful old ladies clean up before moving."

The War.

April 12th, 1861, Fort Sumter was attacked by the Southern Confederation, which opened the active warfare. The year since then has been a bloody one for our nation, but the coming one bids fair to be much more so. It is evident that the South had but a faint idea of what was before them, having formed a very erroneous idea of the strength of the North. The war spirit is now so high that there is no hope of any compromise. "Liberty or death" is the watchword on both sides. The struggle is one of terrible aspects and consequences to our entire country.

The following is an extract from a private letter, dated Macon City, Mo., April 5th, and shows the state of feeling in that section:—C.

"The traitors have already recommenced their atrocities upon Union men. They are shooting them down on all sides. Six were shot up near Edina last week. I was acquainted with some of them. One was a school-fellow named Norcross, and your city was his native place. He was one of the finest men Knox county could produce. Not only at Edina, but in all sections of the country the traitors are committing the same inhuman deeds. There is certainly something wrong with the Government, for we can do nothing with the traitors. Our officers allow us only to take prisoners and bring them to headquarters, where they take the oath of allegiance and are let go again. That only makes things worse, for they go home and act worse than before we took them. My motto is, shoot them down where they are found. The Union men of this country will take the thing into their own hands before long, and then will commence the war of extermination. From present appearances, I think the secesh programme will be to raise an insurrection on some certain night, and kill all they can lay their hands on before the troops can interfere."

"Prepare War."

There has been no period in the world's history when there were such great preparations for war among all nations as at the present time; and still the work is increasing, with no prospect of abatement or peace. It is evident that the worst is yet to come. When the war clouds begin to pour down their fury on the Old World, we may expect to understand what is meant by angry nations. By exerting every nerve, they will only be prepared for the terrible onset; and even then, they will need to adopt the proclamation of Gov. Shorter, of Alabama, issued March 1st, 1862, in which he says:—C.

"Let every man do something towards arming our troops, if he cannot go to the battle field. Turn your shops into laboratories for the manufacture of arms and munitions of war. Send me thousands of shot guns and rifles, bowie knives and pikes . . . Let the entire resources and energies of the people be devoted to the one great purpose of war—war, stern and unrelenting—war to the knife."

A VALUABLE WORK.—Dr. Andrew Stone, of the Troy Lung and Hygienic Institute, has issued a tract showing the cause of the premature decay of American youth, which ought to be in the hands of every young person in America. Every parent should see that their children have a copy of this work. Price five cents, postage one cent. For sale at the Crisis office, and by Dr. A. Stone, 96 Fifth street, Troy, N. Y. When you order it, you call it "Dr. Stone's work."—C.

ATLANTIC TELEGRAPH.—There is a strong probability that the eastern and western continents will soon be connected by telegraphic wires. The English and Americans have been negotiating together on the subject, and it is said they have come to satisfactory conclusions, and intend to carry the matter to a successful termination.—C.

Our "Slanderous" Statement Corrected.

In our notice of the late conference of Second Adventists in this city, we remarked, "Eld. Storrs preached on his peculiar views concerning the wicked dead, who, with their offspring, he thinks will not be included in the resurrection." All this was made in good faith; but what was our surprise upon learning that our statement concerning the infants of unbelievers was a "slanderous statement,"—"an unjustifiable attempt to heap reproach" on a venerable minister of the gospel.

Had these charges come from some "violent priestly" bigot, we should have deemed them worthy of no more than the briefest correction. But coming from one for whom personally we never had any other than the most profound feeling of respect, we feel it our pleasure to give this full notice of the facts, as well as to say to our readers that our statement was evidently a mistaken one. We are now told that at the time referred to, Eld. Storrs informed the congregation that, "As an opinion he held that the children of believers would share with their parents in the future life and glory. As to the children of unbelievers, he expressed no opinion, but left them to the disposal of the wisdom of God."

But a word to our readers as an apology for what on our part was so gross a mistake; and as an assurance to all that it is no part of our policy to either "heap reproach on" or "slander" anybody.

1st. We were not present when the aforesaid "opinion" was expressed; but received some account of it from honest brethren, who evidently considered the "opinion" to be stated in such form, that (unjustifiably of course) they took it for granted Eld. S. did not believe the infants of unbelievers would be raised from the dead, and so reported it to us.

2nd. We have been made quite sensible, both by report and letter, of the effort of some holding Eld. S.'s general views, to prove from the Scriptures that the deceased infants of believing parents would have part in "the future life." Claiming to be pre-eminently "a Bible people," we supposed we were justified in understanding them to believe that the offspring of the wicked would not be included in the resurrection, inasmuch as it is claimed by these preachers that there is no Scripture supporting such a faith.

3d. But more than all this, our idea of it might be inferred from the statement made in the Bible Examiner in regard to this point some years since by Eld. S., while referring to a writer who denied the resurrection of the wicked. At all events, we never dreamed, and do not yet believe, the author intended "an unjustifiable attempt to heap reproach" or "slander" on his opponent. We quote verbatim et literatim.

Elder Storrs says:—

"We have no intention of spending our time for a year and a half in discussing so fruitless a topic, and one which we are clearly satisfied is opposed both to the spirit and the letter of the Bible. If any man can give us as plain a text that men are immortal by creation as we have that—'ALL that are in the gravesSHALL COME FORTH,they that have done goodAND they that have DONE EVIL,' then we will confess our error in ever having preached or printed the 'Six Sermons.' Here we leave the topic of the non-resurrection of wicked men, and little children; for, the theory we oppose denies the resurrection of infants, except POSSIBLY the infants of believers. According to it, there is a bare possibility—nothing more—that our sleeping children 'shall come again from the land of the enemy;' and it is quite uncertain whether, to them, Jesus is 'the resurrection and the life.'

The method of interpreting scripture on which this theory depends unsettles all faith in the Bible, and saps the foundation of Christianity. Prophetic scripture is made, by it, to speak of events past at the time. Because the Prophets speak as if God had already done what he will finally do, it is inferred there shall be no resurrection of the wicked. For example, the Psalmist says—'Thou hast destroyed all them that go astray from thee'—W. says, 'there is no intimation of a resurrection for the characters are utterly consumed and destroyed.'

The question here all turns on time. When are 'all that go astray destroyed?' If he is correct in his theory, David lived in a happy time; all the wicked had been destroyed—not one was then left; for David says—'Thou HAST' done it;—not, thou wilt do it. Thus the truth of God is turned into a fable, and christianity is a falsehood. Do you ask how so? We answer—Several centuries before the birth of Jesus of Nazareth, Isaiah said, 'Unto us a child is born the government shall be upon his shoulder,' &c. Now, says the Jew, 'It is plain the Messiah was born long before Jesus of Nazareth; Jesus cannot therefore be the Messiah of God.' Again, the same prophet said of Messiah, seven hundred years before the birth of Jesus, 'He is despised we DID esteem him smitten of Godwith his stripes we ARE healedthe Lord HATH LAID on him the iniquity of us allhe WAS oppressed,' &c. Hence, it is as plain a matter of fact, to a Jew, that Jesus cannot be the Messiah, as it is to the author of 'Anastasis' that the wicked will have no resurrection from such texts as that in which David said—'Thou hast destroyed all them that go astray from thee.' And we think the argument of the Jew is as well founded and as forcible as that of him who contends there is no resurrection of the wicked because their future and final destruction is spoken of as already past. To us it seems clear that 'blindness in part has happened to' the authors of such interpretations. 'God calls things that be not as though they were' on account of the certainty of the accomplishment of his purposes; thus he said—'I have made thee a father of many nations,' when as yet he had no child. This principle understood and applied subverts all the fine spun theory of no-resurrection of the wicked, and shows that what is spoken on the subject of their being destroyed, and not rising, in the various texts relied upon, to support the Pharisaic doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked, relate to their final destruction after the 'judgment of the great day,' unto which the wicked are 'RESERVED;' when, as Job says—'The wicked SHALL BE BROUGHT FORTH to the day of wrath;' and he affirms, they are 'RESERVED unto THE DAY OF DESTRUCTION;' Job 21 : 30; and Jesus Christ says, they 'shall come forth from the graves' to condemnation or 'damnation;' after which, the testimony of John the apostle is, they shall be 'cast into the lake of fire;' surely that is 'the day of destruction.' Let men beware of deluding their souls with the vain fancy that they will lie in their graves in a state of insensibility to the judgment and the awful execution of the sentence that is to follow: vain hope: strong delusion.

We have called the doctrine of the non-resurrection of the wicked 'a Pharasaic doctrine.' Our authority for this assertion is Josephus and the 'Cyclopedia of Biblical Literature, by John Kitto, D. D., F. S. A.,' an English work of great research. The Pharisees maintained that those who had 'lived virtuously,' and they 'ONLY, have power to revive and live again.' This fact is worthy of serious attention, as the advocates of the non-resurrection of the wicked, who have recently come up, try hard not only to destroy the force of Christ's words, John 5 : 28, 29, but to make Paul's words, Acts 24 : 14, to mean, only, that the Pharisees allowed there would be a resurrection of the just and unjust, while the apostle did not. The truth is, the Pharisees 'allowed' there would 'be a resurrection of the dead,' but denied that it embraced the 'unjust.' Paul affirms his expectation—for that is all the Greek word elpida, translated hope in this text, necessarily means—'that there shall be a resurrection of the dead BOTH of the just AND of the unjust;' thus agreeing with the testimony of Jesus, that 'all in the graves shall come forth—good and evil;' and the 'two witnesses' strike down the Pharisaic doctrine of the just only being raised from the dead.

We have said much more than we intended when we commenced this notice; and we have done so, that all might understand that we have no fear to meet all that can be said however subtle the argument may be managed. A Jew called on us, not long since, to prove to us from the scriptures that it was impossible that Jesus could be the Messiah; and his argument was full as strong as the argument by which it is attempted to establish a limited resurrection; and, as we have before remarked, they both have one principle in interpreting the scriptures."—Bible Examiner, Vol. V, pp. 43-44.

But our readers will pardon us for occupying so much space in correcting our former blunder. We are assured Elder S. will accept our disavowal of intention to slander him, and we shall not refer to the subject again; judging from the spirit of some, we already suspect it has the controversial upas within it. Our policy has been a peaceful one; and judging from our constantly increasing subscription list, we have yet to learn that it is not acceptable to our general readers.—M.

"THRILLING AND INSTRUCTIVE DEVELOPMENTS. An experience of fifteen years as Roman Catholic clergyman and priest. By M. B. Czechowski, Minister of the Gospel. 'Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter.' Isa. 5 : 20. Boston: Edited by John F. Cotton, and published for the Author. 1862." Price $1.00, postage paid.

This is a duodecimo volume of 286 pages, got up in Rand & Avery's best style. From a hasty perusal of the work, we fully believe it is what it purports to be—"thrilling and instructive." A work better calculated to throw light on the present character and inner life of the Romish world than any work of its size we have ever seen. This, together with the evident sincerity and christian character of its author, we doubt not will insure it large sales and a general reading. To be had of the author, or of J. F. Cotton, Box 1079, Boston.—M.

ELDER J. V. HIMES called upon us Tuesday morning, on his return from Western New York and Canada West, where he has been on a lecturing tour. We are glad to see him in such good health and spirits. He informs us that he has not had a sick day since he left "Our Home" in Dansville last August, notwithstanding he has labored more abundantly than in former times. He has had a prosperous tour, and seen many conversions, and also the waking up of large numbers of professors anew to the Advent faith and hope. He will preach in the Advent Chapel in Hudson Street a few Sabbaths, and on week day evenings in the vicinity, where invited.—M.

Biographical Sketches.—No. 4.

REV. JOHN CUMMING, D.D., F.R.S.E.

"The preacher is of the middle heighth, perhaps rather above it; but, attired as he is in clerical robes, one is apt to be deceived in such a matter, which, after all, is not of any great importance, if we agree with Dr. Watts, that the 'mind is the standard of the man.' Dr. Cumming's face is a remarkably fine one. A glance at it might convince any ordinary observer that it belongs to one whose mind is not of the common stamp. Look at that high, broad forehead, across which dark, very dark hair sweeps, revealing the ample temples, and behind that barrier of bone you will feel assured is a brain of uncommon capacity. We are no great believers in the speculations of phrenology, and regard, without exception, those wiseacres who parcel out the brain-field as they would a potato-patch, as sumphs; but we know that in a well-formed and capacious cranium may generally be found the true mental coin, which rings as well as shines. Such a head has Dr. Cumming, and sterling is the golden store which is coined in the cerebral mint. Two eyebrows, large, well-arched and black, overshadow a pair of dark eyes, of a serious and fearless expression. The nose is slightly aquiline, but not large, and on it perpetually rests a pair of spectacles, from which we may infer that much study has somewhat impaired his visual organs, however much it may have sharpened his critical perceptions. Some one has said, and I think with truth, that the mouth is a far more expressive feature than the eyes. In Dr. Cumming's case such is the fact: the upper lip is thin, but well shaped, the lower one somewhat fuller than its fellow. This feature is very expressive; at times a half-smile plays upon and around it, but it generally has a tinge of melancholy about it, and in repose it is indicative of deep thought. The complexion of the countenance is dark, and large black whiskers form the lateral boundaries of the face. Such is the personal appearance, so far as we can convey an idea of it, of the celebrated pastor of the Crown-court Scotch Church.

Opening a little Bible which he holds with both hands, Dr. Cumming commences his discourse by reading from it his text. Very clear and musical is his voice. Although by no means loud, it can be heard with the utmost distinctness in the most distant part of the church, and consequently, as there is no shuffling and leaning forward to catch the sounds, the most perfect stillness reigns. Without a single preliminary 'hem,' or a moment's pause for the purpose of collecting his ideas, he at once commences the elucidation of his theme; and before he has uttered half a dozen sentences it is evident enough that all his matter has been carefully arranged beforehand. There is not the slightest hesitation; his words and ideas flow like a clear, continuous stream, and they are as transparent too. The eloquence of some ministers resembles the course of a mountain torrent; now with difficulty threading narrow ravines; now expanding in a calm, lake-like expanse, reflecting the loveliness of the skies; anon rushing and roaring over precipices and rocky barriers; and then dancing in sunlight through verdurous glades, and mossy-winding ways. Such orators startle by similes, attract by antitheses, and charm by variety. Not such is the character of Dr. Cumming's oratory. From the moment he commences his discourse, until the concluding sentence passes his lips, the current of his eloquence flows on calmly and untroubled. There are no passionate outbursts, no succeeding passages of pathos; little to dazzle, less to startle, nothing to bewilder,—all is clear, calm and convincing. With his little Bible in his hand, or more frequently in both hands, as we before intimated, he generally commences by plunging at once into his subject, not by making any lengthened introductory remarks. His voice, which but slightly informs us of his northern origin, is remarkably pleasant, and indeed musical. Seldom does it rise or sink above or below the key in which he commences his discourse; yet, as might be expected by strangers, the effect is not monotonous, for every sentence is admirably balanced, each period carefully rounded, and almost every tone is admirably modulated. When hearing Dr. Cumming, one is reminded of the description of 'Silver-tongued Smith,' one of the celebrated preachers of Queen Elizabeth's time. But, though the subject of our sketch is truly 'silver-tongued,' the solemnity, at times almost the severity of his manner, preserves him from anything like tameness. Perhaps there is not a firmer or more fearless preacher than the doctor; a fact which has been proved over and over again of late, as his Romish antagonists have found, to their cost. Dr. Cumming's manner in the pulpit is pleasing. He seldom uses any other action than a gentle waving of the hand, or the turning from one part of his congregation to the other. He is no cushion-thumper, and depends for effect more upon what he says than on the graces of action. Not that he is ungraceful at all—far from that; what we mean is, that he is, in this respect, directly the opposite of those pulpit-fops who flourish their bordered pieces of inspiration-lawn in the pulpit, and throw themselves into such attitudes as compels one to believe that the looking-glass is almost as essential a preparation for the pulpit as the Bible itself.

Often have we heard Dr. Cumming, but never without having noticed that he referred either to the Apocalyptic mysteries or to Papacy. These are his two great topics. His "Sketches" on the former subject must be familiar to every reader of scriptural literature, and therefore it will be needless for me to add anything on this point, further than that by many able persons it is considered Dr. Cumming is mistaken in many of the predictions which he utters; and that his great abilities are wasted on mysteries which, after all, are unfathomable by mortal mind. With respect to the Roman Catholic Church, he has long been known as one of its most vigorous, consistent, and uncompromising foes. As a controversialist, he is truly great. No man can dissect Popery so fearlessly, so mercilessly, as can he. There is not a web of sophistry, however artfully woven, which he cannot disentangle; and his profound learning, great sagacity, and extensive acquaintance with his subject, render him the most dangerous enemy that Cardinal Wiseman has in these realms. We doubt not that his newly-fledged Eminence would rather encounter the whole bench of bishops, than the distinguished and bold polemic of Crown-court. Indeed the doctor has actually bearded the lion of Popery in his den; for to his dingy palace in Golden-square he repaired, and there signally discomfited the emissary from the Vatican on his own ground. His lectures, delivered a short time since at the Hanover-square Rooms, on 'The Teaching of Cardinal Wiseman,' were masterpieces of argument; and they were listened to by as splendid an auditory as ever assembled in London,—men who are arbiters of taste and masters of opinion,—with the most profound satisfaction. To crown his pulpit triumphs, he has preached before the Queen, at Balmoral; and his sermon on that occasion, entitled 'Salvation,' is now circulated by scores of thousands throughout the length and breadth of the kingdom.

Dr. Cumming is a very voluminous author, but we cannot in this place more than generally allude to his writings. His style as a writer resembles that of his oral productions. The sale of his works is prodigious, and is productive of large sums; so that, with the salary derived from his rich congregation, and the profits of his literary productions, his income must be large; and he deserves it.

We have thus endeavored to convey to our readers, as graphically as may be, some idea of Dr. Cumming, both as regards his personal appearance, his manner, and his matter. At the present time he is the great pulpit 'lion of London,' just as Edward Irving was some twenty years since. But very different is the doctor to that strange, wonderfully eloquent, erratic founder of the sect who believe in the 'unknown tongues.' There could not by possibility be a greater contrast. The one all fire, enthusiasm, and semi-madness; the other, a man of chastened energy and convincing calmness. The one like a meteor flashing across a troubled sky, and then vanishing suddenly into the darkness; the other, like a silver star, shining serenely, and illumining our pathway with its steady ray. Long may it be ere it shall be said of the eloquent subject of the present article, 'He is to be gone!' for the church cannot spare him yet. Undazzled by popularity, unsullied fected by the breath of popular applause, he steadily pursues the duties of his calling; feeling, as we too feel, that a great work is before him. His humility is as genuine as is his piety. Scotland may well be proud of such a son. Hitherto his career has been a splendid one, but suddenly a new field for his exertions has appeared; he has boldly entered upon it, with an ardor which may be termed the chivalry of Protestantism; and on it, perhaps, his greatest triumphs have yet to be achieved."

Please Notice.

Any brethren knowing who would like to take as their own a fine, intelligent, good boy of seven or eight years of age, will confer a special favor by communicating with me immediately at this office; stating conditions, etc. It was the special desire of his deceased christian father—whom we greatly lament—that he should be reared and educated in "the faith once delivered to the saints." For the Crisis.

The Boston Conference and its Results.

Our meeting, as has been noticed already, came off according to appointment. It commenced Wednesday afternoon, as per notice, and held day and evening over the Sabbath. We had a good number in from abroad, whose presence, together with their preaching, exhortations, songs and prayers, gave life and interest to our meeting. The brethren, to whose lot it fell to preach, were Brn. Wendell, W. Pratt, Curry, Storrs, Hastings, Flagg, Boutell, Britton and Berick. In addition to the foregoing, there were upwards of twenty more, most of whom took some part in the services.

It is difficult to state as to the real merit of the various discourses. Different persons judge differently as to the goodness, excellence, or importance of various subjects. What appears of prime importance to one, may be regarded as of only secondary importance to another; and what is new, and hence exceedingly interesting to one, may be, and often is, stale or vapid to another. Some persons take great interest in listening to a discussion of a subject, of the erroneousness of which they are fully convinced; while others, from conscientious feelings, want of interest, or active prejudices, utterly refuse to listen to anything of the kind. Now nothing that can be said can change this state of things. In all these matters, persons must "live and learn." But what we most need is a christian liberality, that shall not degenerate into looseness on the one hand, nor become over-sensitive on the other.

The general character of the preaching was good. The subjects discussed were, prayer; the present time and its duties; the inheritance, and its blessedness; the probable time of "setting up the abomination," and the consequent end of the prophetic periods; the resurrection of the dead and the final doom of the wicked.

On Saturday afternoon, H. L. Hastings presented an argument on the resurrection, tending to show that the resurrection of the dead, as taught in the Scriptures, involved the re-living of both the righteous and wicked dead. This discourse was listened to with marked attention. Geo. Storrs preached on the subject of life only through Christ, endeavoring to show, among other things, that the resurrection of the dead does not involve the re-living of the wicked dead; but that re-living is only affirmed of the righteous.

It was feared by some, that the discussion of this subject would be detrimental to our cause; but this, I am happy to say, has not been the case. I have waited purposely until now, without saying anything in the Crisis as to the conference, so that a true statement might be made as to this matter.

Now as to myself, I can say, I have received no injury from the agitation of this question. I do not believe with Bro. Storrs as to the non-living of the wicked dead; but I must say, I was glad of the opportunity of listening to his discourses, so that I might, in my arguments against the view he entertains, combat the real and not some imaginary points.

As to the church worshiping at Chapman Hall, I may say, the conviction and testimony of some of the leading brethren with whom I have conversed is, that the church was never in a more prosperous condition than now. There is a growing interest, and constant accessions to our numbers. Many persons who, heretofore, have not been in the habit of attending meeting at the Hall, are now becoming interested. This increasing interest is, in part, owing to our conference. I do not know as any person was converted to a belief of the non-living of the wicked dead, though the agitation of that question excited investigation. We do not sympathize with the feeling that seeks to stifle investigation upon any topic; provided it be conducted at a proper time, and in a proper manner. Is it not too late in the day to attempt to throttle the spirit of inquiry? To do this were to imitate the examples of Eck, Cajetan, and a host of others, who sought to crush the spirit of religious liberty during the times of Luther. Would it not be far better for us to arm ourselves with arguments, court investigation, expose error, and thus give success to truth? The enemies of Luther resorted to personal reflections, misrepresentations, and persecution of the worst type. But this should not be the case with the friends of truth. Truth, though crushed to earth, is sure to rise. The glory of truth consists in the fact that it is, in itself, a living principle; it rests upon its own basis; its character is the same in every age; and however opposed, is sure to triumph in the end. Illustrations are not wanting to show the truth of this. Go back a few years to the time when the questions were first mooted that men, when they die, do not immediately go to heaven or a state of reward, but that death is a state of inactivity; and that future punishment consists not in eternal torture, but in extinction of being. What a hue and cry was raised about this new doctrine! It was branded with the names of blasphemy, heresy, infidelity. The advocates of these new views were placed upon a level with the "French Infidels," Universalists, etc. Those who were so unfortunate as to entertain or believe these doctrines were brought before ecclesiastical courts, mock tribunals, and ultimately turned out of the church. And then, as if this were not enough, they were defamed, slandered, turned out of employment; and, in in many cases, held up to ridicule. But the truth made headway notwithstanding the opposition. Now shall we go and do likewise? Nay, verily; God being our helper, we will "prove all things; hold fast that which is good." We will do this even to the loss of friends and comfort. We prefer liberty—true liberty—with the "cold shoulder," rather than the most respectful bondage. The true standard of fellowship and christian sympathy shall be christian character, now and forever.

F. H. BERICK.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Worcester, March 17th, of diphtheria, FITCH EDWARD, son of Dr. H. W. and L. M. Buxton, aged fifteen years, nine months and twenty-four days.

Eddy, as he was more commonly called, was remarkable for the frankness of his manners and the cheerfulness and affability of his disposition. He had a smile for every one, irrespective of their circumstances or condition, and his winning deportment secured for him the affetions of many, both young and old. Although he never had made a public profession of religion, yet it is very evident from letters written to his friends, which have come to light since his death, that he bestowed much thought upon the subject, and even indulged a hope in the pardoning love of God. His last composition to be read to his teacher was written the same day he was taken sick, which was just one week to the time of his burial, and with this heading,—Death Compostiion,—in which he set forth in a touching manner the brevity and uncertainty of life, and the importance of living righteous and godly lives so as to be ready for the summons at any moment. When prostrated by sickness, and being apprised that he could not survive but a short time, he called his parents and family connections to him, and talked to them one by one; after which he said, "Now let us all kneel down and pray, and I will pray first." He then poured out his soul to God in fervent prayer, invoking the divine blessing upon all his friends and family connections, and last of all in his own behalf, committing the keeping of his soul to God, who judgeth righteously. From this time he gradually sunk away until the morning of the 17th, when he closed his eyes to all earthly scenes, and quietly fell asleep in Jesus, to await the summons of the archangel's voice to come forth to the resurrection of life, and share the blessings of immortality. Thus has passed away one around whom clustered the fondest hopes of tender parents, and to whom clung the kindred affections of one only brother and sister. May God sanctify this bereavement to their good while they sorrow, but not as others who have no hope. The funeral was attended by the writer. A. ROSS.

Died, in South Groton, Mass., April 20, of consumption, Sister SAWYER, wife of John Sawyer, aged fifty-five.

Bro. and Sr. Sawyer formerly lived in Clinton, Mass., and their house has ever been a home for the weary pilgrim while on business of love and mercy. They have been strongly devoted to the faith of the gospel; consequently they loved the appearing of Christ, and were looking for his coming to awaken the sleeping dead, and give eternal life to all who are entitled to it "by patient continuance in well doing." Sister Sawyer had been a consistent, worthy disciple of Jesus for many years, and died as she lived, full of hope that soon the Life-giver would appear, and the grave yield her precious jewels, when all the good would get a crown of glory that would never fade away.

She has left a husband and only daughter to mourn their great loss, and while afflicted with this sad bereavement, may they remember her words of advice, encouragement and consolation; then look to Jesus and his precious word for comfort. The funeral was attended by the writer. She was carried to Clinton, and deposited in hades till the trump of God in a moment shall arouse the dead; when she will awake shouting, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" L. BOUTELL.

Fell asleep in Jesus, March 11th, 1862, of inflammatory fever, Sister MARY, wife of Bro. Henry Low, of Clinton, Mass., aged fifty-nine years.

Sister Low died in hope that she should soon be quickened into life by the voice of the Son of God, at his coming. She has left a large family and numerous friends to mourn her loss; but Bro. Low does not mourn as them who have no hope; for he believes "Jesus died and rose again," and that "them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." Bro A. Ross preached a very able and comforting discourse upon the occasion, from John 11: 25,—"Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection and the life."

JOHN U. DAY.

So. Lancaster, April 13th, 1862.

ADELAIDE, daughter of EDWIN and ELIZABETH PHELPS, of Westfield West-Farms, fell asleep at her father's house, April 15th, 1862, aged eighteen years.

Although she had never before openly confessed herself a follower of the Lord, yet while wasting away beneath the insidious power of consumption, she left her friends a most cheering evidence that her trust was in the Savior and in his blood. The night before her death she called her parents and rejoiced with them in God the Savior, and in the morning fell asleep without a struggle or a sigh. It was my privilege to proclaim to the throngs that gathered to lament her loss, the great and glorious comfort that the gospel of life and salvation affords. May the parents, and brother and sisters, and friends who survive her know the full power of this consolation here, and at last meet their loved and gentle Addie in the deathless land.

H. L. HASTINGS.

Boston, April 19, 1862.

Died, in Vienna, Feb. 28, 1862, of measles, ELLA, youngest daughter of Bro. H. B. and Sr. Angeline Seavey, aged one year and six months.

The subject of this notice was one of that class of children whose mind showed signs of early maturity. Her nature was very sensitive, with an affectionate disposition, making her almost the idol of the family. At an unexpected hour cruel disease seized her. Medical aid was early procured, but to no effect, and they were compelled to see her glide out of their hands. She has gone to sleep a little while in the grave till Jesus comes to make her live eternally free from suffering. The writer had the privilege of speaking words of comfort to the family and friends from the words of the prophet Jeremiah 31: 16, 17.

"One we fondly cherished sleepeth,
Rudely from our bosom torn,
Now the grave our treasure keepeth
Till the resurrection morn.

Cheering is the promise given,
'Thy loved one shall live again;'
And the tomb shall soon be riven
Where her lovely form has lain.

With what gladness we'll behold her
Waking in immortal bloom,
Our arms once more enfold her,
In our bright, eternal home."

FOREIGN NEWS.

By the arrival of the Steamship Persia, we have news from Liverpool to April 12th, Queenstown April 13th.

The news is unimportant.

The English journals argue that the late gunnery experiments fully prove that the science of attack has again fairly surpassed the science of defense.

The difficulties of the Mexican question claim some attention. It is said in Paris that Count Walewski will make a special mission to England on the subject, owing to the differences between France and England.

The question of iron-clad ships and floating batteries continues to occupy the attention of the government. The shipwrights have all been transferred from the wooden to the iron vessels in the course of construction.

Continental news was unimportant. Some students had attempted a demonstration in the Warsaw cathedral, but failed.

PARIS, April 11. It is rumored that the relations between England, France and Spain, relative to Mexico are satisfactory. Spain maintains the premises of the convention. It is reported that France wishes to march against Mexico.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 10. In consequence of the incessant hostilities carried on by Montenegro, the Porte has informed the great powers that it has sent orders to Omar Pacha to address an ultimatum to Prince Montenegro demanding the immediate release of the prisoners, and a formal engagement on the part of the Prince to henceforth prevent invasions of the Turkish territory. The report of an approaching modification in the ministry is entirely unfounded.

Garibaldi arrived at Parta, where he was received with much enthusiasm.

The Italian Ministry have ordered an increase in iron-plated ships.

The question of brigandage and the ex-king of Naples from Rome is debated in the Italian Chambers. Ratazzi says the accounts of brigandage are exaggerated, and that no additional force was necessary. The Italian Minister persisted in pointing out that the presence of Francis II. at Rome is the source of the disorders, and he believed that Napoleon also shares the conviction, and perceives the necessity of providing against its continuance, but the difficulties cannot all be vanquished at a single blow.

A Paris correspondent of the New York Post says:

"France has now by far the most powerful navy, since naval power now dates from iron, and not from oak. She owns a great number of iron-plated ships, superior in construction to the English.

Queen Victoria has offered to give up Buckingham Palace to the Emperor of the French during his visit to see the International Exhibition, and the Emperor will occupy it for ten days or a fortnight during the season.

GREAT BRITAIN.

A deputation from the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society waited upon Mr. Adams, the American Minister, on the 16th, and presented an address, in which the hope is expressed that the restoration of the Union would be founded upon the abolition of the true cause of the strife. The reply of Mr. Adams is described as having been very satisfactory to the deputation.

FRANCE.

Prince De Joinville is about to publish a pamphlet on iron-plated frigates. His work, it is said, will present the subject under new aspects. He does not admit the invulnerability of the new vessels.

SPAIN.

It is asserted that the Spanish Government is taking steps to restore its credit, and had commissioned two leading firms in London to put the whole of its funds on a basis satisfactory to British capitalists.

GREECE.

A message had reached the Government of Greece announcing that the garrison at Nauplia was breaking up, and that a large number of the insurgents, officers and soldiers, had surrendered.

POLAND.

Twelve persons engaged in the late disturbances in the Warsaw Cathedral had been condemned to military service.

TURKEY.

There had been an obstinate fight between the Turks and Montenegrins near Nakrich, in which the latter were repulsed with considerable loss on both sides.

LATEST.

It is strongly rumored that England has lately made a diplomatic recommendation to France in favor of the withdrawal of the French troops from Rome.

The question of armor-plated ships and floating batteries continued to be the prominent topic.

Encouraging advices as to cotton growing in Jamaica and Peru had reached England.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

CAPTURE OF NEW ORLEANS.

FORTRESS MONROE, April 27.

To Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

A fugitive black, just arrived from Portsmouth, brings the Petersburg Express of yesterday, which contains the following dispatch:

"Mobile, April 25. The enemy passed Fort Jackson at four o'clock yesterday morning. When the news reached New Orleans the excitement was boundless. Martial law was put in force and business was completely suspended. All the cotton and steamboats excepting such as were necessary to transport corn, ammunition, &c., were destroyed. At one o'clock today the operator bade us good-bye, saying that the enemy had appeared before the city. This is the last we know regarding the fall. Will send particulars as soon as they can be had.

The negro bringing the above, reports that the rebels have two iron-clad steamers nearly completed, and that it is believed the Merrimac will come out to-morrow.

(Signed) JOHN E. WOOL."

Washington, April 27. The news from New Orleans, which has come through several rebel sources, is deemed here to be of the utmost importance. What Old England failed to do with all her power has been handsomely accomplished by New England. The manner in which the success at Forts Jackson and St. Philip was followed up is highly commended. In thirty hours our brave men consummated their victory and appeared before the great city of the southwest to receive its submission. This is but a foretaste of Southwestern operations. No mention is made by the rebel papers of their iron-clad turtles and rams, that were to annihilate the Yankee fleet, which leads to a suspicion that the common estimate of the rebel motive power from their own misrepresentations has been a mistake. It is pretty clear that on this occasion they could not stop to conceal the truth.

The news of the fall of New Orleans excites general joy.

Col. Wheelock late in command of the Massachusetts 7th regiment, died here yesterday.

Near Yorktown, April 25th. It is still raining, making the roads next to impassable.

The rebels opened a battery at Yorktown this morning on three canal boats while passing into Wormley's Creek.

To HON. E. M. STANTON, Sec'y of War:

"Early this morning an advanced lunette of the rebels on this side of the Warwick, near its bend, was carried by assault by Co. H, 1st Massachusetts regiment. The work had a ditch six feet deep with a strong parapet, and was manned by two companies of infantry—no artillery. Our men moved over open soft ground some six hundred yards, received the fire of the rebels at fifty yards, did not return it, but rushed over the ditch and parapet in the most gallant manner.

The rebels broke and ran as soon as they saw that our men intended to cross the parapet. Our loss was three killed and one mortally wounded. We took fourteen prisoners and destroyed the work sufficiently to render it useless, and retired. The operation was conducted by Gen. C. Grover, who managed the affair most handsomely. Nothing could have been better than the conduct of the men under fire. The supports, who were also under artillery of other works, were companies of the 1st and 11th Massachusetts. In spite of the rain our work progresses well.

G. B. McCLELLAN, Major General."

HEADQUARTERS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF THE RAPPAHANNOCK, April 27, 1862.

Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War.

I have just returned from the camp opposite Fredricksburg. I was told the Richmond Examiner of the 26th has been received in town, announcing as follows:

"New Orleans taken! Great destruction of property, cotton and steamboats. Steamboats enough saved to take away the ammunition. Great consternation of the inhabitants."

(Signed) IRVING McDOWELL, Major General.

Fortress Monroe, April 28. To Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War. The news of the occupation of New Orleans by our forces is confirmed to-day. No further news.

(Signed) JOHN E. WOOL, Major Gen.

DAMAGE BY THE FRESHETS.—The flood at Northampton submerged, to a greater or less extent, thirty-five houses, and caused damage to the amount of about $7000. At that point it was the highest flood ever known, and the dyke there failed from not being built high enough.

The flood in Hartford has caused that kind and extent of damage that cannot well be estimated in dollars and cents, but the total injury can scarcely fall short of $50,000.

For the Crisis.

Campmeeting.

As some of our brethren think a Campmeeting further east than Wilbraham would serve many better in these hard times, Bro. Munger proposes the first Monday in June for this meeting, and I think very favorably of the time. New Market Junction, N. H., is the place, if we can get it. What say brethren? Is there any objection? L. BOUTELL.

Notices, &c.

The Crisis for the Soldiers.

We will send a FEW copies of the Crisis FREE to soldiers in camp, if it is desired, and ordered by them, or by their friends. Send orders to Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., and keep him notified of all changes in location, etc.

For the Crisis.

Be Faithful.

When brilliant hopes cease to inspire,
And disappointment clouds my sky;
When quenched is every fond desire
By cold, chilling anxiety;
Up to thy throne, thy heavenly throne,
On faith's pinions I'll rise,
For strength to endure the countless ills,
Until victory ends the strife.

For there, all clad in glory bright,
My loving Savior stands;
While angelic hosts in glorious light
Obey his great commands.
The trouble feared is all dispersed,
And hushed become every fear;
A holy calm creeps o'er me now,
A consoling voice I hear.

Come! all ye disheartened, weary ones,
Ye sin-burdened, come;
I'll bring relief from all these toils,
I'll soon take the pilgrims home.
Oh! christian, fall not by the way,
This state abounds in ill;
But faithfully work all through the day,
In performing Jesus' will.

This transient state will soon be past,
Its conflicts all be o'er;
For oh! the present howling blast
But hastens to that shore.
There we with spotless ones in love,
Can sweet hosannas sing,
The glories of redeeming grace,
The praises of our King.

For the Crisis.

Live for Something.—No. 1.

For what purpose do I live? is a question that every one ought to ask themselves daily; and for what purpose I ought to live should be daily kept in view. To say there is no distinct purpose for which life was given, is equivalent to saying, I know of no reason why I do or should live, and certainly such an one could not well object if called upon to part with life; for if there is no reason why one should live, there evidently must be good reason for him to die. This is plain from the fact that whoever cannot and does not see that life was given with reference to a purpose, is not worthy of life. That this is a true principle and a right conclusion no one can very well doubt, if they only take into consideration man's nature and the relation he sustains to his Maker. It is upon this principle that the judgments and decisions of the last day are rendered. That long-delayed penalty, "The wages of sin is death," will then be executed upon those who are unworthy of life,—that is, those who have practically known no reason for having lived, by virtue of not seeing any purpose for which life was given; therefore saying and doing those things that make them worthy of death.

The fact that there is a fitness for either life or death, and that this fitness depends upon our practically knowing the true ends of life, makes it plain that there is a distinct and divine purpose for which human life and existence was given; and moreover, that it is necessary to recognize and constantly to keep in view this purpose, in order to answer these ends. It becomes then of great importance to every one to know why he lives, and for what purpose. It will not do to guess at this, nor to be mistaken; if accuracy of knowledge is demanded anywhere, it is upon this one point; for in proportion to our practical knowledge of this purpose will we be in the same proportion morally and intellectually fitted to meet the ends of life. No one should carelessly neglect this subject, for none can be more pleasing, useful, and really profitable. The good man's destiny is great and glorious. It involves all that an infinitely wise and good being could desire for man's eternal bliss. To meditate upon such a subject is to transport the mind from the transitory scenes of earth to the unfading beauties of paradise to come, and there to feast upon the blessedness of an endless life. O! the thought that we may soon be there, is itself enough to lift one from earth to heaven, and fill the soul with rapture and delight.

The true end of life is the glory of God, which consists in a life wholly devoted to him, to be influenced by no other motive than strict conformity to what God requires. By living and walking thus in obedience, man is thus morally and intellectually educated, or, in other words, fitted to enter upon an endless life, free from care, anxiety and trouble, so common to a state of imperfection, sin and death. Man is now under a system of moral training preparatory to future glory. This system God has been pleased to reveal in his word, plainly written down, that man may the better know what his Maker requires. He who obeys these requirements, lives with reference to, and will finally enjoy the glory of God or the perfection of his work. This is evident from the language of Paul in Rom. 3: 23,—"For all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." What is sin? The transgression of the law, or disobedience. As then by sin or disobedience we come short, so by righteousness and obedience may we attain to that glory. It is evident, therefore, that living to the glory of God consists in strict obedience to his commands; hence the admonition of Paul,—"Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."—1 Cor. 10: 31. In Col. 3: 17, we are informed how we may do this,—"And whatsoever ye do, in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him."

A man fills up his days with words and deeds. By them his character is formed; and others also determine his real state for good or for evil; and by them will God judge him in the last day, who will render to every man according to his deeds. Rom. 2: 6. To be right in word or deed is to be wholly devoted to God and sanctified by his truth. A man who would live to the glory of God must be right in word and deed; consequently his influence and character will be right. Peter informs us how this may be done. "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God. If any man minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth, that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ." 1 Peter 4: 11. Again, "For he that will love life and see good days, let him refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips that they speak no guile."—1 Pet. 3: 10. Purity of heart makes purity of speech; and purity of both never bears the fruit of corrupt and wicked deeds; consequently he that speaketh from a pure heart, according to the oracles of God, will truly live to glorify his Maker.

Directly opposite to this glory of God is the glory of Satan, which consists mostly in being the opposite of all good. It is this that makes the true believer bear his cross, or in other words suffer reproach for Christ. It is this also that tries his faith, and tempts him to gratify fleshly lusts, and live after the manner of the world. To live to the glory of Satan is to do all things to the satisfaction of the fleshly man; to gratify the carnal mind. His first lesson in Eden taught to Adam and Eve, was to gratify a carnal desire, whereby they come short of the glory of God. The glory of Satan is the glory of this world, from which were the righteous taken it would leave it as hell; yet, alas! how many live after the world. But how vastly great is the difference between the glory of God and that of Satan. The one is endless life and glory, the other everlasting shame and death. "For if ye live after the flesh ye shall die; but if ye through the Spirit do mortify the deeds of the body, ye shall live."—Rom. 8: 13. This is the contrast between the two. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." O! how important that choice be made speedily.

The glory of God being directly opposite to that of the world, it makes it obligatory upon man, if he would live to the glory of God, to renounce the world. Worldly principles make worldly characters. Satanic principles inspire a satanic disposition. So likewise do the principles of Christ beget the mind of Christ. Hence here comes the cross—the trial. All that live to the glory of God must obey his word; they must govern themselves by its principles. No man can ever be saved without cultivating a disposition of mind in harmony with those principles. It is useless to look for a physical change at the resurrection, without having first undergone a moral and intellectual renovation. A man must be a new creature in Christ, and put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge, after the image of Him that created him (Col. 3: 10), before he can be made new from the dead. God will never give a pure and incorruptible body to an impure and corrupt mind. To know this disposition of mind, it is necessary to be governed by pure and holy principles, which are not of the world and Satan, but of God. True religion consists in one's believing and willingly living up to the teachings of God, i. e., adopting those heavenly principles of goodness, love and mercy, as set forth in those teachings, developing a character that exhibits those principles in the strongest light. By virtue of this the mind is educated and prepared for that higher and truly perfect state.

It may be said that it will require time for such a work. True. What some mistake for religion may be gotten in one night at a revival meeting; but a good christian character can hardly be acquired so soon; it is the work of a lifetime, and none can begin too soon. It is a progressive work, and he who at conversion is but a babe in Christ, may in course of time become a full grown man. It requires time to subdue the corrupt and wicked passions of the human heart. Though the old man is crucified, yet it requires time for him to expire and become fully dead. It is for this reason that man is now on probation,—that he may, by virtue of being brought under a system of moral training, be made perfect and completely fitted for the Kingdom of God. How important, therefore, that every one should know for what purpose he is living, that he may enter immediately upon the work of cultivating himself and preparing to meet this great end of life.

A good man is good by being governed by good principles and acting from pure motives. Hence the necessity of guarding against deception, lest corrupt principles be adopted in the place of good ones, and wrong instead of right motives. No matter how sincerely wrong may be mistaken for right, it can never make the wrong right. So likewise it is with truth and error; error ever so sincerely mistaken for truth, can never do anybody the least good. It is truth that is wanted, and truth alone; hence it becomes very necessary, in believing the truth of God, to be sure that it is such, and not the doctrines of men. "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth," said Jesus. John 17: 17. The erroneous teachings and doctrines of men cannot perform this work; therefore the necessity of believing the truth which is the word of God; anything short of it must fail to accomplish the work. The gospel is said to be the "power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rom 1: 16. If so, the doctrines of men cannot save any one, for it is the power of God, not of man, that saves.

It therefore becomes of the greatest importance to know for a certainty whether what men believe is the truth of God or the word of man. It is under the truth of God that we are to develope a character. It is by the principles and motives of his word that we are governed, educated, and prepared for the everlasting Kingdom. Thereby it becomes to all true believers the moral power of God unto salvation. To live to the glory of God is to be saved by the gospel. O! what a glorious privilege, to be saved from sin and death, and receive immortal life,—life that knows no ending! Let us live for that life.

Sprees on Sprees.

Every thing goes by sprees, fits, and jerks, feastings and carousings. "On with the dance!" Is the church in debt, the parsonage? Does the pulpit need a cushion, the floor a carpet? Is the minister's salary falling into the rears? Is the Sabbath-school library to be replenished, or an outfit for a missionary? What now? A spree, a feast, a frolic, a strawberry-festival, a pic-nic, a soiree, or fancy-fair, a real smash-down business! Gospel is out of the question. Faith, that works by love and purifies the heart, is laid aside totally for the time being. Piety, the religion of Jesus, pure, undefiled, bleeds at every pore! Christ is dishonored, wounded in the house of his friends. Satan rejoices! So it goes all right!

"Such charming scenes subdue the heart,
Make misses free with gold to part,
To help our church extension;
When on the merits of the cause
They would not give two wheaten straws
To save it from declension!

But money must be made, you know,
To keep up pageantry and show,
Or get the gospel preached;
So any means that brings good ends
May now be used by Jesus' friends,
Most sure where money's reached.

And if there should be any wrong
In fairs, and feasts, and mirthful song,
The cause of Christ to aid:
Why then protracted meetings hold,
Convict all sinner's, young and old,
Till full atonement's made."

"Immortality" and "Eternal Life."

Is immortality eternal life? And is eternal life immortality? Some answer affirmatively, and others negatively. They are so nearly related, that the one cannot be possessed without possessing the other; yet they are not strictly synonymous. Immortality is the basis of eternal life, while eternal life is the result of immortality; so it is impossible to live eternally without being immortal, and impossible to be immortal without living eternally. Christians are said to possess eternal life in the present tense by faith, or by promise, but not in reality till the Life-giver comes. "God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." "This is the promise which he hath promised us, even eternal life." "In the world to come eternal life." We have a claim upon it in this life, while we are in Christ, and shall hereafter possess it in reality. W. SHELDON.

Wisdom.

The definition of the word "wisdom" is, "Knowledge and judgment conducted by discretion." So we read in Matt. 11: 19, "Wisdom is justified by her children"; and the language thus used was by Jesus, about whom various things were said, and certain grave charges made. Some said of John the Baptist, "He hath a devil"; and of Jesus; "Behold a man gluttonous, and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners," and other language of like character; and, as was his custom, he did not undertake to refute the several charges, but simply said, "Wisdom is justified of her children." "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding: for the merchandize of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold." There are two kinds of wisdom, one from beneath, the other from above; one is of God, the other of the evil one. The antagonism that exists between these is ceaseless; there is a continual jar, a disputed and unsettled question; what the one affirms the other denies, and so it will continue until He who is the embodiment of the divine wisdom shall appear as the great Arbitrator; then, and not till then, can the question be definitely and forever settled. I propose then to ask and scripturally answer two questions.

First, "Who can understand his errors?" or, "Wherewithal shall a young man cleanse his way?"

Second, Knowing his errors, what is his next step?

It needs not that I should show mankind to be erring and sinful creatures; his history past and present bear the fullest proof of this, for true it is that from the cradle to the grave (with few rare exceptions) a man's life is one of continued mishap and it is not strange it should be so, for he is but a creature of a day, and "wherein is he to be accounted of?" The Scriptures show plainly that with reference to wisdom pertaining to a future, man is naturally totally ignorant, and this is exhibited in the history of the world. See, for instance, how grave philosophers have wearied themselves in the vain endeavor to determine whether there was one or many gods; whether the soul was infused or begotten; whether it was mortal or immortal; whether a part of God or of distinct creation; and so on to the end of the chapter.

In the writings of men we hear much of the "dignity of human nature," of his great capacity for knowledge, and of his Godlike nature, being immortal; and all this looks very pretty in print, and sounds very pleasing from the pulpit; and were it not that this is untrue, and the daily intercourse with the world proving it so, we might be rowing in the same boat, and believing the same nonsense. I say nonsense, because such it is, for there is not a sense we have which offers the shadow of a proof that we are, or have the principle of natural immortality within us. This assumption of presumptuous man shows whose wisdom he has; it not being of God, necessarily is of the Devil. Proof is found in Gen. 3: 4,—"Ye shall not surely die"; and this story has been repeated from father to son four thousand years before Christ, and one thousand eight hundred and sixty-two since, and the many believe it, and only a comparatively few question and from divine wisdom disprove the Devil's lie.

Who then can understand his errors? I answer, none who are unenlightened by God's wisdom. I answer, none who have a wisdom and a righteousness of their own. It is man's highest wisdom to have it first hand and from God, and he had better do as Job counselled his "miserable comforters,"—"O that ye would altogether hold your peace! and it should be your wisdom. Shall not his excellency make you afraid? and his dread fall upon you?" In order, then, to understand our errors and erring nature, it will not answer to compare ourselves by ourselves, for "the heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked; who can know it?" God has condescended to, as it were, come down to man, and has given him "line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little"; and in the early ages of the world gave his instructions through a Moses, a David, a Solomon, the prophets, his Son, and apostles; and by careful, I care not how strict a search through the writings of these, THEREIN can man gain understanding and wisdom; he there discovers his nakedness and entire helplessness; his brutish (not Godlike) nature; he there discovers that "man being in honor and understandeth not, is (in the state of death) like the beasts that perish"; that death feeds upon him and devours him; that unless a power outside and above delivers him, he must inevitably perish. Now this is not a pleasant reflection, yet it is that which comes from believing the truth on this subject, and it is true wisdom to believe God, and it is not presumption; nor is it want of charity to boldly affirm, however egotistical it may appear, that that person, whether high or low, rich or poor, learned or unlearned, is out of the way, and therefore cannot understand his errors, who states matters of a contrary character. God's truth is yea and amen; that which is of men is yea, yea, and nay, nay. God has but one way of interpreting his words, and that by his prophets, and Son, and apostles of Jesus. Men have as many ways as pleases them, and each sect its mode of interpreting; this is seen by reading the various creeds of so-called Christendom. No creed but the Bible, no faith but that therein found,—this is the cry of the true Protestant.

We cannot fail to see that it is man's wisdom to have God's wisdom, for this is of the true stamp, and beyond it we cannot go and please him. The question then, providing a man has come to the understanding of his errors, as to what is his next step, is answered in this: APPROPRIATE the wisdom you have attained, and under no circumstances allow the devil to come in and root up the good seed; for if you will rightly nourish this tender plant, it will yield an abundant supply of satisfaction and comfort; do not allow the cares of the world to choke as would a noxious weed; nor the deceitfulness of riches, and the lusts of other things entering in, choke the word; but do the will of Him who has enlightened your dark understanding, and walk in his light, and keep walking, and soon the Light of lights shall arise with healing in his beams; and though you suffer all things now for his sake, be exceeding glad, and do not lament, but rejoice, for great shall be your reward in the times to come. He is faithful that hath promised.

In closing these remarks, I do not know that I can do better than quote the language of James, as recorded in 3d chapter, 13th to 18th inclusive: "Who is a wise man and endued with knowledge among you? let him show out of a good conversation his works with meekness of wisdom. But if ye have bitter envying and strife in your hearts, glory not, and lie not against the truth. This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace." The truth of God will make all free who will be free, and those it makes free are free indeed. May God add his blessing.

The Evening Shrine.

When silent twilight throws a crimson shroud
O'er hill and dale and mead and fleeting cloud;
When hushed to calm repose the songster's lay,
The strife, confusion, hurried clamor of the day;
I love to steal from earth's encumbrance free,
Where none can hear my prayer, my form can see,
Mid evening's solitude, my God, but thee.

Thy mansion, oh, how high, how holy, pure!
Thou art, O God, still dwelling there secure
Upon thy gorgeous throne. The centre still Thou art of all created works. Thy will Omnipotent controlest every sphere.
Thou art the centre orb;—but still art here
To hear the feeble cry I almost fear
To raise to such a Being, full of light,
And wisdom deep, past finding out, and might
That man can never comprehend; and love
As deep as fields of space above.

Remember me, O God, within thy book
Of life; I would not care on earth to brook
The approbation and the smiles of men;
But when thou comest in thy kingdom, then
Remember me among that ransomed throng,
To pour in strains sublime the victor's song
In everlasting anthems, high and free,
As glad we float o'er life's immortal sea,
In songs of richest praise, my God, to thee.

"HOPKINS ON HEAVEN'S JOYS.—Is not this language—found in Park's Memoir of Hopkins, pp. 201-2:—'The smoke of their torment shall ascend up in the sight of the blessed forever and ever, and serve, as a most clear glass always before their eyes, to give them a bright and most affecting view. This display of the divine character will be most entertaining to all who love God, will give them the highest and most ineffable pleasure. Should the fire of this eternal punishment cease, it would in a great measure obscure the light of heaven, and put an end to a great part of the happiness and glory of the blessed.'"

Hold Fast.

If there ever was a time when those who are looking for the return of Jesus should hold fast, it is now. We are in "perilous times" indeed. The waves run high, the sea is rough, and the storm is violent; but the ship is soon coming into port with all her crew, who obey the orders of the Captain of our salvation, who is able to land the weary saints on the happy shore of Canaan. I am glad we are almost home. The people of the Lord will soon be where "the wicked cease from troubling," and the weary will be at rest. Then hold on to the Lord, by abiding in him; by having Jesus formed in us the hope of glory; by having the witness of the Spirit that our ways please the Lord. Then when he comes to make up his jewels, we shall be saved from the storm which soon is to sweep away the refuge of lies.

I like the Crisis much. I cannot do without it. I prize it next to the Bible. Its doctrine is found in the word of the Lord which abides forever. Yours looking for the return of Jesus.

For the Crisis.

What shall be done?

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—I begin now to realise some of the vexations attendant on the missionary life in a new field. I am cheerful in my labors here, and contentedly I go from appointment to appointment in the immediate neighborhood; but when I hear the Macedonian cry, "Come over and help us," from brethren in adjacent counties; and when I realise that I am powerless, in consequence of poverty, and cannot heed these cries, I am saddened and sick at heart. O my brethren, had I the wings of an angel I would fly to your rescue and share your toils and dangers. I know that the Master will come, and find thousands unprepared, and why? because they have not heard the cry, "Behold he cometh!" I once felt what it was to be in Paul's situation when he exclaimed, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel." But can a man be required to accomplish more than circumstances permit? Is not the maxim true, that "he that does the best his circumstance allows does well, acts nobly; angels could do no more"?

But this is not answering the question, "What shall be done?" and to answer it satisfactorily may be beyond my power. I will at this time merely offer a few suggestions.

1st. I would recommend a stronger and healthier missionary spirit among our brethren.

2nd. That some of the brethren who send appointments for once a week, all the year round, and others, should come here, where they can exercise their talents with more zest; and where they can preach every day and evening, and three times on Sunday.

3d. That the entire church should pray to God to send more laborers, and to open the way for those who are in the field, and to follow the latter by material aid.

4th. That every one who reads this will send all the money they can spare to the "tract fund," that we poor preachers can have tracts to send to places where we cannot yet visit, and thus open the way, and to scatter where we do go.

Prediction of the Emperor Nicholas in 1849.

The Indianapolis Journal gives the following extract from a lecture given by Hon. H. W. Ellsworth, formerly of this city, late Minister to Sweden, being the language of the Emperor of Russia used in an interview with the lecturer:

"Sir," said the Emperor Nicholas, in a memorable diplomatic interview between him and your speaker, during those recent revolutions that struck down Hungary, remodeled France, and broke the bond of union between Denmark and revolted Duchies, causing nearly every monarch to tremble for his throne—"Sir, I view calmly all this agitation. Russia is untouched, and will not mingle with it. Her hour has not yet come, though her destiny cannot be long delayed! She will soon be involved in a protracted contest in which England and France will be her opponents; those nations, so long and so naturally hostile to each other will be arrayed in unison against her!"

"And what, your Majesty, will be the result of this great contest?"

"Favorable, beyond doubt, to Russia. I shall rise superior to all reverses, and protract the contest till I weary out my enemies. But there is another war looming in the distance—a struggle between constitutional and unrestricted monarchy, in which nearly all Europe will stand opposed to Russia while Turkey, her natural enemy, with Persia and Asia, will be fighting at her side."

"And how is to result this second conflict?"

"Still favorable to Russia, though it will be bloody and protracted. But a third and still mightier contest is approaching, in which the world will be involved—a struggle between what is called tyranny, in any form, and freedom. Into this struggle your nation will be forced from its present policy, and compelled to take a leading part. It will be a struggle such as history never has recorded."—Advent Herald.

The Lamp.

In this time of doubting and scepticism,—doubting that which is true, and believing that which is false,—of what infinite value is the chart, the record of God's holy word, which he has given to his weary, way-worn pilgrims, journeying to the promised land. Without it, how dark the way; with it how light. Ps. 119: 105,—"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." Then let us cleave to his word, and try to understand it as it is, and it will all harmonize, and become one perfect chain from Genesis to Revelation,—no jarring note, no discordant sound will ever mar the harmony of heaven's high and holy law. God's Spirit and his word agree. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."—Isa. 8: 20. A. M. G. D.

Tea.

In looking over the Crisis my eye rested on a little piece headed, "The Try Company." My mind has since dwelt much on the subject of trying. Now I believe there can be much accomplished by trying. By putting forth an effort we can overcome many obstacles in our pathway. By trying, we can forsake our own besetting sins, break off our useless habits, and when we get right ourselves we shall then be prepared to reprove the faults of others.

When a very small child, I was allowed to drink tea. I drank it three times a day, sometimes oftener. I became very nervous and could not sleep nights, but still could not be convinced that tea was the cause of it. I lived on in this way for several months, thinking tea could not hurt me. I came to the conclusion I would abstain from tea drinking awhile, and while I was testing it, Brother and Sister Brewer called on us and staid over night. They drank neither tea nor sale coffee. I thought if they could live without it I could. Their visit did my heart good. I felt so comforted and cheered by their visit that I forgot my tea and have drank none since. I found by a little trying that I could overcome a strong habit. Now who will try with me in the total abstinence from tea? I believe it to be injurious to the nervous system. I will try to have on the wedding garment, and patiently wait till the King comes in his beauty, and receive to myself a crown of glory.

The Secret Out.

A very imprudent physician has done his brethren a great injury by thoughtlessly divulging one of the most valuable secrets of the profession, while riding up to Union Square in the Fourth Avenue cars yesterday. "How is practice now? you must be making a great deal of money, for every third person seems to be ailing?" "True there is much serious sickness, but I get no practice. Secession has made the times so hard, that people cure themselves by eating nothing."

There are a few bodily ailments which are aggravated, and in some cases rendered incurable by insufficient diet; but with the exception of Diphtheria and a few others, nine out of ten of all ordinary ailments are controlled, are arrested, are permanently cured by a wise diminution of the amount of food eaten. This is particularly the case when there is no decided ailment, but a general feeling of discomfort or of unwellness. In all actively inflammatory maladies, where there is acute pain, [illegible] day where, total abstinence from all substantial food, from every thing liquid or solid, except hot teas, is the sheet-anchor of safety, when not extended beyond thirty-six hours. No one should venture on a longer abstinence on any occasion without the advice of a physician.

All pain is caused by over-distended blood-vessels pressing against some nerve. Hence the quickest way of relieving any ordinary pain is to diminish the amount of blood in the vessels of the part by bleeding. But there is a safer, a better and a more enduring relief in cutting off the supply of blood; and as blood is made out of the food we eat, it must be apparent, that if on the feeling of pain or discomfort, we cease eating absolutely, that pain must begin to diminish within six hours, that being the time required for converting food into blood, and if no more food is eaten, no more blood can be made; while the amount in the system is diminished at the rate of two or more pounds in every twenty-four hours of invalidism, there must be relief. But let it be remembered that while this diminution goes on in a state of rest by means of the perspiration, sensible and insensible, as well as by all the involuntary motions of the system, and the friction of the blood along its vessels, it is an important fact that every crook of the finger, every wink of the eye, every thought of the mind, is at the expense of the consumption of a greater or less number of particles of the body; so that, in every succeeding moment, the body weighs less than it did the preceding moment; this diminution takes place in the amount of the circulating fluids directly. If then the slightest motion diminishes the amount of blood, and it is the excess of blood in a part that causes pain, the next best means of diminishing pain, after cutting off the supply of food, is exercise. Hence the more a man exercises short of actual fatigue, the better he will feel, the sooner and more effectually will he be relieved. Many a time a man has felt uncomfortable, sometimes very decidedly so, but upon taking a walk or ride, or engaging in some interesting work, he expresses himself as having been greatly relieved. Let then this thought impress itself on the mind, that in the common every day ailments of life we must look for the cause in an excess of blood and other fluids in the body, and that whatever diminishes the excess is curative. The methods of this diminution are worth remembering. 1. Abstinence from food. 2. Perspiration, whether induced by covering up in bed and drinking hot teas, or by muscular exercise. 3. Vomiting. 4. Bleeding. 5. Counter-irritation, as by friction with the hand or a mustard-plaster. Of these we recommend only abstinence, perspiration, exercise, friction. But let it be remembered that when exercise evidently increases the discomfort or the pain, or when it induces a positive feeling of weariness, it is contra-indicated, and quiet of mind and repose of body should be sedulously cultivated. And under all circumstances let it be remembered that however beneficial exercise may be in any given case, the very moment it becomes a felt fatigue, that moment it becomes a positive injury, if persisted in.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Erysipelas.

BRO. GRANT:—I saw a request in the Crisis, if any one knew any thing useful for the health department, to forward it. I know what has proved a sure cure in every case that I have seen tried (which has been many, and some so bad that their physicians could not cure them), for a kind of erysipelas vulgarly called "the shingles." It is a breaking out (on the side generally) with smarting pain like a burn. The remedy is linseed oil, applied outwardly.

THE DEFENSE OF THE BEARD.—There are more solid inducements for wearing the beard than the mere personal appearance and the cultivation of such an aid to the every day diplomacy of life. Nature, combining as she never fails to do, the useful with the ornamental, provides us with a far better respirator than science could ever make. The hair of the moustache not only absorbs the moisture and miasma of fogs, but it strains the air from dust. It acts also in a scientific manner, by taking heat from the warm breath as it leaves the chest, and supplying it to the cold air taken in. It is not only a respirator, but with the beard entire we are provided with a comforter as well. The remarkable thing is, too, that the beard, like hair of the head, protects against the heat of the sun; it acts as a thatch does to the ice house.

☞ THE CRISIS is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For the Crisis.

My Savior.

Blessed Jesus, life divine,
Thou art precious, thou art mine—
Thou art holy, thou art good,
Thou, beloved Son of God!

Thou, the life, the light of men,
Holy, heavenly, all divine!
Thou of all my joys the sum,
May thy kingdom soon be come.

Time is flying—days go past,
Like the weaver's shuttle fast,
Leaving ever one the less
To prepare for endless bliss.

Then, my brother, sister, friend,
Shall we loiter? Shall we spend
Precious moments such as these
In our carnal, worldly ease?

Can we let such moments fly,
And forget that we must die,
Or not remember Christ may come
To take his ransomed people home?

Up and doing, brother, friend,
And no longer idly spend
Precious moments such as these
In your carnal, worldly ease.

Bible Test of Christianity.

"Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, cannot be my disciple."

Peter said, "Lo, we have left all, and followed thee." Have you also done this? "And he that taketh not his cross, and followeth after me, is not worthy of me." Are you thus doing? "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of God." Christian professor, are you humble, childlike, obedient unto Christ in all things, observing all of his commands? "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." "Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." Are you a doer of God's word, or hearer only? Christ says, "MANY shall say in that day, Lord, Lord," to whom he will say, "I never knew you,"—"depart from me ye cursed." Shall you be of that numerous class? "And all that believed were together, and had all things common; and sold their possessions and goods, and parted them to all men as every man had need." Reader, these are the Bible tests of christianity, of discipleship, with many other texts of like character in unison with the above. Now rest assured it is not by creeds, or theories of man's devising, but by God's word we are to be tried and judged at the last day. Like the apostles, martyrs, and holy men of old, even all who consecrated everything on the altar of Christ, can you say "I have (also) kept the faith; I have (also) finished my course; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord shall give me at that day"? Your theory of faith may be very plausible, but have you kept the faith, and observed all things whatsoever Christ has commanded? If not, then will you not be accounted as an unprofitable servant, who knew his Lord's will but did it not?

Again. "But the meek shall inherit the earth, and delight themselves in the abundance of peace." "Blessed are the meek; for they shall inherit the earth." Are you included in this class, possessing its spirit and characteristics? "Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, long suffering." "With all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love." "For the Lord taketh pleasure in his people; he will beautify the meek with salvation." Are you in this sense numbered with God's people? Furthermore, "God hath purposed to stain the pride of all glory, and to bring into contempt all the honorable of the earth." "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." "God resisteth the proud, but giveth grace unto the humble." Does Christendom of the present day represent the former? (not a part, but) "every one that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord." Also, "The Lord will destroy the house of the proud." If this [illegible] corporations of the present day? When Christ has also declared, "Woe unto you that are rich!" "Woe unto you that are full!" and also recorded, "I will cause the arrogancy of the proud to cease"; "which say, Stand by thyself, come not near to me, for I am holier than thou"; and especially those who are closely allied with earthly governments, which are to be dashed to pieces like a potter's vessel at Christ's coming; who has also declared, "But I have chosen you out of the world." These ecclesiastical bodies, who are so strongly in sympathy with the world, are they not virtually doing away with the distinction set forth by Christ between the church and the world, and embroiled in the perils of the last days? and also strikingly represent the Laodicean church, as rich in goods, having need of nothing,—while festivals, lectures, concerts, and excursions are the order of the day? And instead of taking heed, as Christ commanded, by prayer and watchfulness, are they not fully committed in sanctioning even war and bloodshed to sustain corrupt earthly governments, when Christ has plainly declared, "My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." "Vengeance belongeth unto me; I will recompense, saith the Lord." "Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God." Professing christian, have you obeyed Christ in all these things? "All the proud shall be stubble." "And they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity."

Again. "Covetousness is idolatry." Be not deceived; no idolaters, nor extortioners, nor covetous, shall enter the kingdom of God. "Take heed, and beware of covetousness." "Ye cannot serve God and mammon." "Let your conversation be without covetousness." "This know, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come, men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, . . . without natural affection, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." "Having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away." Christian professor, are you exempt from all these charges? The day of trial is near. Alas! what difference can be perceived between the mass of professing christians of these last times and the world at large? Are not the former as eager to secure its wealth, and honors, and pleasures, as the latter class? Though Christ has plainly stated, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth." Also, "Love not the world; if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord." In view of which, shall we not exclaim, "Who then is that faithful and wise steward?" Are you, christian professor? If not, then will you not now take heed to all these commands of Christ, and be a "doer of the word?" "Sell that ye have, and give alms." "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning." "And ye like unto men that wait for their Lord." "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord when he cometh shall find so doing." Will you be found so doing? or shall you be of that class who will have their portion with unbelievers? Remember the promise is only to those who shall be found doing God's will. "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Does not this imply that but few will be found faithful, while all the earth is corrupt before God? Even as it was in the days of Noah and Lot, will it not thus also be, "when they shall say to the rocks and mountains, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath is come, and who shall be able to stand?" Who shall be able but those to whom this will apply—"Blessed are they that do his commandments"? Shall you be found so doing? S. L. MANLY.

Suppose he Should?

A brother in the far West, who has read my articles on Human and Divine Governments, and liked them, yet not seeing all the way through, writes to me, asking, "Suppose a president, or a king, should get converted to Christ, should he resign his office?" Several have asked the same question, and I propose to answer it through the Crisis, by permission. I reply, yes, I see no other course such an one could pursue and follow Christ. Let him resign, and leave the office to the next in command, and so on. Is this too much of a stoop? Is it too great a cross? Ah! we have not seen it a thing. Pilate, only a Roman governor, refused to yield for fear of this cross, when convinced of [illegible] (Acts 26), and would doubtless have become a christian had it not been that the cross of leaving his throne for such a cause seemed too much. Saul of Tarsus was under authority to arrest and imprison, papers legally made out; but when he concluded to follow Christ, he abandoned his office and preached Christ. Perhaps some petty offices may be filled by the christian without forfeiting Christ. We do not attempt to decide on this point, but suggest that it has always been one of the devil's traps to allure from Christ, and it is safe to let it alone entirely. But in the case of those offices which bind their occupants to "avenge," to forbid bread, clothing and comfort to enemies, to harass, imprison, and kill, the light of the gospel covenant and its precepts are too plain to be evaded, or covered up. All such work is to be done in this mortal, wicked state. But it is intended entirely to be the work of Cæsar's household. These are among Cæsar's rights, if in fact he has any rights. Therefore "render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's."

Yet some one may quote Paul's instruction in 1 Cor. 7:—"Let every man abide in the same calling wherein he was called." Whoever will carefully read this chapter, can readily see that no reference is had to the subject we are treating upon. Those who try to play the christian emperor, king, or president, have the notorious Constantine the Great as their only prototype, though many of them may may be much better men than he was." What is the chaff to the wheat?" I do not here attempt the proofs of this position, as I gave them at length in my former articles.

I. C. WELLCOME.

Richmond, Me., April 11, 1862.

For the Crisis.

"Be ye not called Rabbi."

The words come rolling down to us through the aisles of ages, and ring through our hearts with the silvery chimes of truth. O that they could move the pulses of the world as they did those of the lowly fishermen who heard them in all their stirring music, fresh from the hallowed lips of the Son of God! But between that ancient sacred hour and the present, floats many a dim veil of antiquity, many a crimson curtain of war, many a deep mask of priestcraft, and many a dark cloak of superstition. The antichrist has arisen and crimsoned the sands of earth with the blood of martyrs slain; the great throbbing heart of humanity has been bound by the iron chains of popery, and the grandeur of human intellect and the God-given right of free investigation have been proscribed by the narrow bounds of priestly tyranny. Men have arrogated to themselves titles which belong only to Jehovah. The Pope of Rome, in his blasphemy, has styled himself "Most Holy Lord God the Pope"; and the petty priests who crouch at his feet command the title of "Reverend," regardless of the fact that inspiration applies it to Omnipotence only. Not only do the Papal See and his weak devotees thus exhibit the traits of the Antichrist, but the taint has floated down the stream of Protestantism; and poor frail man, ever ready to aggrandize himself, claims the title of "Rev." Hence the world is flooded with those who "love the uppermost rooms at the feasts, and the chief seats in the synagogues, and greetings in the markets, and to be called of men, Rabbi, Rabbi."

O that the professed ministers of Christ could content themselves to wait for their honors until they hear the welcome applaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant"! Surely mankind is more in danger of arrogance than of an excess of that charity which "vaunteth not itself, and is not puffed up." It is true that Paul sought to magnify the work of the ministry, and would that every minister would seek to magnify the work as he did. He did not strive to do it by exalting himself; he did not wear the appellation of "Rev. Paul"; but magnified the work by expounding a pure gospel, by "preaching the kingdom of God, and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ"; and in the humility of his soul exclaims, "For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of." The Psalmist, the sweet singer of Israel, when contemplating the grandeur of Omnipotence, exclaims, "Holy and reverend is his name." But the force of this text is sometimes evaded by arguing that it would also prove that no man should be holy. But this is taking an adjective from a name and applying it to a person. The text does not apply to character, but to a name. And though we are commanded to be holy, there is a curse pronounced upon those who assume holiness, and "appear righteous unto men," etc. The Son of God, the embodiment of purity, refused to be called "good." How then shall sinful man assume a title which is only applied to the Eternal? "And he said unto him, Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God." And were the ministers of the nineteenth century enough like Him whom they profess to follow, they would, when addressed as "Rev.," reply, "Why callest thou me reverend? there is none reverend but one, that is God."

Let us then rejoice in the simplicity of God's word,—"Neither let me give flattering titles unto men; for I know not to give flattering titles; in so doing my Maker would soon take me away."—Job 32: 21, 22. We must seek humility now, that that we may be honored in the kingdom. "For it is better that it be said unto thee, Come up higher, than that thou shouldst be put lower in the presence of the prince." Let us then shun the highways of earthly glory, and the dazzling brightness of worldly honors, and walk in the green vale of humility, remembering that "Whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

Harvard, Ill. LIZZIE A. REED.

For the Crisis.

"Fruit of the Spirit."

The irreversible declaration of inspiration is, "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Our mortal bodies are to be quickened into immortal life, only upon one condition, namely, the present indwelling of the Divine Spirit. Now if we are in possession of this important element, the fact will be obvious to ourselves, and to others; for we shall have the "fruit of the Spirit," which is,—First, "Love," Divine love, "Love Divine, all love excelling." Secondly, "Joy," unearthly joy, akin to angelic joy. Thirdly, "Peace," sweet heaven-born peace. Fourthly, "Long-suffering," or a spirit of patience under trials. Fifthly, "Gentleness," which will not permit us to retaliate when reviled. Sixthly, "Goodness," that will not render evil for evil. Seventhly, "Faith," by which we are "sanctified," "justified," and "purified." Eighthly, "Meekness," a spirit of self abasement. Ninthly, "Temperance," or self-control; a proper control over our various propensities, keeping ourselves in due subjection to the Divine will. These constitute the "fruit of the Spirit"; and wherever the Spirit has full possession of the heart, these traits of character will be clearly discernible. Do they characterize us? W. SHELDON.

The Coming Kingdom.

(Concluded.)

"And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever."—Rev. 11: 15.

A very remarkable modern testimony brings the record much further down. Le Sage, the friend of Napoleon, while with him in St. Helena, drew up, for their mutual employment, a series of charts of history. He delineated the empires of this world, and their subdivisions, on his charts, by separate colors. But with no consciousness of the value of his testimony, like Daniel, he divides the history of the world into four empires, and marks them by the same successive names. The Greek he divides into four, and then into two parts; the Roman into two, and then into ten. Neither Ptolemy nor Le Sage probably knew or thought of Daniel. Yet they have followed with the record of historic testimony—the one seven hundred and forty-five years, and the other two thousand four hundred and fifty years, after him—precisely in the track of his prophetic statement. Daniel said to his royal master in Babylon, there are to be four successive kingdoms of this world. Le Sage, two thousand four hundred and fifty years after, said to his royal master in St. Helena, who had vainly attempted to recombine a fifth, there have been but four great empires of the earth successively ruling: and he traces the line from Nebuchadnezzar to Napoleon.

These are "the kingdoms of this world." They have made one unbroken line of succession, in complete identity; so that Rome is properly called Babylon, as inheriting the same dominion of apostasy, in a different age. The empire is one running through different languages. The empire of Rome commenced with Babylon. The empire of Babylon concludes and is completed by Rome. And, therefore, when St. John calls Rome "Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth," it is not in a merely figurative, but in a real application of the epithet. Babylon was the origin of this idolatrous and infidel apostasy in human government, to which Rome has succeeded, and which Rome perpetuates.

A remarkable fact in this connection, is the complete adoption by the Pope of the royal dress of the ancient kings of Babylon, worn nowhere else upon the earth. Strabo and Herodotus both describe the ancient garb. The ring upon the finger, the slipper on the foot, the toe of which tributary kings bowed down to kiss; the white tunic or cassock, hanging down to the feet; the large white cloak upon the shoulders; the high, round cap, with pendant fillets, which it was death for any other to wear; the attendants clothed in scarlet, with chains of gold about the neck. Who that has ever seen this self-styled universal monarch on his public festivals, has not beheld the description exactly, like Nebuchadnezzar raised again from the dead. His tiara, the inimitable cap of royalty in Babylon; his long, white tunic; his white satin cloak, embroidered with golden stars: his cardinals preceding, clothed from head to foot in scarlet, with their massive chains of gold; himself borne on the shoulders of men clothed in scarlet, beneath a scarlet canopy, with attendants in scarlet, waving fans of peacocks' feathers in their hands—who that has intelligently seen this, has not been struck with this amazing assumption of identity? Yes, Rome is Babylon, and the fourth kingdom of the world, in its divided and mingled state, claims and bears a complete identity with the first.

Thus the testimony of history describes this final empire of this world. It stood, as the perfected image, with its feet upon Western Europe; but it included the whole limits of all previous dominion, from the Atlantic to the Indies, and from the Danube to the African desert. And the head of gold, the breast of silver, the trunk of brass, were all incorporated with the legs of iron, on which they finally stood, the perfected type of man's apostasy. The historical characteristics of these four successive kingdoms are most peculiar, and are significantly described. The magnificence of Babylon, as the head of gold; the scarcely inferior wealth and splendor of Persia, as the breast and arms of silver, have been the perfected illustrations of the mere dominion of sensual indulgence, from the time of their actual history to the present. But the mere forms of sensuality are not adapted to make a permanent impression upon human history, even in their power of reproduction of themselves. The empire of mere vice must perish in its own corruption. But when Alexander set up his vast Grecian empire, as the trunk of brass, the brilliancy of the illustration could not be confined to his own victorious career, or even to the power of the empire which he established. This third kingdom gave to man an universal and undying language. It perpetuated the earliest monuments of literature, philosophy, and the arts. The great Stagyrite who was the tutor of Alexander, and of whom be said that if from his father he had derived his life, from him, as his second father, he had derived the art of living well, remains to this day the tutor of Europe, in multitudes of its schools. Dr. Arnold commemorates him with perpetual delight, as "the dear old Stagyrite," as if he were the very source of scholastic inspiration. Greece has made an ineffaceable impression on the history of man—an impression as brilliant and abiding as the metal which was selected to represent it. To the lessons which it has taught in many departments of human learning, posterity has added nothing. The models of poetry and painting, of statuary and architecture—nay, even of the construction and utterance of the language of mind, are all still there; while the fundamental principles of philosophy, and the beautiful structure and regimen of language, still acknowledge their origin to be there also. Succeeding literature and beautiful art have done but little, save to study and to try to copy what this brilliant empire gave to man. The language which gave wings of beauty to the speculations of Plato, and towered in the majestic orations of Demosthenes, and glowed in the fire of the great tragedians, was also caught up to heaven, to convey, through the teaching of the Holy Ghost, those wonderful themes of divine redemption, which, without him, it was impossible for man to utter. It can never become obsolete on earth, while man remains to read the living word. It can never be forgotten in heaven, while saints survive to glorify the riches of atoning love. And Greece remains, and must remain still a living empire in the world.

Severe, warlike, pitiless, enduring Rome made up the iron legs on which this brilliant trunk was to stand. Its government inflexible; its discipline unyielding; its very weapons all of iron; its yoke of bondage iron; its heart of iron, knowing no pity; shedding blood like water; dragging captive kings in chains, then publicly whipping and killing them as the pastime of a banquet; its women shouting in triumph over men murdering each other by hundreds, as the sport of the theatre; its thousands of battles, and its millions of slaughtered victims; its very lusts and pleasures steeped in cruelty—how could all this be more truly described? It overthrew, it consolidated, it [illegible] all the nations whom it subdued; and made the one privilege of citizenship of Rome to be the single coveted distinction of the world. On all these characterizing facts I need not dwell. But Rome has also sent down the impression of her severity and her iron rule upon the nations whom she has propagated as the living parts of herself. As Greece gave brilliant art to civilized men, so Rome has given to them enduring iron law. Her statutes and pandects and commentaries remain the standard and foundation of human law, to all the nations who either remain in her seats or have originated from her divisions. The laws of her Twelve Tables; the names of her great codifiers and expounders—her Justinians, Ulpians, and Salvians—are as familiar to the student of the great science of law, in this nineteenth century, and with almost as much authority, as a thousand years ago. And that immense empire, four thousand miles in length from east to west, and two thousand miles in width from north to south, over which Augustus ruled, and which Trajan finally consolidated, abides the fourth and last kingdom of the apostasy of this world. And the prophetic description of the discriminating characteristics of these kingdoms of this world, historic testimony has completely confirmed through all succeeding ages since. The two grand divisions of this last empire into Eastern and Western; the internal distinction of its elements of power into a civil and an ecclesiastical dominion, combined like iron and clay, but never united; mingled, but always separate, have been facts of history, upon the details of which I need not dwell

But when we descend to the modern history of this last empire, the prophetic description maintains an accuracy, the demonstration of which never fails. "Whereas thou sawest the feet and toes, part of potter's clay and part of iron, the kingdom shall be divided; there shall be in it of the strength of the iron, and the kingdom shall be partly strong and partly broken; and they shall not cleave one to another, even as the iron is not mixed with the clay." Beyond the Danube and the Rhine, were spread out the vast Asiatic tribes, whose incursions upon the Roman Empire, and settlement within its territories, have made the foundation of the history of modern Europe. Ten different nations from this northern region, speaking kindred dialects, crossed these bounding rivers, established themselves on the whole southern and western territory, and became the progenitors of the present nations of Europe. They were idolaters and savages. But as an unprecedented fact in history, though so clearly delineated before in the divine prophetic records, they became absorbed in the characteristics of the people whom they conquered. Every previous subjugation had given new laws, religion, and customs to the vanquished. These conquering nations adopted the religion and the laws which marked the people whom they subdued. Within a single century, they had become professedly christian; and with the laws, the language, and Religion of Rome, they made themselves parts of the Latin Empire and the Latin Church already existing. The prescribed internal division of the elements of power they also perpetuated. The iron and the clay were still mingled, but always separate. The priestly power they established with a faith and cruelty which exceeded all the precedents they found. The temporal power they exalted with an unquestioned control. Partly strong and partly broken, they remained, and they still remain the nations of Europe, the constituents of the Roman Empire, and generally the members and the managers of the Roman Church. Some of their original kingdoms abide to this day. Some have been crushed and conquered, and their dominions transferred to other hands. In some, the iron has resisted the clay more completely, as in France. In others, the clay has predominated over the iron, as in Spain. But thus these divided kingdoms have stood—tottering amidst revolutions; guarding themselves against assaults and overthrows; agitated sometimes in storms that have threatened complete destruction, and then subsiding to the bounds of their former settlements, like the ocean rocking itself to rest when the gale has passed—to prove the power and to confirm the faithfulness of God. Their children and representatives have spread abroad almost to fill the globe. These ten kingdoms have peopled continents unknown to history at the time of their parentage and their establishment, acknowledging their dependence in every court of law, in all the forms and systems of legislation and government, in every department of literature and science, and in the languages and habits which make the vehicles [illegible] modern discovery which have given it strength and energy—rapidity of communication, and intensity of influence and purpose; the union and mutual dependence, which commercial relations, and separate advancing national strength for mutual assault and defence, have made so indispensable to these wide-spread nationalities; the unprecedented advance of general knowledge, popular elevation, and facility of communication with each other—can justly be considered by us only as preparing the way for the great finishing developments of the purposes of God, as he has himself described them. And while all human appearances on this vast field warn the discriminating mind of the earthly statesman of the approach of changes and convulsions in the affairs of men, more important, and productive of vaster consequences than any political transformation which man has ever before seen, the word of God lays out before the christian mind, as the object of certain hope, the greatest of all possible revolutions, when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ; when, in the days of these kings, the God of heaven shall set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, and he shall reign forever and ever.

Of these kingdoms of this world, one pervading principle, like the life of an individual being, has been unceasingly manifest. They have been the successions of an apostate government on the earth; ruling in opposition to the word of God, in every age and in every land. The principle on which they have rested, is the single one of absolute sovereignty in man over man. The varying forms of this sovereignty have been but incidents in their career. The ambition, the glory, and the wealth of man have been the guiding power of their march to conquest; hesitating at no expedients because they were criminal; asking for no other reason for any conceivable violence or crime, but human glory and national or individual exaltation. Establishing idolatry, glorying in infidelity, reverencing any thing and everything but the Divine word, the governments of men have reigned upon the earth till our day—the most enlightened of them all—one compelling its own subjects and officers to sustain and reverence the most hateful and polluted idol-worship of India, and forcing for its own wealth the shocking cruelties of the opium trade upon the timorous but remonstrating millions of China; the other reigning under a constitution which is declared at the same time to have no cognizance of the God of Heaven, and to render lawful and protected the cruelties and enormities of the slave-trade; both of them living upon the gains of licensed drunkenness, and refusing to protect even their own subjects against its power. While these things are done in the green tree, it is not worth our while to inquire what is done in the dry. If apostasy from the word of God marks the governments of Britain and America in these divisions of the last kingdom of man, the kingdoms of this world can plead no immunity from the charge in any other portion of the field of human empire. And these are the kingdoms of this world, described by God himself to Daniel, before their history began; and to John, in the conclusion of that history, by the bringing in the assurance of a better hope, and restoring the dominion of the Most High among the children of men.

Translations.

I take the following from one of my old manuscripts, viz., "Gen. 49: 10;—The sceptre shall not be taken away from Judah, nor a ruler from his thigh, till He come that is to be sent, and he shall be the expectation of nations." "Dan. 9: 24;—Seventy weeks are shortened upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, that transgression may be finished, and sin may have an end, and iniquity may be abolished; and everlasting justice may be brought; and vision and prophecy may be fulfilled; and the saint of saints may be anointed. Know thou therefore, and take notice: that from the going forth of the word, to build up Jerusalem again, unto Christ the prince, there shall be seven weeks and sixty-two weeks." "Matt. 11: 21;—They would long ago have done penance in sackcloth and ashes." "St. Gregory Nazianzen relates, that the diet of St. Peter was a small quantity of unsavory and bitter [illegible] called lupines, and sometimes of herbs, though on certain occasions he ate of what was set before him. St. Epiphanius says that St. James the great practised the most severe austerities, abstaining [illegible] flesh or fish, at different times. [illegible] St. John did not eat flesh at all. A Letter.

Dear Bro.—Yours bearing date of the 24th is just received, and in return I thank you for such a catholic epistle. It truly breathes the spirit of the new covenant ordained of God and ratified by the precious blood of Immanuel, the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world.

After I parted from you in Bristol I went to Watertown, and delivered four lectures in the Citizens' Hall. But having to drive four miles to and from the above place every night, and the house not being properly warmed, and considering the price demanded too high, I closed them to a very intelligent and deeply interested congregation on the evening of the 14th; and visited and endeavored to break the bread of life to the scattered flock at different places since that time until Monday the 24th, when we reached home in the midst of a pelting storm, having drove about twenty-six miles in a sleigh. Weary, worn and wet by the rain, home, after an absence of some weeks, did seem truly delightful.

Well, dear Bro. H., I sympathize with you in your very feeble state of health, for I have felt for many long years the working of the seeds of mortality in mine own poor, feeble body, and like yourself I find a sweet foretaste in antedating the glories of the bright, eternal future. O! what a serene and immortal state awaits thee, dear saint, at the return of our Elder Brother; and then the sweet consciousness of the fact by faith drawn from the living oracles of the God of Jeshurun, that there is an absolute necessity in the present exhausted condition of the prophetic programme, that the day when sin and all its dire effects shall be eternally annihilated is just about to dawn upon us. Thrice blessed, bliss-inspiring hope! That body of thine that has for fifteen long years been gradually wasting away, shall in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, be changed like unto our great living Head's glorious body! And then to be forever with the Lord, to participate in that glory that shall fill the earth as the waters do the unfathomable deep.

> When all the ship's company meet, who lived for our Savior on earth,
> With shouting each other they greet, and triumph o'er sorrow and death
> Their sufferings have come to an end, the mortal affliction is past;
> The age in the kingdom they spend, forever and ever shall last.

Blessed consummation of our long fondly cherished hope. Next to being forever with the Lord and like him, the most transcendant anticipation that sometimes ravishes my entire being, and makes my heart-strings groan and sigh for immortality, is the re-union of the saints in the indissoluble bands of eternal brotherhood, in one perpetual now, with all the just made perfect; where

> "No groans shall mingle with the songs
> That warble from immortal tongues."

You speak of the love of Jesus. On that theme I am lost in wonder, and often with silent adoration while pondering on its vast, immeasurable depths, would fain do as Aaron did when Moses spake to him in the third verse of the tenth chapter of Leviticus. Dear pilgrim Bro., the unending cycles of the immortal state can never fathom the depth, height, length and breadth of the incomprehensible love of Jesus. One sings—

> "Were the whole realm of nature mine,
> It were a present far too small!
> Love so amazing, so divine,
> Demands my life, my love, my all."

He shall have them. Worthy the Lamb that was slain! Beloved, dost thou suffer pain? "And there shall be no pain." Does poverty press thee sometimes? The saints shall possess the kingdom. Are thy friends few? A great multitude that no man can number shall be thy kindred. Art thou often weary in this world of unrest? There remaineth a rest for the people of God. Dost thou often weep o'er suffering humanity? There no object can ever inspire sorrow. Dost thou often find relief for thy griefs in weeping? There all tears shall be wiped away. Does the night of weeping often seem dark and dreary? "And there shall be no night there." The Lord God giveth them light, and they shall reign forever and ever. Amen. Of the love of Jesus we at the best know comparatively little in the present state, although we do often enjoy much, and feel a godly awe that dares not move, a solemn, silent heaven of love; yet it will require glorified humanity, it seems to me, amid the unfoldings of the immortal state, in order to begin to see the love of God in Christ Jesus to a lost and ruined world. Dear Hiram, we must be there.

O! what a precious season we enjoyed this morning in our united family devotion (for we unite every morning and evening when we are at home with Bro. and Sister Pease, who live in the adjoining part of the house). We read the last chapter of Luke, and we enjoyed some of the heavenly heart-burn expressed in the 32d verse. Praise the Lord, O my soul!

We are now, it seems to me, amid the perils of the last days; and it may be that our heavenly Father will intensify our trials, to purify and purge us, that we may be found amid the Bride, the Lamb's wife, who hath made herself ready, who hath washed her robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. O Lord! in mercy help! help by faith to sink into the life-cleansing fountain, shall be my prayer, until I fall asleep in Jesus, or be changed at his glorious appearing. Pray for me when at the throne of heavenly grace, and please remember me to the brethren who have kindly invited me to come and preach the word of life to them.

> "Soon will the mortal strife be o'er
> Of sublunary care,
> And life's dull vanity no more
> This anxious breast ensnare."

Thy Bro. in Christ, waiting for redemption at the appearing of Jesus.

The World's Crisis

AND

SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Wednesday, May 7, 1862.

"Boasters."

Paul tells us "that in the last days . . . men shall be . . . boasters." We think no one can fail to notice this particular trait of character, so marked in the men of our day. Please take up a newspaper and read the advertisements, if you have any doubt in the matter. Observe the handbills posted in the streets of our cities and villages. Almost every one is characterized by a boasting spirit. They are all "Excelsior." Each one is the best—nothing else equal to it. If a man can afford to pay out from one to fifty thousand dollars for boasting advertisements, he is pretty sure to make a fortune. These boasting notices are the chief support of most of the newspapers of the day. Immense sums are also paid to the daily and weekly papers of our country for editorial puffs, in addition to regular advertisements.

Each salesman tells you his goods are "the cheapest and best," while his neighbor's are hardly worth taking as a gift. If you want a "genuine" article, you must buy at his store. It seems as though our race had nearly turned boasters, each trying to excel his neighbor.

It should be observed that this system of boasting by means of advertisements is of modern date; and has now become so conspicuous, that it would seem we need not wait another day for its accomplishment, in order to have it fulfilled before the coming of Christ; yet, we may expect to see this boasting spirit increase to the end of this dispensation.

The picture would not be so dark as now, if this antichristian boasting spirit was confined to the world; but alas! the professed church of Christ is fast partaking of the same disposition. We think the prophecy shows that this spirit will characterize the popular religion of "the last days." The proof is abundant that such is the fact at the present time. All the signs seem to be converging to one grand focal point, but a short distance in the future. Our work is almost done. Let the remainder be well done.—o.

Infidelity.

Infidelity was never marching through our land with so bold a front, and with so great success as at the present time. It has assumed new and very successful modes of attack, and its friends feel confident of final triumph. These are dark times for this wicked world; but the Lord is the hope of his people, and they have nothing to fear so long as they trust in him. Men are turning by the thousand from the Bible to fables. But few stand with firmness in opposition to the swelling tide of skepticism. One after another yields to the mighty current; and we may well be alarmed at the state of things. Now is the time to gird on the christian armor, and fight the good fight of faith.

The following from the Bible Times shows the true state of things:—

"The Bible just now is assailed by a most remarkable multiplicity of enemies. Anti-theism, denying God; deism, dreaming of God; and polytheism, analyzing God; are all, with nearly equal inveteracy, still as ever opposed to the revelation of God. But, besides these ancient and gigantic hostilities, innumerable inferior and yet arrogant and artful agencies of infidelities are constantly at work around us insidiously sapping the foundation of our highest and noblest hopes."—o.

Wasting Away.

It is now very evident that the power of the Pope is wasting rapidly, and must soon come to an end. There appears to be no chance to continue it much longer. This fact is admitted by the Catholics themselves. Many think Pius IX is the last Pope. His health is now poor, and it is thought his life must soon close. The waters which have strengthened the mystical Babylon are nearly dried up, and her overthrow is at hand.

A correspondent of the London Daily News, writing from Malta, Feb. 8th, says:—

"There is to-day handed about Malta a very long and well written protest to the Pope, printed at Naples, and signed by about sixty thousand of the Roman Catholic priests. Several chapters have affixed their official seal to it, and it looks very like Protestantism, but they call it pure Roman Catholicism. It urges the Pope to abandon his temporal power, to restore the church to its primitive state, and to remember that a great majority of his clergy are from his people."—o.

"We'll face the Storm."

There is a kind of luxury in facing the storm, bearing reproach, suffering privation, and denying self, for an object so noble as that of christianity, and a friend so dear as Jesus. The minister of Christ is often saddened to see the want of these noble attributes that once characterized the followers of the Lord. Be the weather what it may, it is expected the preacher will be there; while many of the professed disciples of the Savior only get out to meeting in fair weather, when they are tired of staying at home; leaving the preacher at other times to address empty slips. Did they know the sorrow they thus cause him, we think their seats would seldom be vacant; but they would manifest more of the spirit exhibited in the following incident in the ministerial life of Dr. Baker:—o.

"Whilst living at Germantown, thirty odd years ago, I was to have preached one Sabbath morning at Barren Hill, seven or eight miles distant. On awaking in the morning the rain was descending in torrents, and the wind blowing a perfect hurricane. I debated with myself whether I ought to go. I concluded to go. Having taken breakfast and ordered my horse and gig, I started for Barren Hill. But lo! I had not proceeded more than a quarter of a mile, when, in spite of the leather top and apron, I was drenched to the skin. Crossing the hillsides the storm threatened to overturn my vehicle, and my poor horse trembled. Still I went forward. By the time of my arrival at the church there was not a dry thread upon me, and I could not have been more saturated with water had I been dipped in the Delaware. And now, on my arrival, how many people do you suppose I found at the church?

We began with the Abraham number, 'fifty.

'Entirely too high,' exclaimed the doctor.

'Forty-five,' was the next conjecture, which elicited the same response.

'Forty,' was the next number stated, with the same result.

'Thirty,' said we next, still keeping in view father Abraham's descending scale; but still the doctor said, 'Too high! too high!'

'Twenty,' was next given as the probable number, and then 'ten,' when we gave up.

'I will tell you,' said the doctor, at length, in his own emphatic way, 'how many people came through that storm to hear me preach; not one, sir, not one! not one! Even the sexton himself, who lived immediately opposite, had not ventured to cross the street.'

'And how did you feel, doctor,' asked we, 'on finding that your self-sacrificing labors had met with such a poor return?'

'Never happier and more contented in my life,' was the noble reply, 'for I felt that if all the world that day had neglected their duty, I had not neglected mine.'"

The World's Fair.

According to appointment, the World's Fair in London was to open on Thursday, May 1st. It is thought that this exhibition will greatly surpass the one in 1851. When the first was held, many thought it would help in uniting the nations and prevent future wars: but instead of this, a writer in the London News says that Emperor Nicholas thought "the time to strike for Constantinople would be a time like that, when all probable opponents were disarming in a fool's paradise of fraternity. Certain it is that peace among the nations, which was the great text of the exhibition, derived but little strength or advantage from its teaching. It almost seemed to be the close rather than the inauguration of an era of good will among mankind; and its doors were scarcely shut against the multitude, and its marvellous products restored to their owners or creators, when war reasserted its predominance as one of the normal conditions of European politics. . . . And, from that day to this, such have been the fears and the necessities of the world that art, science, and mechanical ingenuity have been devoted with greater zeal and perseverance to the construction of implements of warlike attack and defence than to the improvement of the peaceful machinery that increases the wealth of nations. War has been so much the rule and peace so greatly the exception in Europe as well as in America, that the preacher delivers but a trite sermon who merely reminds us of the fact that, notwithstanding all our vain glorious boasting of our 'progress,' we are not so much wiser than our forefathers as we are fain to be reputed."

Judging from the past, the present World's Fair is no omen of future good to Europe or the rest of the world. All such efforts to introduce a reign of peace, we think will result in a failure.—o.

The real Savior.—At the late Spiritual Convention, held March 7th, 8th and 9th, in Binghampton, N. Y., the following resolution was presented:—

"Resolved, That true Spiritualism is the offspring of progress, the friend of science, and the real 'Savior of the world.'"

This Savior leads men to deny the Bible, the resurrection of Christ and the rest of the dead, his second coming, and the entire plan of salvation as laid down in the Scriptures of truth; but notwithstanding all this amount of error taught by the demons, millions prefer their teaching to the truth of the Lord; hence, as Paul says, "They . . . believe a lie," and have "pleasure in unrighteousness." Those who expect salvation through Spiritualism are as sure of it as a man left in mid ocean would be of swimming ashore.—o.

Passover Bread.—It is said the Jews in New York ordered eighteen hundred barrels of flour to make their passover bread this spring. It is of the best quality, and furnished by Hecker and Brothers. This amount of flour, for that special purpose, indicates a large number of Jews for only one American city.—o.

War Chaplains.

It has been a mystery to us how any one, who loves Jesus, and enjoys the christian religion, can enlist in the army to assist in killing his fellow men; but we are still more astonished that ministers of the gospel, whose work is to lead men to Christ, should join the army to pray for success in the destruction of the human race, believing at the same time, that those killed on the side of the enemy, saying nothing about those of their own regiments, are cut off for ever from all opportunities to reform, and sent to eternal torment! We can see no correspondence between the spirit of such ministers and that of Christ, who taught his disciples to love their enemies.

The following, from the N. Y. Atlas, is worthy of a second reading:—

"The number of chaplains officially reported is four hundred and twenty-two, ninety-seven of whom belong to the New York regiments. The chaplains cost the government more than a million of dollars a year, and we mean no disrespect to the clergy, when we say we do not believe they have saved a life or a soul since the rebellion commenced. War and religion are not exactly compatible."

Four hundred and twenty-two ministers in the army!! Said the one who called them to be his servants in preaching the gospel of peace, "My kingdom is not of this world; if my kingdom were of this world, then would my servants fight." Their present position seems to prove one of two things,—either that Christ's kingdom is "of this world"; or, else, that they are not his servants.—o.

A Prophecy.

A few days since, while passing through Hartford, Ct., we called on Bro. Stillman, who informed us of an interesting writing on a box in the Talcott mansion. As our curiosity was little excited, we sought an opportunity to examine the writing; and by the kindness of a friend, who is an acquaintance of the family, were introduced to the lady of the house, who very kindly showed us the box and the writing. The box is very ancient, and a nice piece of workmanship, made probably in the East Indies. It has several apartments, separated from each other by sliding divisions. On the back side of one of these we found the following, in the old-fashioned style of writing, scarcely legible:—

"In July 14th, 1866, America's fate is fixed.—Hezekiah Wyllys.

July 14th, Anno Domini 1766.

O! Posteri! Posteri! cavete vos in Anno 1866.—Propheticus est."

The following is the English of the Latin:—O! Posterity! Posterity! be on your guard in the year 1866. This is prophetical.—o.

Well Done.

The New York Post speaks of a man in middle life, who left off smoking twenty-five years ago, and put in the bank what he would have paid for two or three cigars a day, and now finds it has amounted to $2590.

Besides all this financial profit, the physical benefit derived is of still greater value. The amount of money squandered for tobacco at the present day is almost incredible. It is said more money is paid for cigars alone in New York than for bread. This is too bad, when we consider the fact that all this money is paid for that which is a positive injury to those who use it. Who can do it to the glory of God?—o.

Popular Preaching.—The following extract from a letter of a lady to her son at college gives quite a correct idea of the popular preaching of the day; and shows very clearly, that we have come to the time when sermons are delivered to suit "itching ears;" as Paul tells us would be the case in the last days. The lady says:

"Dr. M. is giving a series of sermons on the different kinds of wood used in building Solomon's Temple. They are very interesting, and he has such a flow of beautiful words, and such wavy gestures, and he looks so gentlemanly, that I have no doubt he does a great deal of good. The church is always full.—o.

A Thrilling Narrative, by M. B. Czechowski, who was fifteen years a Roman Catholic clergyman and priest. Edited by J. F. Cotton.

We have just received a copy of this very interesting and elegantly written work by a most eminent scholar, giving startling facts relative to the practices of the "woman" on "the seven hills," and her cruel treatment of the children of the Lord.

Price 87 cts. postage paid. Address J. F. Cotton, box 1079, Boston, Mass.—o.

"He chewed tobacco."—We clipped the following from the Windham County Transcript, published in Danielsonville, Ct.:—

"Last Friday, April 11th, the New England Methodist Conference, sitting at Westfield, was brought to a stand in the case of a person asking admission to their connection, on the objection that he chewed tobacco!! During the discussion raised, a large majority were opposed to receiving any new member using tobacco; and so the case was laid over."—o.

Biographical Sketches.—No. 5.

REV. WILLIAM MILLER.

William Miller was born in the town of Pittsfield, Mass., Feb. 15th, 1782, and was the eldest of sixteen children. When four years old his parents removed to Hampton, N. Y., a few miles east of Whitehall, at the head of Lake Champlain, where the subject of our sketch was reared, and where he died. We find nothing occurring in his life that gave special indication of superior talents until his entering upon the ministry, when immediately, and evidently unexpectedly to himself, he began to attract the attention of people far and near.

In his early youth he failed to enjoy many of the advantages usually deemed necessary to give culture and polish to the man; but notwithstanding, the opportunities afforded gave ample evidence of a capacious and ardent mental calibre. He not only made good progress in his ordinary studies, but early gave demonstration of ability in prose and poetic composition; as also of that taste that ultimately made him such a master in Civil and Ecclesiastical History. Upon coming to act the part of a man, we find him appointed to several important offices of trust and profit, illustrative of the confidence reposed in him. But during these early years he had fallen in company with several men of eminence, from whom he had imbibed deistical sentiments, which had finally become confirmed by the writings of the most popular authors of the Infidel school

In 1810, we find him entering upon military life; and in 1814 he received commission as Captain under President Madison, and was ordered without delay to Plattsburgh, N. Y. It is said by his biographer that Captain Miller's was a station of great importance, and few men acted their part better than he. A few items of his military life may not be out of place in this sketch. In a letter in which he has occasion to speak of army discipline, we find him speaking of what was called picketing:—"First, a gallows is raised, about ten feet high, then their arms are extended and fastened above by ropes; then a picket drove into the earth, on which they are to stand until they receive sufficient punishment; and we seldom have to punish them the second time. I had one on the picket to-day for threatening to shoot one of my sergeants, and swearing he would not obey any officer except the Captain. This in an army is a great crime, therefore I could do no less than to make a public example. When he was first put up he was very turbulent, and hoped he might die if he repented of what he said; but, after standing one hour, he became as penitent as a lamb, and prayed and begged to be released. 'O dear, Captain,' said he, 'do take me down—I shall die! I will never commit another crime. For heaven's sake, release me!' I took him down, as you may well believe; and it wrung tears from my eyes to see how thankful the poor fellow was." In the same letter he says, "The British are within ten miles of this place, and we expect a battle to-morrow. . . . They are ten or eleven thousand strong, and we are only fifteen hundred; but every man is determined to do his duty."

Writing from Fort Scott, Sept. 12th, 1814, we find him saying—"Yesterday was a day of great joy. We have conquered! we have drove them! About 9 o'clock A. M., yesterday, the British fleet fired a salute as they passed Cumberland-head; it was a token for a general engagement. About twenty minutes after they hove in sight. How majestic, how noble, our fleet lay in Plattsburgh Bay, and, like a saucy Yankee, paid no attention to their royal salute! The British fleet still bearing down upon us, bold as a lion, in a moment we were all prepared for action. The British had thrown up a number of batteries on all sides of us. The next minute the cannon began playing—spitting their fire in every quarter. What a scene! All was dreadful!—nothing but roaring and groaning for about six or eight hours. I cannot describe to you our situation. The fort I was in was exposed to every shot. Bombs, rockets and shrapnel shells fell thick as hailstones. Three of my men were wounded, and one killed. . . In one hour and forty-five minutes the enemy's fleet was conquered. My God! what a slaughter on all sides! Out of 300 on board of one ship, 24 only remained unhurt. * * * A naval and land engagement, within the compass of a mile or two, and fifteen or twenty thousand engaged at one and the same time, is superior to anything my eyes ever beheld before. How grand, how noble, and yet how awful! The roaring of cannon, the bursting of bombs, the whizzing of balls, the popping of small arms, the cracking of timbers, the shrieks of the dying, the groans of the wounded, the commands of the officers, the swearing of soldiers, the smoke, the fire,—everything conspires to make the scene of a battle both awful and grand! The fort I was in was on the bank of the lake, and in plain view of everything that passed."

Mr. Miller at one time had a conversation with Judge Stanley, by which he became sensible of the fact that, with deism, there was no hope of a future life—a fact most abhorrent to his natural feeling, and upon which he was led to meditate deeply during the scenes of death witnessed in the battle of Plattsburgh. In a letter to his wife dated at Plattsburgh, he says:—"But a short time, and, like Spencer, I shall be no more. It is a solemn thought. Yet, could I be sure of one other life, there would be nothing terrific; but to go out like an extinguished taper, is insupportable—the thought is doleful. No! rather let me cling to that hope which warrants a never-ending existence—a future spring, where troubles shall cease, and tears find no conveyance," etc. On one occasion his biographer relates that he was deeply affected by discovering one of his officers—a Sergeant Willey—was in the habit of maintaining a prayer-meeting, in the midst of the prevailing ungodliness of camp-life.

Upon the army being disbanded, Mr. Miller found himself with leisure, and a disposition to meditate upon divine things. We find him now dissatisfied with deism, and yet disposed to reject the Bible; when chancing one day to hear a sermon from Zech. 2: 4,—"Run! speak to this young man!" he suddenly found himself under a train of thought which ultimated in bringing him to the foot of the cross. On the Lord's day following, he undertook to read a sermon, by the request of a deacon, to a small congregation in the absence of a preacher, as he had sometimes done before; when his feelings were quite overpowered, and he obliged to take his seat. In this, as may be supposed, the congregation deeply sympathized with him. He says:—"Suddenly the character of a Savior was vividly impressed upon my mind. It seemed that there might be a Being so good and compassionate as to himself atone for our transgressions, and thereby save us from suffering the penalty of sin. I immediately felt how lovely such a Being must be; and imagined that I could cast myself into the arms and trust in the mercy of such an One. But the question arose, How can it be proved that such a Being does exist? Aside from the Bible, I found I could get no evidence of such a Savior, or even of a future state. I felt that to believe in such a Savior without evidence would be visionary in the extreme. I saw the Bible did bring to view just such a Savior as I needed: and I was perplexed to find how an uninspired book should develop principles so perfectly adapted to the wants of a fallen world. I was constrained to admit that the Scriptures must be a revelation from God. They became my delight; and in Jesus I found a friend. The Savior became to me the chiefest among ten thousand; and the Scriptures, which before were dark and contradictory, now became the lamp to my feet and light to my path. My mind became settled and satisfied. I found the Lord God to be a rock in the midst of the ocean of life. The Bible now became my chief study, and I can truly say, I searched it with great delight. I found the half was never told me. I wondered why I had not seen its beauty and glory, and marvelled that I could have ever rejected it. I found everything revealed that my heart could desire, and a remedy for every disease of my soul. I lost all taste for other reading, and applied my heart to get wisdom from God."—m.

The Pope's Temporal Power.

For a number of years past the students of prophecy have insisted upon it, that the Papal Hierarchy and the Eternal city must together go down, like a great millstone cast with violence into the Sea. This opinion however has been but "speculation" in the estimation of the unthinking mass. We recently published a statement of Garibaldi's, showing the deep-seated hatred felt in the Italian breast toward the Papacy. Yet of this it may be said, it is not remarkable that such should be the feeling among rash and aspiring men of Italy: but we insist upon it that such is the popular feeling of vast multitudes all over Europe. In proof of our statement we have now to lay before our readers the following statement from the pen of Dr. O. A. Brownson, Editor of the Catholic Review, and, as a Catholic, second only in the American estimate to Archbishop Hughes. In writing to the C. Herald and Visitor he says:—m.

"Besides, I have never opposed the temporal sovereignty of the Pope in his Ecclesiastical States, nor urged its surrender, save on the hypothesis that it is already virtually gone, and cannot be effectively sustained. Its loss, when I wrote, I looked upon as an accomplished fact, or likely to be so, in a near future. Assuming this, I suggested, argued, if you will, that the voluntary surrender, by the Holy Father, of his temporal principality, on the best terms then practicable, would contribute more to the political and social interests of the Peninsula, and to the interests of Catholicity, both in Italy and elsewhere, than a prolonged and unavailing struggle to maintain it against the almost universal popular sentiment."

Interesting Devotions.

The following from "The Catholic" will afford to many readers an interesting illustration of American Catholics' idea of the "efficacy of prayer in protecting and furthering the good of both ecclesiastical and civil society." And yet some Protestants affirm the Papal economy produces some fine christians. If this be so, we are sure it is not done by displacing the only "Mediator between God and man," and placing in His stead the myth of the blessed, but dead virgin.—m.

"The beautiful devotion of the month of May commences this week. If at all times the faithful Christian should implore the aid of the Mother of God, at this eventful period when so many important interests both in Church and State are to be decided, we should turn to Mary with more than usual fervor, imploring of her to continue to protect and defend the Sovereign Pontiff, to interpose her prayers in favor of the Bishops who are soon to be gathered around the Chair of the Chief Pastor, and to obtain for our country the termination of the present strife between brothers, and the return of a permanent peace."

The following is from the Pope's late Allocution, delivered by himself in Minerva Church:—

"May the most Holy Virgin, under whose all-powerful auspices we have been kept safe and sound up to this hour, deign to continue to us her protection; and may she inspire us with a perfect resignation to the Divine will."

A New German Tract.

Die Personliche Wiederkunft Jesu Christi, als der einzige Zeitpunkt unserer Erlösung. pp. 22.

This is a new tract from the pen of our dear friend and brother in the Lord, Louis Reimer of Philadelphia. The English of the title, if I read it rightly, is—"The Personal Return of Jesus Christ as the only time of our Redemption." I have submitted this tract to the judgment of a brother who is a German by birth, and who is also a gentleman of culture and a professor of languages in a New England University. He writes me as follows:—

"Your favor of the 24th inst. was received, and also a German tract on the personal coming of Christ, as the only period and hope of our redemption, for which I thank you, as well as for the one you sent me some time ago on the intermediate state of the dead. . . . I have, according to your request, and, as far as practicable, read over said German tracts critically and with care, and I am pleased to be able to add that I am delighted with them. I rejoice that you have found a friend so well qualified for the performance of the task. May the Lord preserve, bless and strengthen him! The language of said tracts is in perfectly pure German, capable of instructing, edifying and pleasing the best educated inquirer after truth, while at the same time it is within the comprehension of the mass of the people, for its style is natural, good and easy. The mechanical execution is remarkably correct. The doctrines of the tracts are sound, and agree with my own understanding and hearty apprehension of those important and glorious truths, though on some minor points I may differ a little." . . . etc. etc.

With so hearty a commendation from so respectable a source, I do not regret that I sent word to Bro. Reimer to stereotype this last tract at my expense, and have sent him the money to pay for it. He has these tracts on hand now. Who will order them, or send him means to go on still further with the work? We have hundreds of thousands of Germans in our land drifting into infidelity. Shall we not do something to save them? Send your money to Louis Reimer, 722 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, Pa. See notice, with prices, in another column.

I contemplate having other tracts issued in German soon. Probably "Plain Truths," the new enlarged edition, may soon be translated, if the Lord will. Of course it is not likely that these tracts will pay the expense of publishing; but still I think I shall try it a little, and trust that God will provide all needful means. Let us do what we can, not only for our own friends, but for "the stranger within our gates." Persons unable to purchase them can have German tracts free from the Publication Society, by sending to Miles Grant, Boston, Mass. Let every man supply his German neighbors, and let every man who can read German (High Dutch) have a chance to hear about redemption at the appearing of Christ. This German tract will be one of my regular issues, and can be furnished in any quantities and at any time by the author or by me. H. L. Hastings.

Correspondence.

From Bro. P. Tandy.

Bro. Grant:—I am yet a prisoner of hope, and not of despair. Am on the battle ground, with the whole armor on, ready to fight the battles of the Lord. Am not only a "volunteer for glory," but am ready to take the front rank; and I do earnestly pray that I may "endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." I do sincerely believe that the "signs of the times" and the fulfillment of prophecy do emphatically indicate the near second coming of Prince Emanuel, to establish his everlasting kingdom on the earth, "under the whole heavens." "Blessed is that servant whom his Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing," faithfully watching! Pray for me, all you that can, that I may be one of the inheritors with you of that thrice glorious and blessed kingdom which King Jesus is about to set up here, for the everlasting abode of his dear saints. May God bless his people, purify them, and make them white, for > "Those holy gates forever bar

> Pollution, sin and shame;
> None can obtain admittance there
> But followers of the Lamb."

It seems that the Lord is on the giving hand, and that mercy's door is not quite closed yet. In the town of Newport, N. H., where Bro. Wm. Sutherland and others have been laboring for God, the Lord has been pleased to pour out his Holy Spirit in a wonderful manner; and as the fruit of their faithful labors, twelve have been baptized, and a little church has been formed there. But I have some more good news to tell you. At the earnest solicitation of some of God's children, Brn. Sutherland and Cotton came into the north part of my native town (Goshen, N. H.), and commenced holding meetings in a school-house. The Lord was pleased to bless the word spoken by his faithful servants, and poured out his Holy Spirit even there in the "highways and hedges." Sinners were led to cry to God for mercy, and backsliders returned to their "Father's house, where there is bread enough and to spare." We had the joyous satisfaction last Sabbath (the 30th of March), of seeing Bro. Sutherland bury eleven willing converts in the liquid grave, in imitation of Christ's command. It was a solemn and interesting scene. The work is still progressing. Bro. S. now leaves for the present, and returns home to Conn. May God bless him wherever he may go, and make him an instrument in his hands of much lasting good to the sinner and to the church.

From A. D. Wood.

Bro. Grant:—There are a few in this place earnestly contending for the faith once delivered to the saints, striving to enter into the strait gate. Of late we have been making renewed efforts for the advancement of God's cause. Although we are peculiarly situated, not having any brethren to assist in our meetings, we determined to move forward in the strength of God, and he has blessed us abundantly. Some three weeks ago we started a public prayer-meeting. We felt weak, but God has been our strength. Praise his name! Our place of worship has been filled, sinners feel, some have been converted, others have said, We would see Jesus. God has stirred his children to feel earnestly for perishing sinners, and in answer to prayer they feel their need of Christ. The Sisters have to lead and sustain the meetings; but God is as willing to bless the efforts of the weak as the strong, if we trust in him. In Christ we are neither male nor female, but all one. Perhaps other places may be so situated. If there are, dear sisters, I would say, Move forward; in Jesus' name and strength you can do all things. We feel in our hearts to say, Here I am, Lord, send me. Any thing that God has for me to do, I am willing to do it. O that I may be the means of doing some good! I desire no greater honors bestowed on me than to have the approbation of my Master. Time is short. Has this so often sounded in our ears that it has become to us like an idle tale? I fear it has to many; nevertheless it is so; it is flying rapidly; no time to be idlers in God's vineyard now. Let us not sleep as do others. Tarry not in all the plain; escape for our life; dark clouds are gathering around, mantling earth with a frown, and wide spreads the thickening gloom. Be faithful. The warfare is almost ended. I hope God's watchmen will preach the word. Theory, as Bro. Sheldon says, will starve a church. We have felt its baneful effects. Yours looking for immortality when Jesus comes.

Surry, Me.

From Bro. Wm. Sheldon.

Bro. Grant:—It is a rare thing that I get a chance of late to listen to the preaching of the reputed orthodox, as my time is so constantly employed in preaching; but twice or thrice during the past winter I have listened to sermons which were rather more amusing than instructive. Upon one occasion the minister informed us that God had "neither hands or feet, or form, or shape"; but within five minutes he referred to Adam and Eve in the garden, and asserted that "God took Adam by the right hand, and Eve by the left hand, and led them around the garden." In the same sermon, he three times stated that Jericho was overthrown by the blowing of "tin horns"; from which we may infer that the ancient sheep were "tin horns"! Another one took for his text, Zech. 3: 9,—"Upon one stone shall be seven eyes." Ignoring the fact that the stone was a literal stone upon which seven literal eyes were engraven, as a symbol of something else, he plunged at once into the position that the stone spoken of was Christ, and that seven eyes were upon Christ, in the sense of looking at him. He attempted to enlighten us upon the matter as follows: 1. The eye of God was upon him, or looking at him. 2. The eye of the prophets was upon him. 3. The eye of the angels was upon him. 4. The eye of the devil was upon him. 5. The eye of the believer was upon him. 6. The eye of the sinner was upon him. 7. The eye of all the world was upon him. This is a sample of our western "orthodox gospel." After listening occasionally to such a mixture of ignorance and blind zeal, I feel like letting my feeble light shine to the best advantage.

Merrimack, Sauk Co., Wis.

From J. Blain.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to say to Brn. in Ill., that, "the Lord willing," I shall be at the Conference in Amboy, May 28th, and have with me a good supply of most of our works—such as those by Brn. Grant, Hastings, Hudson, Grew, my own, and others—also tracts from the Tract Society.

As it is my purpose to spend four or five months west, mostly in Illinois and Wisconsin, brethren in the region of the conference, or west of there, wishing me to visit them, can write me at Amboy, before the meeting closes. I wish Bro. McCulloch would say through the Crisis, or to me, by what R. R. we are to get from Chicago, and where to stop.

Buffalo, May 1, '62.

For the Crisis.

"Retribution."

Dear Bro. Grant:—I feel it a duty that I owe my heavenly Father, and to the dear brethren and sisters scattered abroad, to write a few lines concerning Bro. H. L. Hastings' work on "Retribution." It is the best and the greatest argument that ever I saw, or read in my life, concerning the resurrection of the just and unjust. I would say to the brethren sisters and friends, though you may have read all other books, don't fail to read "Retribution." Liberty Wetherbee.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Hillsburgh, N S, April 4th, 1862, of consumption, Elizabeth Ann, wife of Joseph C Rice, aged 26 years

Bro. Grant.—It becomes my painful duty to record the death of my little daughter, Florence Eliza, who quietly fell asleep Tuesday, March 18th, at four o'clock, P M., after an illness of about five days with diphtheria, which she bore very patiently. The Tuesday previous I had left her in a better state of health than either her father or mother. And so lively and cheerful was she, even during her sickness, that her danger was not realized soon enough for a word to reach me, that I might once more see her alive. Truly this is the saddest bereavement I have ever sustained, and so heavy is the [redacted] passing out on the back side, killing him instantly. Charles Bemis.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Capture of Fort Macon.

Beaufort, April 26. The Federal batteries opened yesterday morning upon Fort Macon, and after a severe bombardment of ten hours the rebels were compelled to ask for terms. They surrendered this morning, and were released on their parole of honor.

The fort was badly damaged by the fire of our batteries. The trophies consist of fifty pieces of artillery, five hundred muskets, and much other property. One Federal and seven rebel soldiers were killed during the fight. No New England troops were injured.

Cairo, Ill., May 4. Intelligence from the army before Corinth, up to last evening, has been received. Gen. Halleck has moved his headquarters twelve miles toward the front. Our advance was within two miles of the enemy's outer works. The entire column is still pressing forward.

Skirmishes between the advance and the rebels are of daily occurrence.

On Thursday, four hundred Germans from a Louisiana regiment, who had been sent out from the rebel camp on outpost duty, came into our lines in a body, with white flags on their guns, and gave themselves up as deserters.

Deserters confirm the report that Beauregard is being reinforced from all parts of the Gulf States by merchants and business men.

Rebel Evacuation of Yorktown.

Washington, May 4—12 30 P. M. The following report has just been received from Fortress Monroe:

"Yorktown was evacuated last night. Our troops now occupy the enemy's works. The enemy left a large amount of camp equipage and guns which they could not destroy for fear of being seen."

Headquarters Army of the Potomac, May 4th, 9 o'clock, A. M.

To Hon. E. M. Stanton, Secretary of War:

We have the ramparts, guns, ammunition, camp equipage, &c. We hold the entire line of his works, which the engineers report as being very strong. I have thrown all my cavalry and horse artillery in pursuit, supported by infantry. I move Franklin's division and as much more as I can transport by water up to West Point to-day. No time shall be lost. The gunboats have gone up York river. I omitted to state that Gloucester is also in our possession. I shall push the enemy to the wall.

(Signed) G. B. McClellan, Major General

Headquarters Army of the Potomac, May 4—10 A. M.

[From the Army Correspondent of the Associated Press.] This morning at five o'clock your correspondent entered the enemy's works, which the rear of their army deserted four hours before. Everything was found to be in utter confusion, as though they left in great haste. Between forty and fifty pieces of heavy artillery have been left on their works, after being spiked, together with a large amount of ammunition, medical stores, camp equipage and private property of their officers. A negro who was left in the town states that the rebels threw a large amount of ordnance stores into the river to prevent its falling into our hands.

Several deserters have succeeded in running into our lines. One of them, a very intelligent man, originally from New York, who has been connected with the rebel ordnance department ever since the works at Yorktown have been constructed, states that the rebels evacuated owing to the near approach of our parallels covering the immense siege works of our men, that they feared the success of the Union gunboats in the York and James rivers, by means of which their communication with the outer world would be cut off. The order to evacuate was given by Gen. Johnston, on Thursday, to commence the following morning, which was accordingly done.

Gen. Magruder was said to have most strenuously opposed the order, saying that if they could not whip the Federals here, there was no other place in Virginia where they could, that he swore in the presence of his men, who vociferously cheered him, losing complete control of himself.

Gen. Robert E. Lee, the rebel Commander-in-Chief, arrived at Yorktown on Wednesday and immediately examined the works of Gen. McClellan, when he is supposed to have recommended the abandonment of the rebel works, deeming them untenable.

The deserters all agree in stating that their troops were very much demoralized and disheartened when the order to evacuate was made public, as they all anticipated having an engagement at that point. They also agree that the rebels had 100,000 men on the peninsular, together with 400 pieces of field artillery.

From the best information received they have fallen back to Chickahominy Creek, beyond Williamsburg, where it is expected they will make a stand.

Immediately on the fact of the evacuation becoming known the troops were ordered under arms and are now in motion from the right and left wings of the army. A large force, under command of Gen. Stoneman, consisting of cavalry, artillery and infantry, are in the advance, and will probably come up with the rear of the enemy before night, if they remain near Williamsburg.

The gunboats have passed above Yorktown and are now shelling the shore on the way up. Following them is a large steamer and other vessels loaded with troops, who will effect a landing.

Magruder swore he was not afraid of McClellan if Lee was, and that if he could not successfully fight him here he could no where.

Only one man was left in Yorktown and he was a negro.

Gen. Jameson and Col. Samuel Black were the first to enter the enemy's main works. The only casuality that occurred was the killing of two men and wounding of three by the explosion of a concealed shell within the enemy's works.

LATER.

An official report just made to headquarters shows that the enemy left seventy-one guns on the works.

At Gloucester Point the guns and ordnance stores were also left.

Another deserter has just come in, and reports that Jeff. Davis came with Lee on Wednesday last, and after a consultation with the most prominent officers, all agreed to the evacuation except Magruder.

Inside the fortifications and along the Williamsburg road, on which they are retreating, they have buried torpedoes and percussion shells, which are occasionally exploding and injuring persons. Gen. Joseph Johnson's baggage has just been captured.

Fortress Monroe, May 4. The Merrimac made her appearance beyond Sewall's Point at one o'clock to-day. She stopped off the Point, and up to this hour has not changed her location. She is not attended by any other gunboat as usual. It is supposed that it is not her intention to visit us to-day. The Monitor and other vessels of the naval fleet are all in readiness for action on short notice, and are hoping she will come down. The supposed design of the enemy is to endeavor to prevent any expedition up James river to cut off the retreat from Yorktown.

Three deserters arrived here this morning in a rebel schooner. They report the evacuation of Mulberry Island and Jamestown early Tuesday morning.

Kansas City, May 3. The Santa Fe mail has arrived.

Another battle has taken place between Gen. Canby and the Texans at Povollo, on the Rio Grande, where the latter had fortified themselves. The enemy were defeated. Our loss was twenty-five killed and wounded. The enemy's loss is not ascertained.

Washington, May 4. The following two important circulars have been addressed to the Foreign Ministers, announcing the reopening of communication with Southern localities reconquered from the insurgents.

Department of State, Washington, May 2, '62.

Sir: I have the honor to state for your information that the mails are now allowed to pass to and from New Orleans and other places which, having heretofore been seized by insurgent forces, are now reoccupied by the land and naval forces of the United States. It is proper, however, to add that a military surveillance is maintained over such mails as far as the Government finds it necessary for the public safety.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
Wm. H. Seward.

A Liberal Offer.

Being satisfied that time is short, and that what is done must be done quickly; and feeling anxious to do what we can to arouse a sleeping world and church, we make the following liberal offer:—Any one who will send three or more new subscribers to the Crisis for six months or one year, with advance pay for the same, shall receive at wholesale prices, including postage, any of our books and tracts they may select, amounting to one-third the value of the money sent. For instance, if they send three dollars, they receive one dollar's worth of books or tracts; for six dollars, we send them two dollar's worth; for twelve dollars, four dollar's worth, etc. Let every reader take hold of the work in earnest, and help scatter tracts, books and papers like autumnal leaves.

Miles Grant, per order of Publishing Committee.

NOTES TO MY CORRESPONDENTS.

O. T. H.—I hope to visit Western New York and Pennsylvania early this summer, as you suggest, but cannot tell just when. I must first issue a lot of books, and some fifty or sixty thousand tracts for myself and the Publication Society before I can go anywhere very well. Pray about it, and let me hear from you again.

E. H. St. Clair, Mich.—I do not know as it will be possible for me to get as far west as Michigan this season. I will see what I can do. Pray about it. Perhaps the money that it would cost to come would do more good if laid out for such tracts as those I gave you when I rode with you that evening from meeting, which you say "broke" your "sectarian goggles" through which you "had been reading the Bible all the while." I think $30 worth of good tracts well distributed would pave the way for preaching and make that more effectual. In that way others might get "the Bible right end up before" them, "and then commence at the beginning instead of the end, and read it as God has intended that it should be read."

C. B.—I can get the books you wish if you will send money, direct how they shall be forwarded, and wait till they can be found.

F——. Be of good cheer. Read Col 1: 9-11, 21-23; 2 Thess. 1: 4; 2 Tim. 2: 12, 19; 2 Tim. 3: 14; Titus 2: 1-6; Heb 10: 25, 32, 33; James 1: 2-6, 12; 1 Pet. 4: 12-16, 19; 2 Pet. 1: 5-11; 1 Cor. 7: 16; Rom. 12: 12, 17, 18; Rom. 8: 31-39.

For the Crisis.

The Old Home.

LINES TO J. AND C. C.

How sacred are those memories, as from the heart they come!
We love to think and ponder on the old, old home;
Our infancy was sheltered there from every stormy blast,
'Twas childhood's brief elysium—how happily 'twas passed!
The vision yet is vivid, 'tis like some hallowed dome,—
I love, I love to ponder on the old, old home.

A father, then so proudly of children light and gay,
And mother's soft eye beaming, 't was health, 't was joy and play;
Our festivals too were sacred, and gifts so highly prized,—
The blended vesper hymn, how long its accents rise!
Before the youthful memory—a taste of joys to come—
How can we cease to ponder on the old, old home!

But time is like a wreath of variegated flowers,
He's taken from our number—the turn may soon be ours;
But memories, loved memories, shall close entwine each heart,
Until time and change in concert shall tear the wreath apart.
So faith looks up with joyful eye until the King shall come
And gather all the lovely flowers to their new Eden home.

Unlike the old, the new shall stand for aye in living green;
No parting there, for all shall then before the King be seen;
No furrowed brow, no locks of gray, or pain to cause a groan—
The family all immortal, dwell round the Father's throne.
To be a member of that band, to meet in the world to come,
We'll learn to love and ponder well on our new Eden home. CARRIE.

Viroqua, Wis., April 15th, 1862.

For the Crisis.

What are we doing?

While looking around upon the professed church of God, and mingling with them in the various associations of life, I have often been led to ask myself the question, Are we as a people sincere in what we profess to believe? We profess to believe that the world lies in wickedness, exposed to death; that all around us there are those that, should they be suddenly called to die, have no hope beyond the dismal grave, and many of them are our dearest friends. And we also profess to believe that we have escaped from this dangerous situation ourselves, through faith in Christ, and are adopted sons and daughters of God, thereby becoming heirs to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away. Now I ask, if we are sincere what is expected of us? what shall we do? Shall we sit and fold our arms and say that we can do nothing to save our perishing friends as they rush blindly on to eternal ruin? Should we do this if we had escaped from a burning building in which were many of our dear friends? or should we at the risk of our own lives make every possible exertion to save them? Methinks there are none so cold-hearted and so unfeeling but what would rush into the very midst of danger to rescue friends or even enemies from the burning flames, even though they might be called excited, or crazy. But is it so with us? Have we done all we could to save sinners? O my brethren and sisters! let us examine ourselves on this point. Have we not often shrunk from duty?

If we look back to the time when light first beamed into our hearts, and the joys of salvation were felt by us, we shall remember that the Spirit said, Go tell what God has done; then with what joy we told the glad news of a Savior's pardoning love; though it was often done in weakness, yet the Spirit sent it home to the heart of some poor sinner, and he was led to Christ. Did we not seek out the lost and take them by the hand and beseech them to flee to Christ for salvation? Did we not love the little prayer meeting, where we could tell what God had done for us, and encourage each other on our way, and unite in praying to God for the salvation of lost men around us? But, alas! some trial of faith came, by which we should have been made stronger had we stood the test, but our faith gave way, and we became weak. We looked away from God, and began to look upon our little talents, our unworthiness, our little influence, forgetting that the strength of God is made perfect in weakness. We began to neglect duty, prayed but little in secret, so that it was a burden to go to prayer meeting, and if we went we were ashamed to say anything because we could not speak as others did; and finally the devil told us there was no use in making so much fuss about religion, and no need of separating ourselves so much from the world; they would call us odd, and we could not have any influence over them unless we would join with them in some things, and that when we met with friends we had better say nothing about religion, it would not suit them, etc. And thus step by step have we been led on by the enemy of our souls, until we have lost the life and power of religion, and have nothing but the form left, cold, selfish and stupid, professing to love God and to love his appearing, and yet ashamed to speak of it. Truly have we not reason to question our own sincerity in our professions while this is the case with us? Alas! how many are thus living. We find them almost everywhere through the land. Ask them if they enjoy religion, they will tell you they do not enjoy what they would like to. Ask them if they love the appearing of Jesus, and if they happen to be Adventists you will touch a tender spot, and they will tell you they do, and they would go miles to hear the doctrine preached. But question them a little further, and you will find they take no interest in the salvation of sinners. They will tell you they do not attend the prayer meetings, the roads are sometimes bad, and then they work so hard they do not feel like going out nights, and on the Sabbath they want to rest, and they feel better at home with their families, and they do not see why any one cannot pray just as well at home as at meeting. Then ask them if they pray in their families, and they will have to tell you that they do not now, they have so much hired help and large families, etc., that they cannot find time, and they do not know but what it is just as well to pray in secret, but should you venture to question further and ask if they pray in secret, what think you would be the answer?

I tremble when I think of these things and realize that the majority of professors are thus living; and when I see the responsibility that rests upon us who are to be lights to the world, I am led to cry mightily to God that he would sanctify his people,—that he would give them more life and power, and send conviction to the hearts of the lukewarm, that they might see their awful danger. O! that we had the zeal of Jeremiah, that we might be constrained to cry out with him, "O that my head were waters and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people."—Jer. 9: 1. We have no time to lose; souls are perishing, and the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. We cannot all preach, but we can use our talents some way. Our every day life should tell to the world that we are fleeing for life and will beckon them to follow. O for the sanctifying power of God to rest upon us! And I pray God that ministers and people through the church of God may have their tongues touched with a live coal from off God's altar, that they may speak forth words that burn, that shall reach the hearts of the ungodly, and lead them to Christ. Brethren, let us pray for apostolic faith and power. S. C. WELLCOME.

Gen. 3: 22.

"And the Lord God said, Behold the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever," etc.

From this language, and from what precedes and follows it, I learn that man had already eaten the fruit of a certain tree, and by eating he had obtained the knowledge of good and evil. But it is the effect of eating of the other tree to which I would invite attention, to wit, the tree of life. God says, "Lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life, and eat and live forever." It seems to me it would not take a very strong man to draw the inference that God does not design man should live forever, at least in the state of transgression in which he then was. Now the question is, does "live" mean live? does it mean to exist? that is, when God promises life to the righteous he means much more than existence. Suppose we grant that he does; does he not mean existence as the more of which you speak? Is not existence at least embraced in the promise?

But let us look at the term live in the text. I am inclined to think it does not, in this place at least, embrace a great amount of happiness, for it will be observed that man had already violated the command, that he was now a sinner, that he was already in what some call a state of spiritual death: surely then live cannot mean here a state of bliss. Now, my friend, do you believe man will live forever in a state of sin? Is he to live independent of God, or will God's effort in driving man from the tree of life be of no account? or has he changed his designs in reference to the sinner? My idea is that God designed that all opposed to him should die, and that he has not changed his intentions. My advice is, be reconciled to God.

Submission.

It is a great thing to learn the lesson of submission; to truly learn how to be reconciled to the divine will. It is alone obtained in the school of adversity. Prosperity is too apt to flatter our pride, or build us up on the strength of our own sufficiency, so that when the adverse winds begin to blow, and the pitiless storm beats down the flowers of vanity that have sprung up in our path, 'tis then that we begin to discover our own insignificance, and learn to bow in humble attitude before Him who afflicts not willingly but for our good. Afflictions are ofttimes grievous to be borne, they fall with such crushing weight on the weary soul. They come, too, with such a suddenness that they almost crush the life from out the heart; but to the humble, trustful, confiding child of God they are not without their good results in the end. They often serve to wean the heart from the love of the world, by the removal of a companion or friend dearer to us than life, thus teaching us how dependent we are upon the favor of God for the least amount of happiness we enjoy here.

Ah! it is a sad experience by which we are sometimes humbled into submission. In a moment as it were, the strongest ties that bind us to earth are severed, and cheerless and alone we are left to drift on the stormy billows of sorrow, till in our heart's desolation we are led to implore the generous aid of the ever ready pilot to conduct our tempest-tossed bark to the harbor of submissive repose. The lessons of affliction are solemn warnings to us not to trust in our own strength; they are sent to teach us humility and draw us nearer to God. Blest indeed is that soul, that through tears and shadows and dark clouds can discern a Father's directing hand, and trustingly leave all to his care. It may be hard to yield thus, when the natural heart would be ready to murmur; but it is well to do so, and confide all in Him who has promised not to afflict us more than we are able to bear. O. P. ALLEN.

Bible vs. Theology.

The following lines are intended as a sequel to an unfinished piece in the "Wayside Gleanings," page 151, entitled, "A Controversy between a Theological Student and a Bible Student." Those who have the book, may possibly be interested in the sequel to an unfinished subject; which claims no title to originality of thought or diction, being, as our Advent brothers know, a matter of every day experience in our intercourse with the popular professors of "Orthodoxy," not only with students, but also with teachers and D.D.'s.

BIBLE STUDENT.

Even judgment is tempered with mercy and grace,
In the dealings of God, with our sin-ruined race.
In "the unending woes of the lost" that you claim,
Why you bring a dishonor on God's holy name.
But a tyrant so cruel, sure earth never trod;
Can I love such a being, and call him my God?
If the justice and judgment of God he defy,
Then, unworthy of life, the sinner must die.

THEOLOGICAL STUDENT.

Stop a moment, my friend, and recover your breath,
Then tell me, I pray, what's the meaning of death?
You will find, by consulting the books of the wise,
That sinners are doomed to the "death that ne'er dies;"
In anguish and torment unuttered they lie,
Still longing for death, but yet never to die.
That God in his wrath is still present below,
To increase to the utmost their torment and woe.
Dark waves of damnation forever shall roll,
As the knell of eternity strikes on the soul.

B. S. The wisdom of man is fertile, I know,
In inventing and practising weapons of woe.
They give reins to their fancy, their reason they tax;
A poor substitute this for Scripture and facts.
If the death that ne'er dies is the lost sinner's doom,
Then the life that ne'er lives may prove the saint's tomb.
Which of the two I should choose I wot not;
For my part, I'm seeking a far better lot.
A poor return this for the pain and the strife,
To die without death, or to live without life!

T. S. Your doctrine, I think, is the infidel's creed;
To the sin and the danger how few will take heed.
For myself, I would say, I should never repent
If death was the whole that the penalty meant.
The floodgates of transgression will wide open fly,
"Let us all eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

B. S. There's two sorts of religion, of fear and of love:
One comes from below, and the other above.
By what you have said, you have plainly confessed
That the first sort of piety suits you the best.
To admire your choice, I can't say I do,
Till counterfeit coin is as good as the true;
Should Christ to his temple speedily come,
Those only who love him will welcome him home.

T. S. What new crotchet now have you got in your head?
The soon coming of Christ to awaken the dead!
Theology teaches all those who are wise,
That Christ comes every time a righteous man dies;
His reign is a spiritual reign in the heart,
Without any gross or material part.
Thousands of ages have yet to pass by
Before his appearance is seen in the sky.
There'll be no more war, contagion, or dearth,
And the orthodox faith will cover the earth.
The good time is coming, then why should we fear?
Our long loved for millennium soon will be here.

B. S. No artist ever painted a likeness more true
Than the one the apostle has given of you:
"Where is the promise, on which you rely,
Of Christ's speedy return from his glory on high?
All things here below still remain as they were,
Why then yield to sorrow, or sink in despair?"
If any one should doubt that the Bible is true,
We have only to point to such scoffers as you.
Your fables of death and Christ's throne in the heart,
Of Scripture perversions are only a part.
Your castles are all of them built in the air,
And when they fall down will be hard to repair.
While human traditions are founded on sand,
On the firm rock of ages the Bible will stand;
And Christ, when he comes in his glory to reign,
All those who oppose him will surely be slain.
Why reason with such? They must reap as they've sown,
They are joined to their idols, we let them alone.

My Experience.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to give briefly my christian experience, hoping that it may benefit some one. I also feel it my duty on account of the position which I occupy, as in part it will be a confession, which I feel is due to my brethren among whom I may chance to labor. I also feel it a duty to myself, in order to correct an impression that some designing persons have thrown out in regard to my present position, which has a tendency to injure my influence for good. I know that I am trying to do my Master's will, and that I love him with all my heart.

To begin from my earliest recollection, I remember to have felt the strivings of God's Spirit, and my impressions were often very serious; yet I never made a public confession of my feelings until 1851, when I became a member of the Pynchon St. Church in Springfield (Methodist). My feelings at that time were deep and earnest, and I felt a strong desire to serve God with all my heart. I believe now if I had understood the word of God as I ought at that time, I should have remained firm in the truth; but, as I had it not, I could not remain in it. In the following winter I took part in a discussion at West Granby, Ct., at which time the following question was discussed: "Do the souls of men live in a state of consciousness after death?" After a thorough investigation of this question (unaided however by the word of God), I became fully convinced that man is not possessed of immortality, and as I had erroneous views of the teachings of the Bible on that subject, I was led to reject it (the Bible) altogether, and for two years was laboring under the hallucination of death being an eternal sleep; during which time I was miserable, not being satisfied with myself, any body or any thing. May the Lord deliver me from ever knowing another two years of such experience. Dear reader, this is the cruel effect of false teaching. Well hath Isaiah said, "The treacherous dealers have dealt treacherously; yea, the treacherous dealers have dealt very treacherously." Thank God for the truth!

"Blessed Bible! how I love thee."

In 1854 I heard the blessed gospel of our Savior's second advent, also its kindred truths; and when I first saw that in the resurrection this mortal must put on immortality, it caused my heart to rejoice. When I first saw these blessed truths, I felt it my duty to publish them to a dying world, which impression I steadily resisted, notwithstanding the importunity of many friends; sometimes doing a part of my duty by going into the vineyard of the Lord for a little while, and I felt greatly blest in so doing. When I went out among the children and tried to feed some of God's little ones, I felt that I was doing my duty, and my joy was almost full. Then the enemy would say, "You have no talent for preaching, and if you had you can get nothing in that way, and your family will suffer for the necessaries of life." My companion also made many objections, which seemed to us at the time very plausible. After giving ground to the devil, as I verily believe, I would lose my joy and become cold and backslidden in heart. Then again the impression would come with great force, You must obey or be lost. Yet I resisted the teachings of the Spirit for more than five years, sometimes trying one thing and then another, thinking, as soon as I could get money enough together to go to preaching independent of anybody, I would obey God and go to work for him. But I was completely baffled in all my plans; they would seem to work well for a time, but in the height of apparent prosperity I would lose everything; my affairs seemed to be completely beyond human control. Finally I went to peddling dry goods at good wages, and as I thought with every prospect of success; but here, as in all previous cases, I could not succeed, but on the contrary it came near proving my eternal destruction. Here I became so completely backslidden that it seems to me now as though the adversary had almost overcome all the good that God's Spirit had ever wrought in me. But, thank God, I never entirely lost sight of the hope of the gospel of Christ.

I shall ever cherish feelings of gratitude and love for Bro. Williams, of Canaan, Ct., for a kindly warning that checked me in my mad career; and from this time forward I resolved to do my whole duty, determined to work for God wherever he might call me. I asked God to forgive all my heart-wanderings, which I feel that he has done. I also confessed my faults to my brethren on several occasions, but still feel it is not public enough on account of the position which I now occupy. I therefore ask my brethren and sisters in this public manner to forgive me for the deep wrong that I have done them. I am fully satisfied that God has forgiven me, and feel blest in trying to do his will. I feel that God has blest my labors in answer to prayer. Thanks be to his holy name, his ear is ever open to the cry of his children. I would like to give some particulars of my course and God's dealings with me of late, but I feel that my article has become tedious already.

I will close by simply adding that my companion and myself have entered into the service of God with full purpose of heart, and we find our Father is a good paymaster, "more willing to give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him, than earthly parents are to give good gifts to their children." He also is true to fulfill his promises of temporal good. We find fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, houses and lands. Truly, if we seek first the kingdom of God, all else needful will be added. We find this promise fully verified. It is good to serve him. We find much persecution also, which we expect; for we know that he that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution; but we rejoice in hope of the reward set before us. Let us rejoice that our King is soon coming to gather his ransomed ones home.

WM. J. HALE.

THE ILLS OF LIFE.—There are three modes of bearing the ills of life; by indifference, which is the most common; by philosophy, which is the most ostentatious; and by religion, which is the most effectual, for it is religion alone that can teach us to bear them with resignation.

☞ Reading without reflection will never make a man wise.

For the Crisis.

Don't neglect the Children.—No. 3.

Were the great truths of religion matters of doubtful disputation, or were the exercise of virtue a thing of moral indifference, then might we leave our children to their own chosen way; but we need no arguments besides those which reason and the Bible afford us, to convince every candid mind that there is in children an innate propensity to depart from every principle of that moral rectitude which is due from the creature to the Creator. Hence, the seeds of depravity already sown, early germinate, and if not counteracted by moral culture, soon gain the ascendancy, and the garden of the heart becomes overgrown with thorns, thistles, and noxious weeds. There seems to be a growing tendency of late years among parents to exempt themselves from the duty which the parental relation most certainly involves; nor is there that adherence to the meek simplicity of the Bible which was characteristic of its early instructors. This departure from the plain, ungarnished, and faithful preceptives of the inspired word, seems to have led to a correspondent omission on the part of parents, and parents too "professing godliness with good works."

God, in his all-wise providence, has constituted a natural subordination, entrusting one to the care of another; and especially so in relation to the child and its parent. But there are many instances in this degenerate age where parents seem to have lost sight of this relation, and but for the disparity of years, it were difficult to say which is the parent; hence, we find the children "disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." Now parents should be rulers of their own houses, exercising reasonable authority over those whom God has committed to their charge. And such parental authority has ever been sanctioned by Divine approval. Hence God says, speaking of Abraham, "I know him that he will command his children and his household after him,"—and it is immediately added, "and they shall keep the way of the Lord." Thus by commanding his children and his household after him, the pious believer may secure to them the keeping the way of the Lord, and this leads to eternal life.

Of what signal importance then it is that early parental care, with Sabbath and sanctuary privileges, be conferred upon the young, to the honor of God and the security of everlasting joys. W. A MANNING.

Failing in Business.

Why do men fail in business? Is it not for want of proper management and not paying their honest debts? There are other reasons, but these are the principal ones. Now I wish to ask if these rules will not apply to men negotiating for a kingdom and for eternal life in that kingdom? This will not apply to such as have this world's goods and some in abundance, while they profess much love and a strong desire to obtain the kingdom. I fear they are keeping back part of the price in withholding from the support of the cause, and thus will fail in that great day of final reckoning. The Word asks the question (1 John 3: 17,) "But whoso hath this world's good, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?"

One man said, when he was asked to give a little to a poor but worthy brother, "My Bible says, owe no man anything." Does he not owe that needy man? Will not such debts as these, and also withholding from the support of the preaching of the Word that would cheer the heart of the way-worn pilgrim, rise up in the day of judgment against such, when it is too late to counsel them? My dear brethren, let me exhort you to to see to it that you owe no man anything on that great reckoning day. While the servants of the Lord give you spiritual things, give them your temporal things, and let it not be said any longer that two or three of the poor brethren have to pay for the preaching of the word. Brethren, be faithful in the unrighteous mammon, that you may get the true riches. J. K. BELLOWS.

For the Crisis.

Parental Instruction.

The responsibility of the mother in relation to her children it is to be feared is seldom fully realized. The youthful mind is compared to a piece of white paper, upon which you can write just what you please. The few years in which the child receives all its instruction and impressions from the mother, often determines its destiny. The religious instruction it receives, whether scriptural or erroneous, takes deeper root in the mind than at any other period of its life. We see this in the development of the mind in after years. The father and mother are undoubted authority in their estimation for everything they have learned under the parental roof. If they could grow up unbiassed by the many unscriptural and erroneous doctrines with which many of their minds are burdened, they would show more common sense and scriptural theory than many do who have spent years in schools and colleges.

A little boy was talking with his mother about a sister who had died. He asked her this question—"How can she see? she has not got any eyes." The mother confessed she was puzzled to answer this and many other questions he often asked. There is some significance in this question, though it was asked by a child. Those who believe a person goes to heaven at death, and has the organs of speech, sight, hearing, etc., must believe it has a material body, (for Christ said, "A spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have"), or deny the resurrection, or take the position that a body is prepared for the saint from death to the resurrection. Why not let the Scripture settle the question? "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."

Parents ought never to forget that the young sprout will grow just about in the same direction which they give, and adopt the same principles and manners. Bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. D. N. SMITH.

Uncle William's Charade.

DEAR CHILDREN:—I remember, when I was a boy, how much pleasure I took, around the winter fire, in hearing and telling riddles, and guessing out the meaning of enigmas, charades, rebusses, conundrums, etc. Almost all boys and girls love it, I think, as much as I did; and therefore I am glad that a corner of the Crisis is set apart, once a fortnight, for your especial amusement and benefit. From the earliest ages of the world, not only boys and girls, but men and women, have taken pleasure in propounding and solving dark and puzzling questions.

Three thousand years ago, you remember, when Samson made a feast to the men of Timnath, he gave them a riddle to guess, which was so hard for them that they could not expound it, although they tried seven days, while the feast lasted. And perhaps they would never have found it out if Samson's wife had not told them.

Now, children, I am going to give you a charade to expound. A charade, you know, is a riddle consisting of a word, or term, each syllable of which is also a word. The syllables, or parts, when put together, make what is called the whole. This one may not be so hard to guess as Samson's riddle was, but you can try and see how many of you can find it out during the twice seven days of the Crisis' feast of puzzles. If this pleases you, I may give you more another time.

CHARADE.

When a journey you go, you pass over my first;
My second you do when bestowing a favor;
My whole is a man, in the Scripture well versed,
And his name, if you look, you will find in this paper.

For the Crisis.

Lines.

Christian, nerve thee for the conflict,
Gird the gospel armor on;
Foes beset the pilgrim's pathway,
He must strive who wins the crown.
Arm thee then with faith and courage,
Ever bear the shield of love;
Shrink not, but march bravely onward,
In the strength of God above.

There's no time for careless sleeping,
He who wins must watch alway;
Satan, wakeful vigil keeping,
Waits to lead thy feet astray.
Prove thee then a valiant soldier,
Ever found at duty's post;
Trusting firmly in your Leader,
Work with zeal, whate'er the cost.

None are borne up to Mount Zion
On the gentle zephyr's wing;
'T is the faithful soldier findeth
Grace and favor with the King.
Each must boldly face the foeman,
Ere he sings the conqueror's song;
Each must bear truth's glorious standard,
Ere he waves the victor's palm.

My Journal.

SKETCH OF EIGHT MONTHS.

March, 1862. My last No. was dated Aug. 12, 1861, in which I gave a brief account of my sickness and recovery in the Health Institution, or "Our Home," in Dansville, N. Y. Since that time I have enjoyed perfect health, so that I have not lost a single appointment; every day has been attended with health to my body and good cheer to my soul. Praise the Lord for his loving kindness and tender mercies to me, a sinner saved by grace. I have written much that the time has not come to publish; but the constant importunity of kind friends to hear from me again, induces me to give expression to a few thoughts that may be of some practical use to those who are looking for the speedy coming of Christ. In the last eight months I have endeavored to follow the leadings of Providence, and have divided my labors between the Advent church in Boston and the cause abroad, as duty seemed to indicate.

In August and September I visited and preached in Lowell, Mass., Portland, N. H., Portland and Yarmouth, Me. In the latter place I attended the Maine State Conference of Adventists, where I was received with christian kindness, and treated as one whose labors and sufferings in the Advent cause were worthy of their consideration. I was much cheered and comforted in beholding their unity and prosperity. May God continue his blessing to them. In October I visited Richmond and Whitefield, Me.; Lowell and Lawrence, Mass.; Waterbury and Cabot, Vt.; Champlain, Perry's Mills and Rouses Point, N. Y.; Rutland and Castleton, Vt.; Low Hampton, N. Y., and Poultney, Vt. In November, Worcester, Mass.; Hartford, Warehouse Point, Ct., and Springfield, Mass. December, Kingston, N. H., at the dedication of the Advent chapel, and lectures in East Kingston, N. H., and protracted meetings in Rutland and Poultney, Vt. Also Castleton, Vt., to attend funerals of Bro. J. Graham's three children, who died of diphtheria, already noticed.

January 1, 1862. Conference and protracted meeting of two weeks in Richford, Vt.; a glorious time, and many converted. Lowell and Lawrence, Mass., Feb.; Lowell, protracted meeting three full weeks; a glorious gathering of the people of God, and the church established in a new place of worship. New York city from Feb. 21st to March 9th, in a protracted effort with the church there with a view to build them up. Did what I could under the circumstances, in connection with Bro. I. T. Lovering, the preacher then in charge for this object. During my stay in the city, by request I went out to Newark, N. J., and spoke twice, and set things in order in the new Advent church. Bro. Geo. Libbey was set apart as an Elder in the church on Saturday, March 7th, and the organization of the church perfected. Their prospects are good. The Lord is with them.

March 11th preached in Dansville, N. Y., and visited "Our Home"; 12th, preached in Springwater, N. Y.; had a good season. Here met and had an interview with Eld. Saml. Chapman, who had been laboring here for some time with success. He received me with warm and cordial greetings. His health is good, looks young and vigorous, and is laboring with zeal. God is with him. He does not deal in elaborated milk and water on the importance or the time of Christ's coming and kingdom. Everywhere he leaves his mark for good, in the conversion of souls and the establishment of churches. God bless Bro. Chapman.

March 13th. Preached in Lewiston, N. Y. on the time of the Lord's coming. The eight months last past I have proclaimed "the gospel of the kingdom" to good audiences, and with various success in the above places. My full Journal of the state of things in all the above cities and towns, and the results of the presentation of the whole truth, would be too voluminous for publication at this time. It may suffice to say, that I have the happiness to know that many souls have been soundly converted to God; not only changed in their religious sympathies, but in moral and physical habits as to their manner of living—total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks and foods that excite the passions, which war against the soul; also abstinence from narcotics, so that they literally "eat and drink to the glory of God," bringing the "body into subjection," and keeping it pure, as a temple of the "Holy Spirit." It is my earnest desire that they will not be led away by the error of the wicked; but henceforth "glorify God in their body and spirit, which are his", and so be ready for the coming and kingdom of Christ. I have also had the pleasure of seeing many professors of religion, who were living in a state of lukewarmness, quickened into a new life by a change of their habits of living, both physically and spiritually. Oh! it has given me great joy to see so many sickly, weakly ones, rise to a state of moral health, and triumph over all the miseries of their former state.

Everywhere I have found the great doctrine of Adventism, the time, loosely held and lightly esteemed by many; only the few, among the mass, holding to the definite time. But in presenting the evidence that the time is taught in the Bible, and that it is, in the language of a learned divine, now understood by "the wisest of Scriptural expositions, and of the almost universal consent of those who study the Lord's testimonies with seriousness and discrimination, having concurred in the time of their fulfillment"* in or about the year 1867 and 8, many have turned their attention to the subject afresh, and find satisfactory reasons to look for the coming of Jesus about that time. It is a cheering fact that light is increasing; and while some are growing more dark under its influence, others are walking and rejoicing in it, so that in this respect, also, my labor has not been in vain in the Lord.

In this special department of the truth, the Adventists have yet a great work to perform. Our work is not done, although we have done well in giving a wide circulation to all the truth within our reach in former years; yet the vast increase of knowledge is not to be "hid under a bushel," nor to be perverted by those to whom it is unwelcome. If those who have been enlightened shall for any cause reject it, God in his infinite wisdom can raise up other and more effective instrumentalities. God's will be done in this matter of the "gospel of the kingdom," and the church and world will have a full and fair warning of the "time of their visitation." When God in his providence brought me into connection with Father Miller in 1839, I was but a child in the understanding of the prophetic word," and especially of the "times and seasons." I only understood the great commentators, and followed their views of the fulfillment of the prophecies relating to the Jews' return to Palestine, and the conversion of the world and Millenium in 1866. Father Miller threw me from this position, and I embraced his views. But in my conversation with him he said, "I believe I am right in my calculations, but still I may fail; of this I am certain, it will not go beyond their time of 1866. It is either my time or theirs. You (said he) are a young man, and may live to see it—I shall not." And he added, "be faithful, Bro. Himes, to the end."

The following extract of a letter, which I received from Father Miller, dated Oct. 12, 1841, and which I read to the Portland conference in that month, will corroborate the truth of the above difference of this twenty-three years.

THE TIME OF HIS COMING.

"On this part of our subject, many are willing to admit that it is near. A few are of the opinion that the year is defined in Scripture, and those who believe in the time vary only about twenty-three years. The writer of this letter, in common with a large majority of those who believe in the time, in America, has been forced by the Scriptures to fix on the year 1843. As a matter of course, nearly all the calumny of the scoffers has been thrown upon them. Those who have fixed on the year 1847 have received less abuse from the clergy, editors, and scoffers, than their brethren who believe in the earlier date; while those writers who have fixed the time as late as 1866 have received little or no obloquy or notice from these babblers and complainers. Why is this so? you may inquire; for each class of these writers try to prove one important point in the theory, that is, that the time is actually revealed in the Bible; for this must first be established before either class of these expositors could be credited a moment by a well-balanced mind. And if this objection were all these men had against the 'Miller doctrine,' they would as soon complain of the believers in 1866, as of Miller, and others, who believe in any earlier dates. But this is not the case; it is only used as a subterfuge to parry off the force of the argument of the time itself; They know in their consciences that time is revealed, and they are not able to confute it. Therefore, what cannot be put down by fair means, must be by ridicule or persecution; for they are not willing to have it true. The professed ministers of Christ know, if it is true, they are under the most serious, solemn, and awful obligation to preach it, and warn and entreat the people to be ready for the event. But not possessing faith enough to risk their character on the word of God, or courage enough to meet the opposition this doctrine would of necessity raise; they will, as a matter of course, do all they can to keep their people ignorant, and cry out against excitements, even after they have been for years trying to excite their people to support the popular institutions of the day. No wonder then, brethren, you meet with so much opposition from this source. Yet we ought to be thankful that there are, even at this time, many of the ministers of Christ who are willing to be called fools for Christ's sake, and are examining this important subject; a great number of whom are satisfied that their former views of a temporal or spiritual millennium was but a a tradition of men, and are preaching the kingdom of God at hand. Numbers of these are now satisfied that it is at the door, and a few of these believe in the time, 1843. Thus far, then, my dear brethren, we have reason to be thankful to God, and take courage. We ought to do all we can to get our ministers to look at his subject."

Were Father Miller now living to see and weigh the evidence of the calculation of 1867 and 8, he would be as happy as good old Simeon was in the first Advent, although he would not, like him, desire to die, but live to see his Savior come in his kingdom. Well, I intend to be "faithful to the end." Nothing shall stand in my way, or neutralize my labor or influence in this work by my consent or sufferance. I stand free in the truth, and shall proclaim it with all my might, expecting God's blessing to attend my efforts. I stand now, as always, on the great truths we proclaimed in the Albany Conference in April, 1845, seventeen years since, and mean to carry them all out (especially the following very important article on the time of the Advent) in good faith :—

"We hold that the second coming, or appearing of Christ, is indicated to be now emphatically nigh, even at the doors, (Matt. 24 : 33,) by the chronology of the prophetic periods, (Dan. 7 : 25, 8 : 14, 9. 24; 12. 7, 11, 12; Rev. 9 : 10, 15, 11. 2, 3, 12. 6, 14, 13 : 5,) the fulfillment of the prophecy, Dan. 2d, 7th, 8th, 9th, 11th and 12th; Rev. 9th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th and 17th,) and the signs of the times. (Matt. 24 : 29, Luke 21. 25, 26) And that this truth should be preached both to saints and sinners, that the first may rejoice, knowing their redemption draweth nigh, (Luke 21 : 28; 1 Thess. 4 : 18,) and the last be warned to flee from the wrath to come, (2 Cor. 5 : 11,) before the Master of the house shall rise up and shut the door. (Luke 18 : 24, 25.)"

It will be seen that if "by the chronology of the prophetic periods" we are to understand or have the proof "indicated" that Christ is nigh, even at the doors, that we must have some understanding of these to "indicate" this fact. Their termination in 1843 will not "indicate" very distinctly! a future coming to be nigh!! It was only on the ground that we were living in the age when "many were running to and fro," and knowledge was increasing, that we could have said the prophetic periods would indicate the nearness of redemption; except we refer to them in so general a sense as to make them of no practical use. But light has increased, and we now understand these periods and signs, and preach them to both saints and sinners, that the first may rejoice, knowing that their redemption is nigh, and the last be warned to flee from the wrath to come, before the Master shall rise up and shut to the door (Luke 13 : 24, 25).

That this course of conduct should subject me to reproach, scorn, and misrepresentation is nothing strange nor unexpected; this was threatened, and has been very cleverly fulfilled. I have not thought proper to pay any attention to my accusers, although I have to meet their ungrateful conduct in many places. Of this I am sure, that no true Adventist will sanction such treatment of one that has a clean record, and is faithful to the cause for which he has toiled and suffered from the very first, without charge. Our Savior once said, "How can ye believe who receive honor one of another, and not that which cometh from God only." To lose the good opinion and confidence of those with whom we are associated, is one of the most trying things we have to meet in social and religious relations. Those who are associated with churches which oppose the Advent doctrine, and whose leading members hold the doctrine of the world's conversion, very rarely do their duty in an aggressive way; what they do is done negatively, and they defend themselves when attacked (as they will be when known to have tendencies to the Advent faith), on the points most popular, giving the least offence, and producing the least result. And many such oppose the agitation of the question in their churches, or even in the towns where they reside, and hence they do nothing themselves, and do not suffer others to do what they neglect or refuse to do. The good of those who are not favorable to the truth stands in the way. In Advent societies, where the preachers oppose the definite time, the same principle works on most of the members. It is unpleasant to come out in opposition to those we esteem; and in this way the evidence of the time is shut out just as it was formerly shut out of other churches. Now, as then, only the few independent thinkers stand up for free discussion and the whole truth. But this is one of the most difficult things to do, for in so doing a person loses caste, and is often bitterly assailed by his former associates, even though he becomes the better man in so doing. Hence most are slow to make any change in this direction.

We are slow to learn the lesson, "Cease ye from man," respecting religious opinions. Man at his best estate, even as a religious teacher, is altogether vanity as compared with Christ, yet, whatever is lovely in character, or brilliant in talent, gives an interest to his opinions, whether true or false. The only safety lies in following the word of God with our best judgment. An English divine of the 17th century* observes, "Where scripture speaks, or seems to speak, in consonance with the opinions of the system-mongers, well and good; where it does not, all sorts of critical discipline and violence are employed to break its refractory spirit, or bend it to compliance. The most forced and unnatural meaning of words, the most wildly conjectural emendations of the text, the most improbable reasonings, the most slender authorities, are all eagerly resorted to for this unhallowed purpose, and the Bible is made the most ridiculous book in the world, just to maintain the systems inviolate, and to render theologians self-consistent."

The celebrated and pious DR. OWEN observed to some one who taunted him with having changed his views upon one point: "He that can glory that in fourteen years he has not altered in his conception of some things, shall not have me for a rival." And MR. ORME remarks, in the life of this great man,—"Every change of religious sentiment is important to the person who makes it, and ought to be gone into with caution and deliberation. To be given to change is a great evil, and indicates a weak and unsettled mind. On the other hand, to be afraid of change, is frequently the result of indifference, or sinful apprehensions of consequences. It is the duty of every Christian to follow the leadings of the Spirit in the word of revelation, and to recollect that for his convictions he must be accountable at last." The eloquent SAURIN once said, "Let each of us say, when truth recognizes it, I have erred, I consecrate the remainder of my life to publish that truth which I have hitherto misunderstood, and which I opposed only because I had the misfortune to misunderstand it." The learned and devoted TOPLADY said, "I am resolved, in the strength of grace, to preach all the truths of the gospel, as far as I know them, and leave God to take care of the consequences."

It is a difficult thing for one to speak out on subjects that will be rejected by friends, and be likely to subject us to censure, and perhaps persecution. Many an honest mind has been kept in bondage by the fear of such results, and have for the want of courage been kept in darkness. But this should not be so. It would be more wise and safe to follow such distinguished men as Orton, Saurin, and Toplady. Believe and speak the truth, and leave consequences to God. And if a belief in the time of the Advent, or any other truth we believe to be revealed in and by the word of God, is likely to subject us to reproach, we are not by our course to "savor the things that be of men," but "of God." Many are convinced of the personal reign of Christ who do not believe, lest they share the fate of the Jews, who on believing in Christ at his first Advent, were "turned out of the synagogue." Others do not avow their faith in the time of his coming for the same reason. They have no moral courage to make the sacrifice.

I know how difficult it was, by personal experience, to give up the spiritual millennium and embrace the unpopular views of the personal coming of Christ. Also, to give up the popular notion of going to heaven at death, and embracing the true doctrine of the saints' inheritance—that they will inherit the New Earth forever as their home at the resurrection of the just. But my conviction becoming clear on these and other great truths, with the nearness of the consummation, I was by divine grace enabled to sacrifice all for the truth. And should any further light break on my mind on any important question, I hope, without the fear of man before my eyes, I will be able to act faithfully to God and the light he shall give me; so that I may follow the noble example of SAURIN, and consecrate the remainder of my days to publish that truth which I had hitherto misunderstood, and which I opposed only because I had the misfortune to misunderstand it.

In conclusion, I wish to assure the friends and supporters of the Advent cause everywhere, with whom I have stood for twenty years, that I stand firm and faithful on the old platform, and abide in the old ship, having confidence in her ability to bring us into port, without change of principles, policy, or name. We have the light, and have only to live up to it and let it shine. God is leading us, do not be afraid of his guidance. Knowledge is increasing; let us receive it and rejoice in it and be ready for the kingdom. I do not know what I may be left to do in the future; but at present I feel the love of Christ shed abroad in my heart, and have the witness that I am the Lord's. I am full of joy and peace, by day and night.

My health was never so good as at present; I feel young and jubilant, in the prospect of the kingdom soon to come. I preach twice a day with ease every week-day, and three times every Sabbath, often with a baptism, and the Lord's supper added. I feel refreshed by these labors, rather than broken down. As formerly, I eat two meals a day, plain and simple; take no medicine or stimulants of any kind. And the best of all is, God is with me. Blessed be his Holy Name! In about six years our work will be done, and then for the kingdom.

Trials.

"Every heart knoweth its own bitterness."

This remark was made to me by a dear brother in Christ a few days ago, and is still sounding in my ears. Before that I had thought, surely my lot is harder than any other, and was nearly discouraged striving to battle on alone. I often felt to murmur at my lot, and was tempted to think "all these things are against me." But God in his kindness did not utterly forsake me. He knew that trials were better for me than prosperity, and I want to feel thankful that I am "counted worthy to suffer for Christ's sake." I have thought much of the remark—"Every heart knoweth its own bitterness; and as thy day is, so shall thy strength be." I thank God that he still has disciples going about doing good. Here I was all alone; had not the privilege of meeting with the dear children in social meetings, and had often thought, "surely it is no use for me to try any longer to live a christian. I shall never be saved at this poor, dying rate." But God was watching over me with all a Father's love. He knew what I needed, and sent some of his dear chosen ones to encourage and sympathize with me. I never shall forget their parting advice. "Sister, keep looking to Jesus. He will help you." How much is comprehended in those few words! I will "look to Jesus," God being my helper. I know my Savior endured severer trials than I have ever yet passed through, and without a murmur. From Bethlehem's manger to Calvary's cross there was scarce one break in the clouds; these gathered more darkly around him, till they burst over his devoted head as he uttered his expiring cry. Yet throughout this pilgrimage of sorrow no murmuring accent ever escaped his lips. The most suffering of all suffering lives was one of uncomplaining submission—"Not my will, but Thy will be done," was the motto of this wondrous being.

When we are tried almost beyond endurance, tempted and buffeted on all sides, let us "look to Jesus," away from ourselves, and trust in him who is extending the arms of love and mercy. All these things will work for our good if we trust in him. May I be passive in thy hand, oh God! exulting in the assurance that all thy appointments are never arbitrary, but that there is a gracious "need be" in them all. Our God and our Father, who spared not Jesus from trials, temptations and death, will he spare us? Let this thought silence all repinings, and let us pray God to withhold nothing that is needful for our salvation. Praise the Lord for what he has done for me! I should delight to do something for languishing Zion; but as I am one of the lambs, and the weakest at that, I will try to be contented with my lot, and not murmur or repine.

If the eye of that dear brother who said "Sister, every heart knoweth its own bitterness, and as thy day is so shall thy strength be," should fall on this, I hope he will praise God with his whole heart and soul that he providentially called on the lonely pilgrim in the town of B——.

Our Eden Home.

AIR—The Irish Emigrant.

We are voyagers here on life's troubled sea,
Amid sorrow and sighing we roam;
And we long to leave the unhallowed scenes,
And rest in our Eden home.
We are pressing on to the land of rest,
We shall soon reach the heavenly shore,
And roam through the realms of the pure and blest
With the glorified throng, evermore.

Here tears from the eye and sighs from the heart
Ever fill us with sorrow and gloom;
And we long for that clime where joys are full,
And the flowers of Eden bloom,
Where pearly streams flow, and sunbeams dance
O'er the silence of time's dark night,
And there's no more sorrow, nor pain, nor death,
For the Lamb is the glorious light.

Then pilgrims, press on, for we're almost home,
We shall soon see the city fair,
With its shining portals and streets of gold,
As it sweeps through the fields of air,
With rapturous delight we soon shall gaze
On its unfading beauty serene,
And eat the fruit from the tree of life,
And walk o'er those fields of green.

Fireside Thoughts.

BRO. GRANT—How blessed the thought that, while passing through the mournful changes of this life, we have a Friend who can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, whose heart pulsates with infinite sympathy for our race, and who knows how to succor us. His name is Jesus, and in him is every conceivable good. The way-worn pilgrim may go even to his mercy-seat, and pour out his burdened and grief-stricken heart, and always find him a Friend constant, untiring, and devoted. A friendship established upon the assimilation of the subjects of it to Christ, and sustained by a perfect christian integrity, is fraught with heavenly sweetness, and antedates the associations of the redeemed. He that has said, "I will never leave nor forsake thee," knows how to raise true friends to those who trust in him, when they are most needed, and I wish through the Crisis to express my gratitude to those who have so kindly ministered to me and mine through the dark and doleful scenes of the past winter.

Your letters have been to us like the dove bearing the olive leaf to the inmates of the ark. How often, when we have been almost ready to sink, have our breaking hearts been soothed and comforted by sweet words of sympathy from some dear brother or sister! Often as I have read your letters to my husband, have I seen tears of joy falling thick and fast down his pale and sunken cheeks, as he would exclaim, "O! how good the Lord is, he will provide; thank God for friends!" Your donations supplied his wants during his sickness, and when his eyes were closed in death, aided in conveying his lifeless form to the spot chosen by himself, above all others, as his resting place,—on the bank of the "noble Hudson." In the beautiful Sandy Hill Cemetery, beneath the waving shadows of the pines, where the murmuring sound of the distant waterfall seems to be singing a requiem to the silent dead, he waits for the clarion of Almighty God to bid the trembling earth cast out her dead.

Many a pilgrim who expected to live to see Jesus has been obliged to meet and yield to the conquering power of the king of terrors, and the question often arises in my mind, Who among our watchmen will be the next to follow? All are wasting away; much of the journey of life is past; we live to-day—to-morrow we die. Time consumes all temporal things, and takes away both blessings and evils. Every thing is changeable; it is compared to vapor and grass. Death frustrates all our schemes, and all of life's projects; it strips us of all honors, preferments and endowments; it decides our lot forever, terminating all our exertions for the good of others, works of benevolence, affection and sympathy, as well as our probation. O, then, let us all, ministers and people, gird the "armor" a little more closely about us, cease from strife and contentions about "questions to no profit"; and while thousands are rallying around the flag of our country, and manifest a willingness to face even the cannon's mouth for its rescue, let us rally around the standard of the "Prince of peace." Our leader will soon be "King of kings and Lord of lords"; he will be called Faithful and True; "in righteousness will he judge and make war." Then will every man give account of himself to God, and we shall find ourselves held individually responsible for the use we have made of all the ability God has given us, however small we have considered the gift; and we shall be responsible not only for the use we have made of our ability, but for the motive by which we have been actuated, whether we have been seeking to glorify our Master, or build up ourselves.

Our religious activities only please God when from their origin, history, and consequence, self is excluded and God is acknowledged. How necessary that we, who mean to live with Jesus in "the world to come," should search well our hearts, lest we find, when too late to make a change, that we have been serving ourselves instead of God. Let us search God's word carefully to find out the hope of the gospel, which is the moral safeguard of the church; for a just perception of its foundation imparts courage; a just recognition of its principles preserves from error; a just appreciation of its objects produces Christ-like purity, and bestows a power of endurance adequate to successfully compete with the many trials of life; having for its foundation the death and resurrection of Jesus, which is God's great moral nucleus around which is clustered every christian sympathy, in which is the most perfect memorial of divine benevolence, the brightest credence of truth's inspiration, the purity of disinterested affection; and the thrice-blessed consequences will be an immortalized church ransomed from the power of the grave, made "kings and priests unto our God," and reigning upon an earth filled with the glory of God. "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more, neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

We hail thee with delight, thou glorious morn, that shall give us our long looked for rest. No wonder the sound of "Alleluia" is echoed and re-echoed through earth's wide domain by the great multitude, when "the Lord God Omnipotent reigns." We rejoice at the prospect before us even while the dark billows of affliction are rolling over our heads. I thought, as I read Sister Damman's affecting letter in the last Crisis, mothers will not weep there. Our children "will come from the land of the enemy." My own precious boy, who sleeps in the sunny South, with my dear husband, whose dying testimony was, "We are right in our advent faith," and fell with his armor on, will be there. And oh, my God! however sorrowful may be the road I am called to travel in this life, let me be there! Brethren and sisters, let us all be there. Some of us have suffered and struggled long; but our sufferings are not worth mentioning. The conflict is most over, and the victory will soon be ours.

Poor sinner, my heart aches for you. You cannot go there in your sins. You are being warned of your danger continually. The gospel is calling after you in thunder tones. O believe; reform your life; obey and live. You have no time to lose. The last sands of Gentile times are running out. The harvest will soon be past, the summer ended, and your doom sealed forever.

A CHRISTIAN'S CREDENTIALS.—What are they? Not the blossom of a fair profession, but the ripe and mellow fruit of God-like actions. Piety towards God, and an active charity towards all mankind, the twin personifications of vital, saving piety. Salvation is of grace, not of merit, not of words, lest any man should boast. But faith, without works, is dead; it is like an index without a book—like hands without a clock—like sails without a ship—like a tree with nothing but dry and withered branches. Professed disciple of Christ, to prove thy discipleship genuine, thou must surround thyself with widows whom thou hast comforted, with orphans whom thou hast succored, with the ignorant whom thou hast instructed, with the wanderer whom thou hast reclaimed, with the hungry whom thou hast fed, with the naked whom thou hast clothed, with the sick whom thou hast visited. These are thy trophies!

Lines.

Christian, nerve thee for the conflict,
Gird the gospel armor on;
Foes beset the pilgrim's pathway,
He must strive who wins the crown.
Arm thee then with faith and courage,
Ever bear the shield of love;
Shrink not, but march bravely onward,
In the strength of God above.

There's no time for careless sleeping,
He who wins must watch alway;
Satan, wakeful vigil keeping,
Waits to lead thy feet astray.
Prove thee then a valiant soldier,
Ever found at duty's post;
Trusting firmly in your Leader,
Work with zeal, whate'er the cost.

None are borne up to Mount Zion
On the gentle zephyr's wing;
'Tis the faithful soldier findeth
Grace and favor with the King.
Each must boldly face the foeman,
Ere he sings the conqueror's song;
Each must bear truth's glorious standard,
Ere he waves the victor's palm.

My Journal.

SKETCH OF EIGHT MONTHS.

March, 1862. My last No. was dated Aug. 12, 1861, in which I gave a brief account of my sickness and recovery in the Health Institution, or "Our Home," in Dansville, N. Y. Since that time I have enjoyed perfect health, so that I have not lost a single appointment; every day has been attended with health to my body and good cheer to my soul. Praise the Lord for his loving kindness and tender mercies to me, a sinner saved by grace. I have written much that the time has not come to publish; but the constant importunity of kind friends to hear from me again, induces me to give expression to a few thoughts that may be of some practical use to those who are looking for the speedy coming of Christ. In the last eight months I have endeavored to follow the leadings of Providence, and have divided my labors between the Advent church in Boston and the cause abroad, as duty seemed to indicate.

In August and September I visited and preached in Lowell, Mass., Portland, N. H., Portland and Yarmouth, Me. In the latter place I attended the Maine State Conference of Adventists, where I was received with christian kindness, and treated as one whose labors and sufferings in the Advent cause were worthy of their consideration. I was much cheered and comforted in beholding their unity and prosperity. May God continue his blessing to them. In October I visited Richmond and Whitefield, Me.; Lowell and Lawrence, Mass.; Waterbury and Cabot, Vt.; Champlain, Perry's Mills and Rouses Point, N. Y.; Rutland and Castleton, Vt.; Low Hampton, N. Y., and Poultney, Vt. In November, Worcester, Mass.; Hartford, Warehouse Point, Ct., and Springfield, Mass. December, Kingston, N. H., at the dedication of the Advent chapel, and lectures in East Kingston, N. H., and protracted meetings in Rutland and Poultney, Vt. Also Castleton, Vt., to attend funerals of Bro. J. Graham's three children, who died of diphtheria, already noticed.

January 1, 1862. Conference and protracted meeting of two weeks in Richford, Vt.; a glorious time, and many converted. Lowell and Lawrence, Mass., Feb.; Lowell, protracted meeting three full weeks; a glorious gathering of the people of God, and the church established in a new place of worship. New York city from Feb. 21st to March 9th, in a protracted effort with the church there with a view to build them up. Did what I could under the circumstances, in connection with Bro. L. T. Lovering, the preacher then in charge for this object. During my stay in the city, by request I went out to Newark, N. J., and spoke twice, and set things in order in the new Advent church. Bro. Geo. Libbey was set apart as an Elder in the church on Saturday, March 7th, and the organization of the church perfected. Their prospects are good. The Lord is with them.

March 11th preached in Dansville, N. Y., and visited "Our Home"; 12th, preached in Springwater, N. Y.; had a good season. Here met and had an interview with Eld. Saml. Chapman, who had been laboring here for some time with success. He received me with warm and cordial greetings. His health is good, looks young and vigorous, and is laboring with zeal. God is with him. He does not deal in elaborated milk and water on the importance or the time of Christ's coming and kingdom. Everywhere he leaves his mark for good, in the conversion of souls and the establishment of churches. God bless Bro. Chapman.

March 13th. Preached in Lewiston, N. Y. on the time of the Lord's coming. The eight months last past I have proclaimed "the gospel of the kingdom" to good audiences, and with various success in the above places. My full Journal of the state of things in all the above cities and towns, and the results of the presentation of the whole truth, would be too voluminous for publication at this time. It may suffice to say, that I have the happiness to know that many souls have been soundly converted to God; not only changed in their religious sympathies, but in moral and physical habits as to their manner of living—total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks and foods that excite the passions, which war against the soul; also abstinence from narcotics, so that they literally "eat and drink to the glory of God," bringing the "body into subjection," and keeping it pure, as a temple of the "Holy Spirit." It is my earnest desire that they will not be led away by the error of the wicked; but henceforth "glorify God in their body and spirit, which are his"; and so be ready for the coming and kingdom of Christ. I have also had the pleasure of seeing many professors of religion, who were living in a state of lukewarmness, quickened into a new life by a change of their habits of living, both physically and spiritually. Oh! it has given me great joy to see so many sickly, weakly ones, rise to a state of moral health, and triumph over all the miseries of their former state.

Everywhere I have found the great doctrine of Adventism, the time, loosely held and lightly esteemed by many; only the few, among the mass, holding to the definite time. But in presenting the evidence that the time is taught in the Bible, and that it is, in the language of a learned divine, now understood by "the wisest of Scriptural expositions, and of the almost universal consent of those who study the Lord's testimonies with seriousness and discrimination, having concurred in the time of their fulfillment"* in or about the year 1867 and 8, many have turned their attention to the subject afresh, and find satisfactory reasons to look for the coming of Jesus about that time. It is a cheering fact that light is increasing; and while some are growing more dark under its influence, others are walking and rejoicing in it, so that in this respect, also, my labor has not been in vain in the Lord.

In this special department of the truth, the Adventists have yet a great work to perform. Our work is not done, although we have done well in giving a wide circulation to all the truth within our reach in former years; yet the vast increase of knowledge is not to be "hid under a bushel," nor to be perverted by those to whom it is unwelcome. If those who have been enlightened shall for any cause reject it, God in his infinite wisdom can raise up other and more effective instrumentalities. God's will be done in this matter of the "gospel of the kingdom," and the church and world will have a full and fair warning of the "time of their visitation." When God in his providence brought me into connection with Father Miller in 1839, I was but a child in the understanding of the prophetic word," and especially of the "times and seasons." I only understood the great commentators, and followed their views of the fulfillment of the prophecies relating to the Jews' return to Palestine, and the conversion of the world and Millennium in 1866. Father Miller threw me from this position, and I embraced his views. But in my conversation with him he said, "I believe I am right in my calculations, but still I may fail; of this I am certain, it will not go beyond their time of 1866. It is either my time or theirs. You (said he) are a young man, and may live to see it—I shall not." And he added, "be faithful, Bro. Himes, to the end."

The following extract of a letter, which I received from Father Miller, dated Oct. 12, 1841, and which I read to the Portland conference in that month, will corroborate the truth of the above difference of this twenty-three years.

THE TIME OF HIS COMING.

"On this part of our subject, many are willing to admit that it is near. A few are of the opinion that the year is defined in Scripture, and those who believe in the time vary only about twenty-three years. The writer of this letter, in common with a large majority of those who believe in the time, in America, has been forced by the Scriptures to fix on the year 1843. As a matter of course, nearly all the calumny of the scoffers has been thrown upon them. Those who have fixed on the year 1847 have received less abuse from the clergy, editors, and scoffers, than their brethren who believe in the earlier date; while those writers who have fixed the time as late as 1866 have received little or no obloquy or notice from these babblers and complainers. Why is this so? you may inquire; for each class of those writers try to prove one important point in the theory, that is, that the time is actually revealed in the Bible; for this must first be established before either class of these expositors could be credited a moment by a well-balanced mind. And if this objection were all these men had against the 'Miller doctrine,' they would as soon complain of the believers in 1866, as of Miller, and others, who believe in any earlier dates. But this is not the case; it is only used as a subterfuge to parry off the force of the argument of the time itself; They know in their consciences that time is revealed, and they are not able to confute it. Therefore, what cannot be put down by fair means, must be by ridicule or persecution; for they are not willing to have it true. The professed ministers of Christ know, if it is true, they are under the most serious, solemn, and awful obligation to preach it, and warn and entreat the people to be ready for the event. But not possessing faith enough to risk their character on the word of God, or courage enough to meet the opposition this doctrine would of necessity raise; they will, as a matter of course, do all they can to keep their people ignorant, and cry out against excitements, even after they have been for years trying to excite their people to support the popular institutions of the day. No wonder then, brethren, you meet with so much opposition from this source. Yet we ought to be thankful that there are, even at this time, many of the ministers of Christ who are willing to be called fools for Christ's sake, and are examining this important subject; a great number of whom are satisfied that their former views of a temporal or spiritual millennium was but a a tradition of men, and are preaching the kingdom of God at hand. Numbers of these are now satisfied that it is at the door, and a few of these believe in the time, 1843. Thus far, then, my dear brethren, we have reason to be thankful to God, and take courage. We ought to do all we can to get our ministers to look at his subject."

Were Father Miller now living to see and weigh the evidence of the calculation of 1867 and 8, he would be as happy as good old Simeon was in the first Advent, although he would not, like him, desire to die, but live to see his Savior come in his kingdom. Well, I intend to be "faithful to the end." Nothing shall stand in my way, or neutralize my labor or influence in this work by my consent or sufferance. I stand free in the truth, and shall proclaim it with all my might, expecting God's blessing to attend my efforts. I stand now, as always, on the great truths we proclaimed in the Albany Conference in April, 1845, seventeen years since, and mean to carry them all out (especially the following very important article on the time of the Advent) in good faith:—

"We hold that the second coming, or appearing of Christ, is indicated to be now emphatically nigh, even at the doors, (Matt. 24: 33,) by the chronology of the prophetic periods, (Dan. 7: 25; 8: 14; 9: 24; 12: 7, 11, 12; Rev. 9: 10, 15; 11: 2, 3; 12: 6, 14; 13: 5,) the fulfillment of the prophecy, Dan. 2d, 7th, 8th, 9th, 11th and 12th; Rev. 9th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th and 17th,) and the signs of the times. (Matt. 24: 29; Luke 21: 25, 26.) And that this truth should be preached both to saints and sinners, that the first may rejoice, knowing their redemption draweth nigh, (Luke 21: 28; 1 Thess. 4: 18,) and the last be warned to flee from the wrath to come, (2 Cor. 5: 11,) before the Master of the house shall rise up and shut the door. (Luke 13: 24, 25.)"

It will be seen that if "by the chronology of the prophetic periods" we are to understand or have the proof "indicated" that Christ is nigh, even at the doors, that we must have some understanding of these to "indicate" this fact. Their termination in 1843 will not "indicate" very distinctly! a future coming to be nigh!! It was only on the ground that we were living in the age when "many were running to and fro," and knowledge was increasing, that we could have said the prophetic periods would indicate the nearness of redemption; except we refer to them in so general a sense as to make them of no practical use. But light has increased, and we now understand these periods and signs, and preach them to both saints and sinners, that the first may rejoice, knowing that their redemption is nigh, and the last be warned to flee from the wrath to come, before the Master shall rise up and shut to the door (Luke 13: 24, 25).

That this course of conduct should subject me to reproach, scorn, and misrepresentation is nothing strange nor unexpected; this was threatened, and has been very cleverly fulfilled. I have not thought proper to pay any attention to my accusers, although I have to meet their ungrateful conduct in many places. Of this I am sure, that no true Adventist will sanction such treatment of one that has a clean record, and is faithful to the cause for which he has toiled and suffered from the very first, without charge. Our Savior once said, "How can ye believe who receive honor one of another, and not that which cometh from God only." To lose the good opinion and confidence of those with whom we are associated, is one of the most trying things we have to meet in social and religious relations. Those who are associated with churches which oppose the Advent doctrine, and whose leading members hold the doctrine of the world's conversion, very rarely do their duty in an aggressive way; what they do is done negatively, and they defend themselves when attacked (as they will be when known to have tendencies to the Advent faith), on the points most popular, giving the least offence, and producing the least result. And many such oppose the agitation of the question in their churches, or even in the towns where they reside, and hence they do nothing themselves, and do not suffer others to do what they neglect or refuse to do. The good of those who are not favorable to the truth stands in the way. In Advent societies, where the preachers oppose the definite time, the same principle works on most of the members. It is unpleasant to come out in opposition to those we esteem; and in this way the evidence of the time is shut out just as it was formerly shut out of other churches. Now, as then, only the few independent thinkers stand up for free discussion and the whole truth. But this is one of the most difficult things to do, for in so doing a person loses caste, and is often bitterly assailed by his former associates, even though he becomes the better man in so doing. Hence most are slow to make any change in this direction.

We are slow to learn the lesson, "Cease ye from man," respecting religious opinions. Man at his best estate, even as a religious teacher, is altogether vanity as compared with Christ; yet, whatever is lovely in character, or brilliant in talent, gives an interest to his opinions, whether true or false. The only safety lies in following the word of God with our best judgment. An English divine of the 17th century* observes, "Where scripture speaks, or seems to speak, in consonance with the opinions of the system-mongers, well and good; where it does not, all sorts of critical discipline and violence are employed to break its refractory spirit, or bend it to compliance. The most forced and unnatural meaning of words, the most wildly conjectural emendations of the text, the most improbable reasonings, the most slender authorities, are all eagerly resorted to for this unhallowed purpose; and the Bible is made the most ridiculous book in the world, just to maintain the systems inviolate, and to render theologians self-consistent."

The celebrated and pious DR. OWEN observed to some one who taunted him with having changed his views upon one point: "He that can glory that in fourteen years he has not altered in his conception of some things, shall not have me for a rival." And MR. ORME remarks, in the life of this great man,—"Every change of religious sentiment is important to the person who makes it, and ought to be gone into with caution and deliberation. To be given to change is a great evil, and indicates a weak and unsettled mind. On the other hand, to be afraid of change, is frequently the result of indifference, or sinful apprehensions of consequences. It is the duty of every Christian to follow the leadings of the Spirit in the word of revelation, and to recollect that for his convictions he must be accountable at last." The eloquent SAURIN once said, "Let each of us say, when truth recognizes it, I have erred, I consecrate the remainder of my life to publish that truth which I have hitherto misunderstood, and which I opposed only because I had the misfortune to misunderstand it." The learned and devoted TOPLADY said, "I am resolved, in the strength of grace, to preach all the truths of the gospel, as far as I know them, and leave God to take care of the consequences."

It is a difficult thing for one to speak out on subjects that will be rejected by friends, and be likely to subject us to censure, and perhaps persecution. Many an honest mind has been kept in bondage by the fear of such results, and have for the want of courage been kept in darkness. But this should not be so. It would be more wise and safe to follow such distinguished men as Orton, Saurin, and Toplady. Believe and speak the truth, and leave consequences to God. And if a belief in the time of the Advent, or any other truth we believe to be revealed in and by the word of God, is likely to subject us to reproach, we are not by our course to "savor the things that be of men," but "of God." Many are convinced of the personal reign of Christ who do not believe, lest they share the fate of the Jews, who on believing in Christ at his first Advent, were "turned out of the synagogue." Others do not avow their faith in the time of his coming for the same reason. They have no moral courage to make the sacrifice.

I know how difficult it was, by personal experience, to give up the spiritual millennium and embrace the unpopular views of the personal coming of Christ. Also, to give up the popular notion of going to heaven at death, and embracing the true doctrine of the saints' inheritance—that they will inherit the New Earth forever as their home at the resurrection of the just. But my conviction becoming clear on these and other great truths, with the nearness of the consummation, I was by divine grace enabled to sacrifice all for the truth. And should any further light break on my mind on any important question, I hope, without the fear of man before my eyes, I will be able to act faithfully to God and the light he shall give me; so that I may follow the noble example of SAURIN, and consecrate the remainder of my days to publish that truth which I had hitherto misunderstood, and which I opposed only because I had the misfortune to misunderstand it.

In conclusion, I wish to assure the friends and supporters of the Advent cause everywhere, with whom I have stood for twenty years, that I stand firm and faithful on the old platform, and abide in the old ship, having confidence in her ability to bring us into port, without change of principles, policy, or name. We have the light, and have only to live up to it and let it shine. God is leading us; do not be afraid of his guidance. Knowledge is increasing; let us receive it and rejoice in it and be ready for the kingdom. I do not know what I may be left to do in the future; but at present I feel the love of Christ shed abroad in my heart, and have the witness that I am the Lord's. I am full of joy and peace, by day and night.

My health was never so good as at present; I feel young and jubilant, in the prospect of the kingdom soon to come. I preach twice a day with ease every week-day, and three times every Sabbath, often with a baptism, and the Lord's supper added. I feel refreshed by these labors, rather than broken down. As formerly, I eat two meals a day, plain and simple; take no medicine or stimulants of any kind. And the best of all is, God is with me. Blessed be his Holy Name! In about six years our work will be done, and then for the kingdom.

Trials.

"Every heart knoweth its own bitterness."

This remark was made to me by a dear brother in Christ a few days ago, and is still sounding in my ears. Before that I had thought, surely my lot is harder than any other, and was nearly discouraged striving to battle on alone. I often felt to murmur at my lot, and was tempted to think "all these things are against me." But God in his kindness did not utterly forsake me. He knew that trials were better for me than prosperity; and I want to feel thankful that I am "counted worthy to suffer for Christ's sake." I have thought much of the remark—"Every heart knoweth its own bitterness; and as thy day is, so shall thy strength be." I thank God that he still has disciples going about doing good. Here I was all alone; had not the privilege of meeting with the dear children in social meetings, and had often thought, "surely it is no use for me to try any longer to live a christian. I shall never be saved at this poor, dying rate." But God was watching over me with all a Father's love. He knew what I needed, and sent some of his dear chosen ones to encourage and sympathize with me. I never shall forget their parting advice. "Sister, keep looking to Jesus. He will help you." How much is comprehended in those few words! I will "look to Jesus," God being my helper. I know my Savior endured severer trials than I have ever yet passed through, and without a murmur. From Bethlehem's manger to Calvary's cross there was scarce one break in the clouds; these gathered more darkly around him, till they burst over his devoted head as he uttered his expiring cry. Yet throughout this pilgrimage of sorrow no murmuring accent ever escaped his lips. The most suffering of all suffering lives was one of uncomplaining submission—"Not my will, but Thy will be done," was the motto of this wondrous being.

When we are tried almost beyond endurance, tempted and buffeted on all sides, let us "look to Jesus," away from ourselves, and trust in him who is extending the arms of love and mercy. All these things will work for our good if we trust in him. May I lie passive in thy hand, oh God! exulting in the assurance that all thy appointments are never arbitrary, but that there is a gracious "need be" in them all. Our God and our Father, who spared not Jesus from trials, temptations and death, will he spare us? Let this thought silence all repinings, and let us pray God to withhold nothing that is needful for our salvation. Praise the Lord for what he has done for me! I should delight to do something for languishing Zion; but as I am one of the lambs, and the weakest at that, I will try to be contented with my lot, and not murmur or repine.

If the eye of that dear brother who said "Sister, every heart knoweth its own bitterness, and as thy day is so shall thy strength be," should fall on this, I hope he will praise God with his whole heart and soul that he providentially called on the lonely pilgrim in the town of B——.

Our Eden Home.

AIR.—The Irish Emigrant.

We are voyagers here on life's troubled sea,
Amid sorrow and sighing we roam;
And we long to leave the unhallowed scenes,
And rest in our Eden home.
We are pressing on to the land of rest,
We shall soon reach the heavenly shore,
And roam through the realms of the pure and blest
With the glorified throng, evermore.

Here tears from the eye and sighs from the heart
Ever fill us with sorrow and gloom;
And we long for that clime where joys are full,
And the flowers of Eden bloom;
Where pearly streams flow, and sunbeams dance
O'er the silence of time's dark night,
And there's no more sorrow, nor pain, nor death,
For the Lamb is the glorious light.

Then pilgrims, press on, for we're almost home,
We shall soon see the city fair,
With its shining portals and streets of gold,
As it sweeps through the fields of air;
With rapturous delight we soon shall gaze
On its unfading beauty serene,
And eat the fruit from the tree of life,
And walk o'er those fields of green.

Fireside Thoughts.

BRO. GRANT:—How blessed the thought that, while passing through the mournful changes of this life, we have a Friend who can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, whose heart pulsates with infinite sympathy for our race, and who knows how to succor us. His name is Jesus, and in him is every conceivable good. The way-worn pilgrim may go even to his mercy-seat, and pour out his burdened and grief-stricken heart, and always find him a Friend constant, untiring, and devoted. A friendship established upon the assimilation of the subjects of it to Christ, and sustained by a perfect christian integrity, is fraught with heavenly sweetness, and antedates the associations of the redeemed. He that has said, "I will never leave nor forsake thee," knows how to raise true friends to those who trust in him, when they are most needed; and I wish through the Crisis to express my gratitude to those who have so kindly ministered to me and mine through the dark and doleful scenes of the past winter.

Your letters have been to us like the dove bearing the olive leaf to the inmates of the ark. How often, when we have been almost ready to sink, have our breaking hearts been soothed and comforted by sweet words of sympathy from some dear brother or sister! Often as I have read your letters to my husband, have I seen tears of joy falling thick and fast down his pale and sunken cheeks, as he would exclaim, "O! how good the Lord is; he will provide; thank God for friends!" Your donations supplied his wants during his sickness, and when his eyes were closed in death, aided in conveying his lifeless form to the spot chosen by himself, above all others, as his resting place,—on the bank of the "noble Hudson." In the beautiful Sandy Hill Cemetery, beneath the waving shadows of the pines, where the murmuring sound of the distant waterfall seems to be singing a requiem to the silent dead, he waits for the clarion of Almighty God to bid the trembling earth cast out her dead.

Many a pilgrim who expected to live to see Jesus has been obliged to meet and yield to the conquering power of the king of terrors, and the question often arises in my mind, Who among our watchmen will be the next to follow? All are wasting away; much of the journey of life is past; we live to-day—to-morrow we die. Time consumes all temporal things, and takes away both blessings and evils. Every thing is changeable; it is compared to vapor and grass. Death frustrates all our schemes, and all of life's projects; it strips us of all honors, preferments and endowments; it decides our lot forever, terminating all our exertions for the good of others, works of benevolence, affection and sympathy, as well as our probation. O, then, let us all, ministers and people, gird the "armor" a little more closely about us, cease from strife and contentions about "questions to no profit"; and while thousands are rallying around the flag of our country, and manifest a willingness to face even the cannon's mouth for its rescue, let us rally around the standard of the "Prince of peace." Our leader will soon be "King of kings and Lord of lords"; he will be called Faithful and True; "in righteousness will he judge and make war." Then will every man give account of himself to God, and we shall find ourselves held individually responsible for the use we have made of all the ability God has given us, however small we have considered the gift; and we shall be responsible not only for the use we have made of our ability, but for the motive by which we have been actuated, whether we have been seeking to glorify our Master, or build up ourselves.

Our religious activities only please God when from their origin, history, and consequence, self is excluded and God is acknowledged. How necessary that we, who mean to live with Jesus in "the world to come," should search well our hearts, lest we find, when too late to make a change, that we have been serving ourselves instead of God. Let us search God's word carefully to find out the hope of the gospel, which is the moral safeguard of the church; for a just perception of its foundation imparts courage; a just recognition of its principles preserves from error; a just appreciation of its objects produces Christ-like purity, and bestows a power of endurance adequate to successfully compete with the many trials of life; having for its foundation the death and resurrection of Jesus, which is God's great moral nucleus around which is clustered every christian sympathy, in which is the most perfect memorial of divine benevolence, the brightest credence of truth's inspiration, the purity of disinterested affection; and the thrice-blessed consequences will be an immortalized church ransomed from the power of the grave, made "kings and priests unto our God," and reigning upon an earth filled with the glory of God. "They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

We hail thee with delight, thou glorious morn, that shall give us our long looked for rest. No wonder the sound of "Alleluia" is echoed and re-echoed through earth's wide domain by the great multitude, when "the Lord God Omnipotent reigns." We rejoice at the prospect before us even while the dark billows of affliction are rolling over our heads. I thought, as I read Sister Damman's affecting letter in the last Crisis, mothers will not weep there. Our children "will come from the land of the enemy." My own precious boy, who sleeps in the sunny South, with my dear husband, whose dying testimony was, "We are right in our advent faith," and fell with his armor on, will be there. And oh, my God! however sorrowful may be the road I am called to travel in this life, let me be there! Brethren and sisters, let us all be there. Some of us have suffered and struggled long; but our sufferings are not worth mentioning. The conflict is most over, and the victory will soon be ours.

Poor sinner, my heart aches for you. You cannot go there in your sins. You are being warned of your danger continually. The gospel is calling after you in thunder tones. O believe; reform your life; obey and live. You have no time to lose. The last sands of Gentile times are running out. The harvest will soon be past, the summer ended, and your doom sealed forever. A CHRISTIAN'S CREDENTIALS.—What are they? Not the blossom of a fair profession, but the ripe and mellow fruit of God-like actions. Piety towards God, and an active charity towards all mankind, the twin personifications of vital, saving piety. Salvation is of grace, not of merit, not of words, lest any man should boast. But faith, without works, is dead; it is like an index without a book—like hands without a clock—like sails without a ship—like a tree with nothing but dry and withered branches. Professed disciple of Christ, to prove thy discipleship genuine, thou must surround thyself with widows whom thou hast comforted, with orphans whom thou hast succored, with the ignorant whom thou hast instructed, with the wandering whom thou hast reclaimed, with the hungry whom thou hast fed, with the naked whom thou hast clothed, with the sick whom thou hast visited. These are thy trophies!

☞ You may talk of divine things as long as you please, but your [illegible] them; and if you feel them, you will love and practice them. Truth, as that [illegible] produces obedience.

☞ The writer that has no taste in the [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] the most generally pleasing is simplicity.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. N. M. Henry.

Dear Bro:—I have just received the paper of date Apr. 23d. Had my heart cheered with the good news from Bro. T. W. Smith. I bid you God speed. I wrote one letter to the Crisis, setting that right of my being the only preacher in Southern Ill., and also requesting Bro. Smith to meet me at Ramsey Station, above Vandalia; but the letter was not published for some reason.* But Bro. S. and myself are some sixty miles apart; so do not think we want no more help, for the calls are incessant, and we cannot answer one half of them. Churches are open every way in this region, especially the Baptist; two more urgent calls this week. I have preached, since the first of last August, ninety-one sermons in public, beside visiting and conversing with three thousand sick soldiers, explaining the Scriptures nearly all the time between sermons, which is more wearing than public speaking. There is nothing to hinder a glorious harvest to the Lord in this part of the State (Southern Ill.) but the want of laborers. The Lord blesses my efforts in such an especial manner, that I often stand astonished, and feel to tremble at the responsibility that rests on me. Last Saturday one who had formerly been a preacher, but had wandered from God and become wicked, sat with the tears running down his cheeks (as did many others) while I preached from these words—"What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" (or age.) The good Lord by his Spirit accompanied the word with power. A Baptist preacher of one of the Alton churches was present. He came and thanked me for the sermon; said he had long felt that some great event was close upon us—urged me in the most cordial manner to come and occupy his church. He expressed a particular desire to hear on the subject of the "Immortality of the soul,"—said he knew that "soul" and "spirit" were not synonymous terms. Promised to go in May and give a course of lectures on all the Bible subjects, that is, embracing the plain, Bible doctrines. I have three Baptist churches for good Father Blain to visit when he comes to see us again.

There is an earnest desire to have Bro. Sheldon come with his tent to this region. There would be much good done. Dear brother, do come. I am wearing out, and must rest or die; yet how can I see the eager hands stretched out from every way and be silent? Would the Lord so bless my efforts if it was not his will that I should preach? I think not. After my last sermon, at one of the churches where I had been laboring, one of the deacons, a good brother, came and giving my hand a warm press—"Sister Henry, I have just this to say to you, Blow the trumpet in Zion, and may God bless you." My sermon was from these words—"For what is our Hope?" There are a number that wish to organize into a "Band" in this region. I was telling a good Congregational Sister this afternoon that I was so weary, just able to sit up, and not that all the time, yet I have appointments ahead of me for three weeks, that it seemed to me like being surrounded in deep drifts of snow, all alone. I see the light ahead. If I stop I shall perish. I must make an effort to gain the light, so I struggle on; sink down so weary sometimes that heart and brain nearly cease to pulsate. Then comes a pleading petition from some quarter—"Come and tell us." Then comes the word, "If the watchman see the sword coming, and warn not the people, his blood will I require at the watchman's hands."

So on and on I go, keeping my eye on the prize, pressing toward the mark, trying to so run that I may win. Men are wanted out here, good men. Don't come riding a hobby-horse, for that is a breed of horses that we don't want this way; and by the way, don't let them "get stabling" in the Crisis. Have it a paper that will feed babes in Christ. It is nearly all the food my little ones get. Make it nourishing for them. Your sister looking for the Lord.

God's Attributes not at War.

Conspicuous among the attributes of Deity stand justice and mercy. The thought of an unjust God is revolting; while the thought of an unmerciful God is equally repulsive. Theologians have speculated and disputed much upon this theme, all being anxious to attribute these attributes to Jehovah, and yet finding one or the other of them at war with their system of theology. While the reputed orthodox have charged the Universalists with detracting from the justice of God, the Universalists have charged them with diminishing his mercy. Thus the one class has been in as great a dilemma as the other.

To save all men irrespective of character is irreconcilable with justice; and to torment men through endless ages is equally irreconcilable with mercy. Then what disposal can be made of the wicked without infringing upon God's justice, or interfering with his mercy? I answer, let the sinner cease to live. This will do the sinner no injustice, and will leave the character of God sustained. Firstly, God was under no obligation to give the sinner existence. Secondly, He gave him only a probationary existence. Thirdly, if that existence is turned to a bad purpose, God is under no obligation to continue it. Neither his mercy nor his justice plead for it. Mercy says you have given him a fair chance to secure endless existence, but he would not; and justice says it is right to discontinue an abused trial existence. Justice points to the Judgment "in the last day," and says, Let his case be decided there. Mercy cannot plead for the endless perpetuity of an existence which is alike unserviceable to God and the sinner. Justice and mercy unite in saying, Let such an existence come to an end.

Pride.

When Paul was describing "the last days," he says the people will be "proud." If we see at the present time an increase of meekness in our day among the professors of religion, it would show that we have not yet come to the last days. What are the facts? We see no ground for but one view of the matter,—but one conclusion—that pride is one of the besetting sins of this age. This truth is proverbial, and cannot be successfully controverted. When the present state of nominal christendom is compared with its condition twenty to forty years since, the increase of pride is astonishing! There are no signs of abatement; but, on the contrary, a most rapid progress. We might as well deny rum will intoxicate, as to dispute the prevalence of pride in the religion of the day. It is seen in all its departments. This sad state of things is one item that helps to make these "last days" "perilous." But few have courage to go against the rising tide, and be meek and lowly like Jesus. Each is unwilling to be more plain and simple in his dress and manners than the fashionable world around. There is a great lack of moral courage in these times; hence but few will come out from the world and be separate. The governing principle of action is, do as others do; avoid being singular. Thus Satan has succeeded in crippling the powers and usefulness of most of the professors of religion in our day. Earnest zeal for Christ is now scarcely known. Pride ever produces such a result, as it is directly opposed to the Spirit of Christ.

This antichristian feeling is developing itself not only in dress and manners, but even in houses erected professedly for the worship of God. In the Litchfield (Ct.) Republican, we find the popular sentiment expressed in the following language:—

"We believe that the more beautiful and imposing our churches are, the greater will be man's interest in religion, and the more deeply will the worshipers be affected by it."

This being true, then the Catholics are producing the most healthy effect, for no other denomination have such "imposing churches." One fact is evident,—the more worldly a congregation becomes, the more anxious will it be to have "beautiful and imposing" houses of worship. It then follows that many have become very much like the world. Says the Republican, from which we took the foregoing extract.

"Our Gothic churches are a perfect transcript of the great temple of nature; and in all their arrangements, repose on spiritual facts. They shadow forth the Infinite and Everlasting. None can enter them without feeling that they are truly 'the house of God, and the gate of heaven.'"

Let us inquire how these "imposing . . . churches" affect the mind. It is a well-known fact that a great proportion of the people in our large cities and villages do not attend public worship. When asked for their reason, many give the following:—"Your church arrangements are made for the rich and intellectual, rather than for the poor and unlearned." One who looks at things as they are, says:—

"The seats in the churches are so costly that none but the wealthy can purchase or rent them, and the poor know very well that their rich neighbors would not welcome them to seats with them in their religious assemblies. The result is, that in our cities and large towns our churches generally visibly present this one indication of their real relations to Christ; to wit, that in them the poor have not 'the gospel preached to them.'"

These statements show some of the effects of the "imposing churches." Let us look within them and see the further developments of pride. A lady says:—

"When I go to the theatre I am very careless of my dress, as the audience are too attentive to the play to observe my wardrobe; but when I go to church I am very particular in my outward appearance, as most people go there to see how their neighbors and friends deport themselves."

Take another illustration as given by a popular writer:—

"You enter the church porch. The portly sexton, with his thumb in the armhole of his vest, meets you at the door. He glances at you; your hat and your coat are new, so he graciously escorts you to an eligible seat in the broad aisle. Close behind you follows a poor, meek, plainly clad seamstress, relieved from her treadmill round, to think one day in seven of the immortal! The sexton is struck with sudden blindness. She stands embarrassed one moment, then as the truth dawns upon her, retraces her steps, and with a crimson blush, recrosses the threshhold, which she had profaned with her plebian feet.

Hark to the organ! It is a strain from 'Norma,' slightly Sabbathized. Now the worshipers one after another glide in—silks rattle—plumes wave—satins glisten—diamonds glitter—and scores of forty dollar handkerchiefs shake out their perfumed odors."

That we have arrived at a period in the history of the world and the church, when pride is a ruling passion, is a fact so apparent, that to prove it would be like an attempt to show that spring succeeds winter. Touching this point, we would say, as we did of "selfishness" and "covetousness," if we have not yet come to the period in the history of our race when pride is sufficiently developed to begin to fulfil the prediction of Paul, "that in the "last days," . . . men shall be . . . proud;" then how will they appear when this sign is fully accomplished? It may be said, "men have always been proud." True, but "in the last days" there is to be such an increase of this wicked passion, that it will be specially noticed, and become one of the signs that we are near the end of the present dispensation. It appears very evident that we are now living when this sign is being witnessed. Let us be ready for the great event indicated—the second coming of Christ.—o.

Basis of Organization.

The time has come when Spiritualists begin to speak openly on the subject of organization. For some years, when we stated to them that they would yet organize and assume political power as well as ecclesiastical, they expressed astonishment that we should anticipate any such movement on their part. Now the thing begins to open so clearly, that all doubt is removed.

In the Banner of Light, April 26th, '62, we find a long article from Edward B. Freeland, on the "Basis of Religious Organization," in which he says:—

"There will be no difficulty in gathering ourselves into one all-embracing, harmonious organization, including in itself the representatives of the most opposite and diverse aspects of the one grand truth. . . . We find that the Great Sects—Christian, Mahometan, Brahaminic, Bhuddist, etc., etc., have each represented a side of truth only, and not the whole truth; that either of them taken alone is defective and insufficient; that the doctrines of all of them are true, and in the same sense, as the doctrines of any one of them; and that consequently, they must be all harmonized in the greater truth, which includes them all.

The divinity of all religions being thus scientifically demonstrated to be primately the same, we can all stand upon the broad platform."

He goes on to say that this "platform is none too broad for Spiritualism as a religion."

Spiritualism proposes to unite with all systems of religion, Christian or Pagan, that adopt the doctrine of "the immortality of the soul." This they affirm is the only test of fellowship. We apprehend the time is not far off when many will see more clearly the importance of the doctrine of "the sleep of the dead." We feel very thankful that we were enabled to see this great truth so early, and that we had courage to declare it to the world. Be not ashamed of Jesus or his words. The conflict between truth and error is daily becoming more earnest. Let every christian be firm, immovable, resolved to conquer or die in the conflict. To draw back now, is to go to perdition. The King is coming soon. Awake! Awake!—o.

Is our Present War the subject of Prophecy?

A correspondent writing from La Porte, Ind., asks—"Bro. Morgan, what do you think about this war? Is it the commencement of the last great battle?"

To this we reply we cannot affirm that it is. The only means of making any just estimate of the war as a subject of prophecy, is the assurance we have that we are living at that period when the "time of trouble" may be expected shortly; when it follows that, at most, our war to this point can be no more than a link in the chain of fearful events that are shortly to sweep the anti-Christian nations of the world. And that this is a link we have no authority to affirm dogmatically. Some are looking for this war to end, and another form of government be established in this country answering to the two-horned beast of Rev. 13. Judging from present appearances, the war will not continue long in its present form. But we shall be happy if a worse thing does not befall this nation before we get through with our difficulties. What it may be we cannot tell; but we say it upon the strength of our faith, that this is the specific time when, just before the second advent of our Lord, it is said there shall be "Distress of nations with perplexity; . . . men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." (Luke 21: 25, 26.

Dr. Cumming, of England, gave it as an opinion that the war of the Crimea might be at least the beginning of the battle of Armageddon (Rev. 16). In this he was mistaken, as we might be should we make any unwarrantable conjectures. Being confirmed as we are in our general position by the accumulating "signs of the times" in the political, religious, and social world, the students of prophecy can well afford to wait the development of events which, a little hence, will demonstrate to the world what, if so much as hinted at a few years ago, would have been cried down as madness. The point worthy our special attention now is, to see that we act well the part of the wise virgins, who took with their lamps oil in their vessels. "Let us not sleep as do others." "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord. . . . Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching."—M.

The Showers of Brimstone Again.

Our Illinois correspondent, who some while since wrote us of the falling of brimstone in that region, not accepting what we suggested might be a reasonable cause of the phenomena, calls attention to the subject again. If a more rational suggestion can be made, we should be glad to see it. Or if some are disposed to look upon our suggestion as a species of rationalism, while they consider the fact as partaking somewhat of the supernatural, we submit to that: protesting meanwhile against any such intention on our own part. That there was a series of remarkable facts preceding the destruction of Jerusalem, we are quite aware; and that things of a similar character may be witnessed in this last end of the world we do not dispute. While doubtless some may be quixotic, or overmarvellous, the great danger is, that we shall be so "overcharged with the cares of this life," that the day of the Lord will come upon us unawares. We do well to study carefully all the "signs of the times." —M.

"Bro. Morgan:—Now to the 'rain of brimstone.' If it came from 'a volcano,' is it not singular that there should be two rains of it, and on the same or nearly the same region, two weeks apart? The first fell on the 18th of March, covering an area of nearly or quite twenty miles. In parts of Madison and Macoupin counties it was gathered in balls, and pronounced by all to be pure brimstone, both in color, smell and taste, and burned readily. It lay all over the ground, and on water tubs, tops of fences,—in fact, everywhere like a fall of snow. If pure brimstone will come so far before it falls, why don't it fall in the immediate neighborhood of the volcanos? and why should it rain both times just in the same locality? Can you tell? In Tennessee, some three or four years ago, they had a rain of blood, so that the Cumberland river was red. I have this from the best authority. People are living near here that saw it, and they say that the newspapers at the time teemed with it. Where did that come from? The prophet declares that in 'the signs' in the 'earth beneath' is 'blood.' I must have a better definition to satisfy my mind. God has rained 'fire and brimstone,' and will again. Why not 'water and brimstone?' In fact, he has done it. Yours, looking for the Lord."

The Wilbraham Campmeeting.—To numerous friends making inquiries concerning this annual meeting, we will say that it is expected there will be a meeting on the old ground this year (d. v.) as usual; probably about the last week in August. A committee is appointed and much already done in preparation for the meeting.—M.

Correction.—The articles published in the last two numbers of the Crisis, headed The Coming Kingdom, should have been credited to the "Protestant Churchman." They were from the pen of Dr. Tyng.—M.

Biographical Sketches.—No. 6.

REV. WILLIAM MILLER.—Continued.

Mr. Miller now undertook, with the aid of Cruden's Concordance, to search diligently the Scriptures; knowing all the stratagems and foibles of the deist and infidel, he set himself earnestly to the task of thoroughly determining whether the Scriptures could or could not be reconciled with themselves. In this he became perfectly satisfied. In this state of mind, he continued for a number of years a champion against infidelity, and an honored member of the church.

With such an experience, we are not surprised to hear him, after a few years, saying—"When I was about my business, it was continually ringing in my ears, 'Go and tell the world of their danger.' This text was constantly occurring to me:—'When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thy hand. Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it; if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul.'"—Ezk. 33: 8, 9. Accordingly in 1831–2 we find him beginning that course of public labor that has been so eminently successful in promoting the Redeemer's cause. His talent was speedily discerned, and he shortly entered upon the list of regular Baptist ministers.

The views Mr. Miller had arrived at in his study of the Scriptures were nearly those of the millennarian. But to this he had added not only the faith that it was near,—as had Spaulding, Mather, and others,—but in his study of chronology he had arrived at the "opinion that the 2300 days of Daniel's prophecy might be expected to terminate about the Jewish year 1843–4." Probably this peculiarity might have contributed very considerably to give him notoriety; but be that as it may, he very soon found himself called upon, by clergymen of [illegible] denominations far and near, to come and labor among them. And few men of modern times have been more indefatigable or successful than was he. At one time we hear him saying, "I have not visited a place where the Lord has not given me one or two souls for my hire. I have spent eight weeks in St. Lawrence county (N. Y.), and delivered eighty-two lectures this fall." And again: "Thus ends my tour into Massachusetts, making eight hundred lectures from Oct. 1st, 1834, to June 7th, 1839."

Having spoken of Mr. Miller's views of chronology, the reader may be interested with the following anecdote, given by his biographer, which serves to show in a brief way his manner of reasoning upon this subject. Being informed that a physician of the neighborhood had pronounced him an estimable man, but a monomaniac upon the subject of the second advent, the writer says:—"One of his children being sick one day, he sent for the doctor., who, after prescribing for the child, noticed that Mr. Miller was very. mute, and asked what ailed him.

"'Well, I hardly know, doctor. I want you to see what does and prescribe for me.' The doctor felt of his pulse, and could not decide respecting his malady, and inquired what he supposed was his complaint. 'Well,' said Mr. Miller, 'I don't know but I am a monomaniac; I want you to examine me, and see if I am; and if so, cure me. Can you tell when a man is a monomaniac?'

"The doctor blushed, and said he thought he could. Mr. Miller wished to know how. 'Why,' said the doctor, 'a monomaniac is rational on all subjects but one; and when you touch that particular subject, he will become raving.'

"'Well,' said Mr. Miller, 'I insist upon it that you see whether I am in reality a monomaniac; and if I am, you shall prescribe for and cure me. You shall therefore sit down with me two hours, while I present the subject of the advent to you, and if I am a monomaniac, by that time you will discover it.'

"The doctor was somewhat disconcerted; but Mr. Miller insisted, and told him, as it was to present the state of his mind, he might charge for his time as in regular practice.

"The doctor finally consented, and at Mr. Miller's request, opened the Bible and read from the eighth of Daniel. As he read along, Mr. Miller inquired what the ram denoted, with the other symbols presented. The doctor had read Newton, and applied them to Persia, Greece, and Rome, as Mr. Miller did. Mr. Miller then inquired how long the vision of those empires was to be?

"'2300 days.'

"'What!' said Mr. Miller, 'could those great empires cover only 2300 literal days?'

"'Why,' said the doctor, 'those days are years, according to all commentators; and those kingdoms are to continue 2300 years.'

"Mr. Miller then asked him to turn to the 2nd of Daniel, and to the 7th; all of which he explained the same as Mr. Miller. He was then asked if he knew when the 2300 days would end. He did not know, as he could not tell when they commenced.

"Mr. Miller told him to read the 9th of Daniel. He read down till he came to the 21st verse, when Daniel saw the man Gabriel whom he had 'seen in the vision.'

"'In what vision?' Mr. Miller inquired.

"'Why,' said the doctor, 'in the vision of the 8th of Daniel.'

"'Wherefore, understand the matter and consider the vision.' He had now come, then, to make him understand that vision, had he?

"'Yes,' said the doctor.

"'Well, seventy weeks are determined; what are these seventy weeks a part of?'

"'Of the 2300 days.'

"'Then do they begin with the 2300 days?'

"'Yes,' said the doctor.

"'When did they end?'

"'In A. D. '33.'

"'Then, how far would 2300 days extend after '33?'

"The doctor subtracted 490 from 2300, and replied, '1810. Why,' said he, 'that is past.'

"'But,' said Mr. Miller, 'there were 1810 from '33; in what year would that come?'

"The doctor saw at once that the 33 should be added, and set down 33 and 1810, and adding them, replied, '1843.' At this unexpected result, the doctor settled back in his chair and colored, but immediately took his hat and left the house in a rage. The next day he again called on Mr. Miller, and looked as though he had been in the greatest mental agony.

"'Why, Mr. Miller,' said he, 'I am going to hell. I have not slept a wink since I was here yesterday. I have looked at the question in every light, and the vision must terminate about 1843, and I am unprepared.'" And, as might well be expected, Mr. Miller pointed him to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world; and it is added the doctor became as great a monomaniac as was Mr. Miller.

As illustrative of the manner in which Mr. Miller was esteemed at this time, we may state that his brethren, deeming it important that he be fully defended from the attacks of malignant men, furnished him with commendations, signed by upwards of fifty [illegible] of Baptist clergymen. The following may serve the same end.

At the beginning of the year 1835 we find him laboring in Addison, Vt., and next in Cornwall, and shortly after we find him writing to a clergyman (under date of Feb. 11)—"The Lord opens doors faster than I can fill them. To-morrow I have an appointment in Whiting, which will occupy a week. The next week I shall be in Shoreham; the last week in this month at Bridgeport; the first week in March in Middletown; the second in Hoosac. I have calls from Schroon, Ticonderoga, Moriah, Essex, Chazy, Champlain, Plattsburgh, Peru, Mooretown, Canton, Pottsdam, Hopkinton, Stockholm, Parishville, and other places too numerous to mention." He adds in this letter that the Lord had blessed him, and given him fruit in nearly every place.

In 1838, we find him in Vt. Writing from Montpelier, Nov. 17th, he says:—"There is a great excitement in this place. Last night we had a solemn and interesting meeting. There was a great breaking down and much weeping. Some souls have been born again. I can hardly get away from this people. They want me to stay another week, but I shall go to the next village on Monday. Mr. Kellogg, the Congregational minister here, is a good man, and his church are living christians." Again he says, "There has been a reformation in every place that I have lectured in since I left home, and the work is progressing in every place rapidly. The meeting-houses are crowded to overflowing."

In the month of April, 1841, we find him preaching in Lowell, Mass., directly after which he estimates that since Oct. 1st, 1834, he had traveled four thousand five hundred and sixty miles, and delivered six hundred and twenty-seven lectures averaging one and a half hours each, resulting in about five thousand hopeful conversions.

The Voice of the Prophets.

We have received the April number of this interesting journal. The following is the table of contents for this number:—

The Coming Kingdom, by S. H. Tyng, D. D.; Emanuel Swedenborg on Spiritual Sense of Scripture; Two Witnesses, by A. Hale; Tracts for the Times, No. 4, by James Scott, Scotland; A Singular Monkish Prophecy; Extract of a Letter from R. Robertson, Esq.; Dr. Nicholas Smith; Bro. A. Simpson; Christ's Coming; Coming Glory; An Inquiry; Teach us to pray.

The author adds:—"Two volumes of the 'Voice' have been published and bound in paper covers, and can be furnished for circulation in any quantity. They are published in an attractive form, and find their way to the library and centre-table, and become the reading of many who have never as yet looked into the Advent question. A little exertion on the part of believers would greatly extend the circulation of these volumes of the 'Voice,' and light up a lamp in every dwelling where they are placed. We have multitudes of testimonies of the great good they have accomplished. Let us remember that time is short; what we do must be done faithfully, liberally, and quickly, if we would have the approbation of the Master when he shall come.

Our first and second volumes of the Voice will be sold hereafter at the following prices:—Single volume, by mail, 30 cts., not including postage. Our retail price for a single volume hereafter will be 30 cts. Wholesale price to agents will be 20 cts. and they will retail them at 30 cts. In this way agents will save themselves, and receive something for their labor.

Any person sending us one dollar shall receive five volumes, the same as those who purchase a larger amount. But in this case the express on postage will be paid by the purchaser. Postage 4 cts. per vol. Express charges will be less for short distances, or for a greater number."

For sale at this office.

☞ Some of our city friends may be glad to know that two or three children could be boarded, taught music and English branches, kept out of bad company, and allowed to enjoy all the advantages of a quiet country home in the family of Eld. For the Crisis.

Tract Fund.

Bro. Grant:—I have for a long time considered the tract distribution one of the greatest auxiliaries that can be used in disseminating truth and scattering light abroad upon the glorious subject of life and immortality only through Christ, and that at his appearing and kingdom, when, as the apostle Timothy says, he comes to judge the quick and the dead. I feel greatly indebted to these little flying messengers myself, for when I first began to inquire after truth, I could take them and sit down by myself and examine them with an unbiassed mind, and weigh them in the scales of God's almighty word. Judging from the effects they had upon me, and from a multitude of testimonies I have had from others of the good that they have done them, I feel constrained to help keep so good a cause in motion; and as my wife has felt the same powers of truth working in her mind, and bringing her in love with these great truths, she feels her soul stirred within to help in presenting the truth to the minds of others by tracts and cheap publications, thereby doing to others as others have done to her. So enclosed you have ten dollars for her, and also ten for myself. Now, Bro. Grant, as these subscriptions a little more than make up the proposed sum for your capital stock to start upon, I hope and pray and do believe that the blessings of God will rest upon you, and all that co-operate with you in this noble work; and I also trust and do likewise believe that the same great blessings will rest upon those that have cast their bread upon the waters, who will after a few days find it again. O, brethren and sisters, let us work while the day lasts, for soon the night cometh to this world, and we shall be called upon to lay our armor by, and dwell with Christ at home. Your brother and sister, looking for life only through Christ.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. C. Rice.

Dear Bro. Grant:—It is with a heavy heart that I improve this opportunity of informing you, and all interested, how we are getting along. It is quite probable that ere this reaches you I will have performed the painful duty of consigning the most endearing object of my earthly affections to the cold, cold earth, there to rest until called forth by the rending blast of Jehovah's trump; when she will arise untrammeled from her dusty bed, as beautiful, yea, tenfold more glorious than she ever was while here in the habiliments of frail mortality. What a glorious hope!

I have suffered from some very severe trials since I left Wilbraham, and fear that the most painful still await me; but it is the pleasure of my Master, and will eventually result to his honor and glory, and my benefit I hope. When I think of His coming so soon, and freeing us from all the sorrows of this dreary life, my trembling heart bounds at the thought. Then there will be no gazing upon the emaciated forms of friends; no hearing or beholding the convulsive, racking, torturous cough, nor agonizing groan of invalids. Could there be a more lovely, more soul-stirring stimulant than that to induce the weary child of God to breast the storms and trials of this gloomy life, and strive to double his diligence in making his calling and election sure—until "deliverance hath come."

Religion appears to be at a low ebb in this region in the churches, but our great King is working, and we anticipate glorious results. Sister Muzzey is in her element, she having chances of getting among people, where a brother (apparently) could not; while Bro. Ingham has been throwing his mite into the Lord's treasury, hoping to enjoy the happiness of bearing sheaves homeward, who will be stars in his crown in the day of his rejoicing.

We feel comforted ofttimes while perusing the welcome messenger—the Crisis—which wafts its cheering influences from family to family, freighted with encouraging and soul-stirring communications from fellow pilgrims scattered abroad; all exulting in the one grand theme,—Deliverance.

How happily does my mind revert to the pleasant associations in Wilbraham's shady grove, where agreeable acquaintances were formed, perhaps never to be revived personally until the "marriage supper of the Lamb," when the restored Eden will bloom most beautifully, and ring with praise infinitely surpassing even Wilbraham's experience. There will be no complaining of colds or other indispositions then; no persons who will droop or shake their heads gloomily and say, "I can't sing"; but

"The lame will leap, the dumb will sing on that delightful shore,
The infant's lisping, prattling tongue will shout
forevermore;
Decrepit age will ne'er be known, nor any suffering poor,
But every sorrow o'er, Glory! Glory! Hallelujah!"
etc.
Yes, we'll meet in glory with all that happy throng,
Praising our Redeemer with an immortal tongue;
And with that heavenly choir we'll sing redemp-
tion's song,
When we all get home. Glory! Glory! Hallelujah!"

Hillsburg, N. S.

From J. H. Randall.

Bro. Morgan:—You will see by this that we are suffering some of the evils of this miserable rebellion. Our son of nineteen years was wounded at the slaughter at Pittsburgh Landing, on Sunday, the 6th of April, at about noon, shot through the thigh. After being shot, he crawled on his hands and knees one mile and a half. It took him till Monday, about noon. We got him home on the 19th. I fear it will be a long time before he will be able to get about. He has not been able to sit up for more than three quarters of an hour in a day since he came home. It is distressing indeed to see the suffering, immorality and vice occasioned by this unholy rebellion. My son had nothing to lie on but a little hay, and his overcoat with one blanket over him. He lay out on the deck of the boat all the way from Savannah, Tenn., to Quincy, Ill. A comrade gave him a blanket while on the boat at Pittsburgh Landing, but the first time he fell asleep it was stolen from him. At Savannah his knapsack was lost by some means, and all his clothes, so that he had nothing to wear but his shirt and jacket until he got to Quincy, where he was supplied. These are strange times. Yours in hope.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Sr. N. M. Henry.

DEAR BRO:—I have just received the paper of date Apr. 23d. Had my heart cheered with the good news from Bro. T. W. Smith. I bid you God speed. I wrote one letter to the Crisis, setting that right of my being the only preacher in Southern Ill., and also requesting Bro. Smith to meet me at Ramsey Station, above Vandalia; but the letter was not published for some reason.* But Bro. S. and myself are some sixty miles apart; so do not think we want no more help, for the calls are incessant, and we cannot answer one half of them. Churches are open every way in this region, especially the Baptist; two more urgent calls this week. I have preached, since the first of last August, ninety-one sermons in public, beside visiting and conversing with three thousand sick soldiers, explaining the Scriptures nearly all the time between sermons, which is more wearing than public speaking. There is nothing to hinder a glorious harvest to the Lord in this part of the State (Southern Ill.) but the want of laborers. The Lord blesses my efforts in such an especial manner, that I often stand astonished, and feel to tremble at the responsibility that rests on me. Last Saturday one who had formerly been a preacher, but had wandered from God and become wicked, sat with the tears running down his cheeks (as did many others) while I preached from these words—"What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" (or age.) The good Lord by his Spirit accompanied the word with power. A Baptist preacher of one of the Alton churches was present. He came and thanked me for the sermon; said he had long felt that some great event was close upon us—urged me in the most cordial manner to come and occupy his church. He expressed a particular desire to hear on the subject of the "Immortality of the soul,"—said he knew that "soul" and "spirit" were not synonymous terms. Promised to go in May and give a course of lectures on all the Bible subjects, that is, embracing the plain, Bible doctrines. I have three Baptist churches for good Father Blain to visit when he comes to see us again.

There is an earnest desire to have Bro. Sheldon come with his tent to this region. There would be much good done. Dear brother, do come. I am wearing out, and must rest or die; yet how can I see the eager hands stretched out from every way and be silent? Would the Lord so bless my efforts if it was not his will that I should preach? I think not. After my last sermon, at one of the churches where I had been laboring, one of the deacons, a good brother, came and giving my hand a warm press—"Sister Henry, I have just this to say to you, Blow the trumpet in Zion, and may God bless you." My sermon was from these words—"For what is our Hope?" There are a number that wish to organise into a "Band" in this region. I was telling a good Congregational Sister this afternoon that I was so weary, just able to sit up, and not that all the time, yet I have appointments ahead of me for three weeks, that it seemed to me like being surrounded in deep drifts of snow, all alone. I see the light ahead. If I stop I shall perish. I must make an effort to gain the light, so I struggle on; sink down so weary sometimes that heart and brain nearly cease to pulsate. Then comes a pleading petition from some quarter—"Come and tell us." Then comes the word, "If the watchman see the sword coming, and warn not the people, his blood will I require at the watchman's hands."

So on and on I go, keeping my eye on the prize, pressing toward the mark, trying to so run that I may win. Men are wanted out here, good men. Don't come riding a hobby-horse, for that is a breed of horses that we don't want this way; and by the way, don't let them "get stabling" in the Crisis. Have it a paper that will feed babes in Christ. It is nearly all the food my little ones get. Make it nourishing for them. Your sister looking for the Lord.

N. M. HENRY.

For the Crisis.

God's Attributes not at War.

Conspicuous among the attributes of Deity stand justice and mercy. The thought of an unjust God is revolting; while the thought of an unmerciful God is equally repulsive. Theologians have speculated and disputed much upon this theme, all being anxious to attribute these attributes to Jehovah, and yet finding one or the other of them at war with their system of theology. While the reputed orthodox have charged the Universalists with detracting from the justice of God, the Universalists have charged them with diminishing his mercy. Thus the one class has been in as great a dilemma as the other.

To leave all men irrespective of character is incompatible with justice; and to torment men through endless ages is equally incompatible with mercy! Then what disposal can be made of the wicked without infringing upon God's justice, or interfering with his mercy? I answer, let the sinner cease to live. This will do the sinner no injustice, and will leave the character of God unstained. Firstly, God was under no obligation to give the sinner existence. Secondly, He gave him only a trial existence. Thirdly, if that existence is turned to a bad purpose, God is under no obligation to continue it. Neither his mercy nor his justice plead for it. Mercy says you have given him a fair chance to secure endless existence, but he would not; and justice says it is right to discontinue an abused trial existence. Justice points to the Judgment "in the last day," and says, Let his case be decided there. Mercy cannot plead for the endless perpetuity of an existence which is alike unserviceable to God and the sinner. Justice and mercy unite in saying, Let such an existence come to an end.

Pride.

When Paul was describing "the last days," he says the people will be "PROUD." If we see at the present time an increase of meekness in our day among the professors of religion, it would show that we have not yet come to the last days. What are the facts? We see no ground for but one view of the matter,—but one conclusion—that pride is one of the besetting sins of this age. This truth is proverbial, and cannot be successfully controverted. When the present state of nominal christendom is compared with its condition twenty to forty years since, the increase of pride is astonishing! There are no signs of abatement; but, on the contrary, a most rapid progress. We might as well deny rum will intoxicate, as to dispute the prevalence of pride in the religion of the day. It is seen in all its departments. This sad state of things is one item that helps to make these "last days" "perilous." But few have courage to go against the rising tide, and be meek and lowly like Jesus. Each is unwilling to be more plain and simple in his dress and manners than the fashionable world around. There is a great lack of moral courage in these times; hence but few will come out from the world and be separate. The governing principle of action is, do as others do; avoid being singular. Thus Satan has succeeded in crippling the powers and usefulness of most of the professors of religion in our day. Earnest zeal for Christ is now scarcely known. Pride ever produces such a result, as it is directly opposed to the Spirit of Christ.

This antichristian feeling is developing itself not only in dress and manners, but even in houses erected professedly for the worship of God. In the Litchfield (Ct.) Republican, we find the popular sentiment expressed in the following language:—

"We believe that the more beautiful and imposing our churches are, the greater will be man's interest in religion, and the more deeply will the worshipers be affected by it."

This being true, then the Catholics are producing the most healthy effect, for no other denomination have such "imposing churches." One fact is evident,—the more worldly a congregation becomes, the more anxious will it be to have "beautiful and imposing" houses of worship. It then follows that many have become very much like the world. Says the Republican, from which we took the foregoing extract.

"Our Gothic churches are a perfect transcript of the great temple of nature; and in all their arrangements, repose on spiritual facts. They shadow forth the Infinite and Everlasting. None can enter them without feeling that they are truly 'the house of God, and the gate of heaven.'"

Let us inquire how these "imposing . . . churches" affect the mind. It is a well-known fact that a great proportion of the people in our large cities and villages do not attend public worship. When asked for their reason, many give the following:—"Your church arrangements are made for the rich and intellectual, rather than for the poor and unlearned." One who looks at things as they are, says:—

"The seats in the churches are so costly that none but the wealthy can purchase or rent them, and the poor know very well that their rich neighbors would not welcome them to seats with them in their religious assemblies. The result is, that in our cities and large towns our churches generally visibly present this one indication of their real relations to Christ; to wit, that in them the poor have not 'the gospel preached to them.'"

These statements show some of the effects of the "imposing churches." Let us look within them and see the further developments of pride. A lady says:—

"When I go to the theatre I am very careless of my dress, as the audience are too attentive to the play to observe my wardrobe; but when I go to church I am very particular in my outward appearance, as most people go there to see how their neighbors and friends deport themselves."

Take another illustration as given by a popular writer:—

"You enter the church porch. The portly sexton, with his thumb in the armholes of his vest, meets you at the door. He glances at you; your hat and your coat are new, so he graciously escorts you to an eligible seat in the broad aisle. Close behind you follows a poor, meek, plainly clad seamstress, relieved from her treadmill round, to think one day in seven of the immortal! The sexton is struck with sudden blindness. She stands embarrassed one moment, then as the truth dawns upon her, retraces her steps, and with a crimson blush, recrosses the threshold, which she had profaned with her plebian feet.

Hark to the organ! It is a strain from 'Norma,' slightly Sabbathized. Now the worshipers one after another glide in—silks rattle—plumes wave—satins glisten—diamonds glitter—and scores of forty dollar handkerchiefs shake out their perfumed odors."

That we have arrived at a period in the history of the world and the church, when pride is a ruling passion, is a fact so apparent, that to prove it would be like an attempt to show that spring succeeds winter. Touching this point, we would say, as we did of "selfishness" and "covetousness," if we have not yet come to the period in the history of our race when pride is sufficiently developed to begin to fulfil the prediction of Paul, "that in the "last days," . . . men shall be . . . PROUD;" then how will they appear when this sign is fully accomplished? It may be said, "men have always been proud." True, but "in the last days" there is to be such an increase of this wicked passion, that it will be specially noticed, and become one of the signs that we are near the end of the present dispensation. It appears very evident that we are now living when this sign is being witnessed. Let us be ready for the great event indicated—the second coming of Christ.—O.

Basis of Organization.

The time has come when Spiritualists begin to speak openly on the subject of organization. For some years, when we stated to them that they would yet organize and assume political power as well as ecclesiastical, they expressed astonishment that we should anticipate any such movement on their part. Now the thing begins to open so clearly, that all doubt is removed.

In the Banner of Light, April 26th, '62, we find a long article from Edward B. Freeland, on the "Basis of Religious Organization," in which he says:—

"There will be no difficulty in gathering ourselves into one all-embracing, harmonious organization, including in itself the representatives of the most opposite and diverse aspects of the one grand truth. . . . We find that the Great Sects—Christian, Mahometan, Brahaminic, Bhuddist, etc., etc., have each represented a side of truth only, and not the whole truth; that either of them taken alone is defective and insufficient; that the doctrines of all of them are true, and in the same sense, as the doctrines of any one of them; and that consequently, they must be all harmonized in the greater truth, which includes them all.

The divinity of all religions being thus scientifically demonstrated to be primately the same, we can all stand upon the broad platform."

He goes on to say that this "platform is none too broad for Spiritualism as a religion."

Spiritualism proposes to unite with all systems of religion, Christian or Pagan, that adopt the doctrine of "the immortality of the soul." This they affirm is the only test of fellowship. We apprehend the time is not far off when many will see more clearly the importance of the doctrine of "the sleep of the dead." We feel very thankful that we were enabled to see this great truth so early, and that we had courage to declare it to the world. Be not ashamed of Jesus or his words. The conflict between truth and error is daily becoming more earnest. Let every christian be firm, immovable, resolved to conquer or die in the conflict. To draw back now, is to go to perdition. The King is coming soon. Awake! Awake!—O.

Is our Present War the subject of Prophecy?

A correspondent writing from La Porte, Ind., asks—"Bro. Morgan, what do you think about this war? Is it the commencement of the last great battle?"

To this we reply we cannot affirm that it is. The only means of making any just estimate of the war as a subject of prophecy, is the assurance we have that we are living at that period when the "time of trouble" may be expected shortly; when it follows that, at most, our war to this point can be no more than a link in the chain of fearful events that are shortly to sweep the anti-Christian nations of the world. And that this is a link we have no authority to affirm dogmatically. Some are looking for this war to end, and another form of government be established in this country answering to the two-horned beast of Rev. 13. Judging from present appearances, the war will not continue long in its present form. But we shall be happy if a worse thing does not befall this nation before we get through with our difficulties. What it may be we cannot tell; but we say it upon the strength of our faith, that this is the specific time when, just before the second advent of our Lord, it is said there shall be "Distress of nations with perplexity; . . . men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." (Luke 21: 25, 26.

Dr. Cumming, of England, gave it as an opinion that the war of the Crimea might be at least the beginning of the battle of Armageddon (Rev. 16). In this he was mistaken, as we might be should we make any unwarrantable conjectures. Being confirmed as we are in our general position by the accumulating "signs of the times" in the political, religious, and social world, the students of prophecy can well afford to wait the development of events which, a little hence, will demonstrate to the world what, if so much as hinted at a few years ago, would have been cried down as madness. The point worthy our special attention now is, to see that we act well the part of the wise virgins, who took with their lamps oil in their vessels. "Let us not sleep as do others." "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their lord. . . . Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching."—M.

The Showers of Brimstone Again.

Our Illinois correspondent, who some while since wrote us of the falling of brimstone in that region, not accepting what we suggested might be a reasonable cause of the phenomena, calls attention to the subject again. If a more rational suggestion can be made, we should be glad to see it. Or if some are disposed to look upon our suggestion as a species of rationalism, while they consider the fact as partaking somewhat of the supernatural, we submit to that: protesting meanwhile against any such intention on our own part. That there was a series of remarkable facts preceding the destruction of Jerusalem, we are quite aware; and that things of a similar character may be witnessed in this last end of the world we do not dispute. While doubtless some may be quixotic, or overmarvellous, the great danger is, that we shall be so "overcharged with the cares of this life," that the day of the Lord will come upon us unawares. We do well to study carefully all the "signs of the times."—M.

"BRO. MORGAN:—Now to the 'rain of brimstone.' If it came from 'a volcano,' is it not singular that there should be two rains of it, and on the same or nearly the same region, two weeks apart? The first fell on the 18th of March, covering an area of nearly or quite twenty miles. In parts of Madison and Macoupin counties it was gathered in balls, and pronounced by all to be pure brimstone, both in color, smell and taste, and burned readily. It lay all over the ground, and on water tubs, tops of fences,—in fact, everywhere like a fall of snow. If pure brimstone will come so far before it falls, why don't it fall in the immediate neighborhood of the volcanos? and why should it rain both times just in the same locality? Can you tell? In Tennessee, some three or four years ago, they had a rain of blood, so that the Cumberland river was red. I have this from the best authority. People are living near here that saw it, and they say that the newspapers at the time teemed with it. Where did that come from? The prophet declares that in 'the signs' in the 'earth beneath' is 'blood.' I must have a better definition to satisfy my mind. God has rained 'fire and brimstone,' and will again. Why not 'water and brimstone?' In fact, he has done it. Yours, looking for the Lord."

THE WILBRAHAM CAMPMEETING.—To numerous friends making inquiries concerning this annual meeting, we will say that it is expected there will be a meeting on the old ground this year (d. v.) as usual; probably about the last week in August. A committee is appointed and much already done in preparation for the meeting.—M.

Biographical Sketches.—No. 6.

REV. WILLIAM MILLER.—Continued.

Mr. Miller now undertook, with the aid of Cruden's Concordance, to search diligently the Scriptures; knowing all the stratagems and foibles of the deist and infidel, he set himself earnestly to the task of thoroughly determining whether the Scriptures could or could not be reconciled with themselves. In this he became perfectly satisfied. In this state of mind, he continued for a number of years a champion against infidelity, and an honored member of the church.

With such an experience, we are not surprised to hear him, after a few years, saying—"When I was about my business, it was continually ringing in my ears, 'Go and tell the world of their danger.' This text was constantly occurring to me:—'When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thy hand. Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it; if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul.'"—Ezk. 33: 8, 9. Accordingly in 1831–2 we find him beginning that course of public labor that has been so eminently successful in promoting the Redeemer's cause. His talent was speedily discerned, and he shortly entered upon the list of regular Baptist ministers.

The views Mr. Miller had arrived at in his study of the Scriptures were nearly those of the millennarian. But to this he had added not only the faith that it was near,—as had Spaulding, Mather, and others,—but in his study of chronology he had arrived at the "opinion that the 2300 days of Daniel's prophecy might be expected to terminate about the Jewish year 1843–4." Probably this peculiarity might have contributed very considerably to give him notoriety; but be that as it may, he very soon found himself called upon, by clergymen of several denominations far and near, to come and labor among them. And few men of modern times have been more indefatigable or successful than was he. At one time we hear him saying, "I have not visited a place where the Lord has not given me one or two souls for my hire. I have spent eight weeks in St. Lawrence county (N. Y.), and delivered eighty-two lectures this fall." And again: "Thus ends my tour into Massachusetts, making eight hundred lectures from Oct. 1st, 1834, to June 7th, 1839."

Having spoken of Mr. Miller's views of chronology, the reader may be interested with the following anecdote, given by his biographer, which serves to show in a brief way his manner of reasoning upon this subject. Being informed that a physician of the neighborhood had pronounced him an estimable man, but a monomaniac upon the subject of the second advent, the writer says:—"One of his children being sick one day, he sent for the doctor., who, after prescribing for the child, noticed that Mr. Miller was very mute, and asked what ailed him.

"'Well, I hardly know, doctor. I want you to see what does and prescribe for me.' The doctor felt of his pulse, and could not decide respecting his malady, and inquired what he supposed was his complaint. 'Well,' said Mr. Miller, 'I don't know but I am a monomaniac; I want you to examine me, and see if I am; and if so, cure me. Can you tell when a man is a monomaniac?'

"The doctor blushed, and said he thought he could. Mr. Miller wished to know how. 'Why,' said the doctor, 'a monomaniac is rational on all subjects but one; and when you touch that particular subject, he will become raving.'

"'Well,' said Mr. Miller, 'I insist upon it that you see whether I am in reality a monomaniac; and if I am, you shall prescribe for and cure me. You shall therefore sit down with me two hours, while I present the subject of the advent to you, and if I am a monomaniac, by that time you will discover it.'

"The doctor was somewhat disconcerted; but Mr. Miller insisted, and told him, as it was to present the state of his mind, he might charge for his time as in regular practice.

"The doctor finally consented, and at Mr. Miller's request, opened the Bible and read from the eighth of Daniel. As he read along, Mr. Miller inquired what the ram denoted, with the other symbols presented. The doctor had read Newton, and applied them to Persia, Greece, and Rome, as Mr. Miller did. Mr. Miller then inquired how long the vision of those empires was to be?

"'2300 days.'

"'What!' said Mr. Miller, 'could those great empires cover only 2300 literal days?'

"'Why,' said the doctor, 'those days are years, according to all commentators; and those kingdoms are to continue 2300 years.'

"Mr. Miller then asked him to turn to the 2nd of Daniel, and to the 7th; all of which he explained the same as Mr. Miller. He was then asked if he knew when the 2300 days would end. He did not know, as he could not tell when they commenced.

"Mr. Miller told him to read the 9th of Daniel. He read down till he came to the 21st verse, when Daniel saw the man Gabriel whom he had 'seen in the vision.'

"'In what vision?' Mr. Miller inquired.

"'Why,' said the doctor, 'in the vision of the 8th of Daniel.'

"'Wherefore, understand the matter and consider the vision.' He had now come, then, to make him understand that vision, had he?

"'Yes,' said the doctor.

"'Well, seventy weeks are determined; what are these seventy weeks a part of?'

"'Of the 2300 days.'

"'Then do they begin with the 2300 days?'

"'Yes,' said the doctor.

"'When did they end?'

"'In A. D. '33.'

"'Then, how far would 2300 days extend after '33?'

"The doctor subtracted 490 from 2300, and replied, '1810. Why,' said he, 'that is past.'

"'But,' said Mr. Miller, 'there were 1810 from '33; in what year would that come?'

"The doctor saw at once that the 33 should be added, and set down 33 and 1810, and adding them, replied, '1843.' At this unexpected result, the doctor settled back in his chair and colored, but immediately took his hat and left the house in a rage. The next day he again called on Mr. Miller, and looked as though he had been in the greatest mental agony.

"'Why, Mr. Miller,' said he, 'I am going to hell. I have not slept a wink since I was here yesterday. I have looked at the question in every light, and the vision must terminate about 1843, and I am unprepared.'" And, as might well be expected, Mr. Miller pointed him to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world; and it is added the doctor became as great a monomaniac as was Mr. Miller.

As illustrative of the manner in which Mr. Miller was esteemed at this time, we may state that his brethren, deeming it important that he be fully defended from the attacks of malignant men, furnished him with commendations, signed with upwards of forty names, mostly of Baptist clergymen. The following may serve to the same end.

At the beginning of the year 1835 we find him laboring in Addison, Vt., and next in Cornwall, and shortly after we find him writing to a clergyman (under date of Feb. 11)—"The Lord opens doors faster than I can fill them. To-morrow I have an appointment in Whiting, which will occupy a week. The next week I shall be in Shoreham; the last week in this month at Bridgeport; the first week in March in Middletown; the second in Hoosac. I have calls from Schroon, Ticonderoga, Moriah, Essex, Chazy, Champlain, Plattsburgh, Peru, Mooretown, Canton, Pottsdam, Hopkinton, Stockholm, Parishville, and other places too numerous to mention." He adds in this letter that the Lord had blessed him, and given him fruit in nearly every place.

In 1838, we find him in Vt. Writing from Montpelier, Nov. 17th, he says:—"There is a great excitement in this place. Last night we had a solemn and interesting meeting. There was a great breaking down and much weeping. Some souls have been born again. I can hardly get away from this people. They want me to stay another week, but I shall go to the next village on Monday. Mr. Kellogg, the Congregational minister here, is a good man, and his church are living christians." Again he says, "There has been a reformation in every place that I have lectured in since I left home, and the work is progressing in every place rapidly. The meeting-houses are crowded to overflowing."

In the month of April, 1841, we find him preaching in Lowell, Mass., directly after which he estimates that since Oct. 1st, 1834, he had traveled four thousand five hundred and sixty miles, and delivered six hundred and twenty-seven lectures averaging one and a half hours each, resulting in about five thousand hopeful conversions.

The Voice of the Prophets.

We have received the April number of this interesting journal. The following is the table of contents for this number:—

The Coming Kingdom, by S. H. Tyng, D. D.; Emanuel Swedenborg on Spiritual Sense of Scripture; Two Witnesses, by A. Hale; Tracts for the Times, No. 4, by James Scott, Scotland; A Singular Monkish Prophecy; Extract of a Letter from R. Robertson, Esq.; Dr. Nicholas Smith; Bro. A. Simpson; Christ's Coming; Coming Glory; An Inquiry; Teach us to pray.

The author adds:—"Two volumes of the 'Voice' have been published and bound in paper covers, and can be furnished for circulation in any quantity. They are published in an attractive form, and find their way to the library and centre-table, and become the reading of many who have never as yet looked into the Advent question. A little exertion on the part of believers would greatly extend the circulation of these volumes of the 'Voice,' and light up a lamp in every dwelling where they are placed. We have multitudes of testimonies of the great good they have accomplished. Let us remember that time is short; what we do must be done faithfully, liberally, and quickly, if we would have the approbation of the Master when he shall come.

Our first and second volumes of the Voice will be sold hereafter at the following prices:—Single volume, by mail, 30 cts., not including postage. Our retail price for a single volume hereafter will be 30 cts. Wholesale price to agents will be 20 cts. and they will retail them at 30 cts. In this way agents will save themselves, and receive something for their labor.

Any person sending us one dollar shall receive five volumes, the same as those who purchase a larger amount. But in this case the express on postage will be paid by the purchaser. Postage 4 cts. per vol. Express charges will be less for short distances, or for a greater number."

For sale at this office.

Tract Fund.

BRO. GRANT:—I have for a long time considered the tract distribution one of the greatest auxiliaries that can be used in disseminating truth and scattering light abroad upon the glorious subject of life and immortality only through Christ, and that at his appearing and kingdom, when, as the apostle Timothy says, he comes to judge the quick and the dead. I feel greatly indebted to these little flying messengers myself, for when I first began to inquire after truth, I could take them and sit down by myself and examine them with an unbiassed mind, and weigh them in the scales of God's almighty word. Judging from the effects they had upon me, and from a multitude of testimonies I have had from others of the good that they have done them, I feel constrained to help keep so good a cause in motion; and as my wife has felt the same powers of truth working in her mind, and bringing her in love with these great truths, she feels her soul stirred within to help in presenting the truth to the minds of others by tracts and cheap publications, thereby doing to others as others have done to her. So enclosed you have ten dollars for her, and also ten for myself. Now, Bro. Grant, as these subscriptions a little more than make up the proposed sum for your capital stock to start upon, I hope and pray and do believe that the blessings of God will rest upon you, and all that co-operate with you in this noble work; and I also trust and do likewise believe that the same great blessings will rest upon those that have cast their bread upon the waters, who will after a few days find it again. O, brethren and sisters, let us work while the day lasts, for soon the night cometh to this world, and we shall be called upon to lay our armor by, and dwell with Christ at home. Your brother and sister, looking for life only through Christ.

From Bro. J. C. Rice.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—It is with a heavy heart that I improve this opportunity of informing you, and all interested, how we are getting along. It is quite probable that ere this reaches you I will have performed the painful duty of consigning the most endearing object of my earthly affections to the cold, cold earth, there to rest until called forth by the rending blast of Jehovah's trump; when she will arise untrammeled from her dusty bed, as beautiful, yea, tenfold more glorious than she ever was while here in the habiliments of frail mortality. What a glorious hope!

I have suffered from some very severe trials since I left Wilbraham, and fear that the most painful still await me; but it is the pleasure of my Master, and will eventually result to his honor and glory, and my benefit I hope. When I think of His coming so soon, and freeing us from all the sorrows of this dreary life, my trembling heart bounds at the thought. Then there will be no gazing upon the emaciated forms of friends; no hearing or beholding the convulsive, racking, torturous cough, nor agonizing groan of invalids. Could there be a more lovely, more soul-stirring stimulant than that to induce the weary child of God to breast the storms and trials of this gloomy life, and strive to double his diligence in making his calling and election sure—until "deliverance hath come."

Religion appears to be at a low ebb in this region in the churches, but our great King is working, and we anticipate glorious results. Sister Maxsey is in her element, she having chances of getting among people, where a brother (apparently) could not; while Bro. Ingham has been throwing his mite into the Lord's treasury, hoping to enjoy the happiness of bearing sheaves homeward, who will be stars in his crown in the day of his rejoicing.

We feel comforted ofttimes while perusing the welcome messenger—the Crisis—which wafts its cheering influences from family to family, freighted with encouraging and soul-stirring communications from fellow pilgrims scattered abroad; all exulting in the one grand theme,—Deliverance.

How happily does my mind revert to the pleasant associations in Wilbraham's shady grove, where agreeable acquaintances were formed, perhaps never to be revived personally until the "marriage supper of the Lamb," when the restored Eden will bloom most beautifully, and ring with praise infinitely surpassing even Wilbraham's experience. There will be no complaining of colds or other indispositions then; no persons who will drop or shake their heads gloomily and say, "I can't sing"; but

"The lame will leap, the dumb will sing on that delightful shore,
The infant's lisping, prattling tongue will shout forevermore;
Decrepit age will ne'er be known, nor any suffering poor,
But every sorrow o'er, Glory! Glory! Hallelujah!" etc.
Yes, we'll meet in glory with all that happy throng,
Praising our Redeemer with an immortal tongue;
And with that heavenly choir we'll sing redemption's song,
When we all get home. Glory! Glory! Hallelujah!" etc.

Yours longing for redemption.

From J. R. Randall.

BRO. MORGAN:—You will see by this that we are suffering some of the evils of this miserable rebellion. Our son of nineteen years was wounded at the slaughter at Pittsburgh Landing, on Sunday, the 6th of April, at about noon, shot through the thigh. After being shot, he crawled on his hands and knees one mile and a half. It took him till Monday, about noon. We got him home on the 19th. I fear it will be a long time before he will be able to get about. He has not been able to sit up for more than three quarters of an hour in a day since he came home. It is distressing indeed to see the suffering, immorality and vice occasioned by this unholy rebellion. My son had nothing to lie on but a little hay, and his overcoat with one blanket over him. He lay out on the deck of the boat all the way from Savannah, Tenn., to Quincy, Ill. A comrade gave him a blanket while on the boat at Pittsburgh Landing, but the first time he fell asleep it was stolen from him. At Savannah his knapsack was lost by some means, and all his clothes, so that he had nothing to wear but his shirt and jacket until he got to Quincy, where he was supplied. These are strange times. Yours in hope.

Ripley, Illinois.

From Sr. A. B. Pilcher.

Bro. Grant:—I praise the Lord that he has a people in this time of confusion and strife willing to stand up boldly for the blessed truth, and are not ashamed to be despised, and have their names cast out as evil for the worthy name of Christ; and that I am numbered with the little flock, although despised. Every thing speaks loudly of Christ's coming. Let us gird up the loins of our minds, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

We have not had any Advent preaching since Bro. Pratt was here, some two years. Once there was a little company of Adventists, who could meet together and speak of our blessed hope, and cheer each other on the way; but, alas! where are they? Scattered, some in one place, some in another, and some are sleeping in Jesus. Myself and companion are the only Adventists in the village. We are still encouraged to hold on to the blessed hope set before us in the gospel. We still love the word of God. We are greatly refreshed by our weekly visitor, the Crisis. It comes like bread to the hungry, and as water to the thirsty. Brethren and sisters, we need all the light and encouragement we can get from each other in this time of trouble and distress. May the Lord direct his dear children into all truth and righteousness, and they be found blameless at his coming.

Elizabeth, Joe Davis Co., Ill.

Book Notice.

"Thrilling and Instructive Developments." This work, which has already been noticed in the Crisis, is truly an interesting work. It is the experience of a person who, for many years, was a Catholic priest. It contains many facts, found in no other work, and is, without doubt, perfectly reliable. To know the spirit and character of the great antichristian power, one has but to read this work. It should be in the hands of all Protestants. Price 87 cts. postage paid. Send in your orders at once to J. F. Cotton, Box 1079, Boston, Mass. F. H. Berick.

"Unanswerable Arguments."—I have just read Bro. Seymour's "Unanswerable Arguments" on the Sabbath question, and find it sound, pithy and short. If any one has got the head-swim on this subject, read this little tract, follow out the references, and I think his head and heart will be regulated. H. Munger.

Obituary Notices.

Died, of congestion of the lungs, April 2d, 1862, in Northfield, Mass., Frankie S., twin son of Curtis and Patience Severence, aged two years, six months and twelve days.

Little Frankie was a bud of promise, but the icy band of death claimed him for a victim. He suffered intensely nearly four weeks, but neither the skill of physicians, nor the tears of parents, or the sympathy of friends could allay the torturing pain, or avert the pale messenger of death. No more will the little prattler's voice be heard to mingle with his twin brother until that great day of resurrection, when the bereaved parents shall meet their darling boy, clad with immortality, never more to part.

"As fades the rose, as droops the flower,
To shed its fragrance but an hour,
We've borne him to an early tomb,
But yet in Paradise to bloom."

DOMESTIC NEWS.

The Great Naval and Military Expedition against New Orleans.

[From the Boston Journal.]

At a quarter before six o'clock on the afternoon of the 16th, the garrison of Jackson received their first prescription from "Abe's Physician" as one of the mortars is facetiously designated, and the pill, which was administered with wonderful effect, must have proved a bitter one to the patients, as a foretaste of what they have since withstood in numbers too numerous to mention.

The bombs were thrown from a position about thirty-eight hundred yards from Jackson. Judge if you can of the effect which must be produced by thousands of these spherical missiles, which, after obtaining an altitude of half a mile, fall with a crushing weight equal to twenty tons upon the parapets of the beleagured fortress, and yet the contumacious rebels have stood six days and five nights of this terrible practice.

FORT JACKSON.

Fort Jackson is a regular pentagonal bastion, having two fronts bearing upon the river, and three on the land side. The three land fronts have a glacis and covered way, and there is an attached twenty-five gun battery bearing upon the channel.

Fort St. Philip consists of a main work and two attached batteries, one of which is on the upper side and the other on the lower side of the main fort, which is an irregular work of seventeen faces, and built on the foundation of an old Spanish work of the same name.

While the fleet were lying at the head of the Passes, they received a coat of mud paint, which assimilated as nearly as possible to the color of the river.

After the flotilla moved, all hands were employed in decorating the masts with green boughs, which gave them the appearance of so many trees.

Friday, April 18, 1862, will henceforth become conspicuous in history as a day signalized by the opening of the bombardment of the rebel fortifications of the Mississippi below New Orleans, by the naval forces of the Union.

At an early hour the bomb vessels bedecked with garlands moved slowly from their anchorage up to the positions which they were to occupy, in tow of the ferry gunboats. By nine o'clock the mortars had all been stationed, and all ready to pay their respects to the rebels in their strongholds. The action soon became general. The first bomb was fired about half-past eight o'clock, and before ten all the mortars were participating in the bombardment of Fort Jackson. Immediately after the action commenced, the Iroquois and Owasco ran up within range and opened fire on the forts. The shell from our gunboats were seen to fall in the forts, and by a succession of well directed shots, the rebels were driven from the parapet of Fort Jackson.

A flag of truce came from New Orleans with a request to know on what terms the city should surrender. The reply sent back was, "An unconditional surrender." In two hours after, Union flags were displayed all over the city.

The news of the fall of New Orleans created the greatest consternation among the secesh at Havana.

Expedition against Norfolk.

Fortress Monroe, May 9—Evening. Old Point this evening presents a most stirring spectacle. President Lincoln, as Commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy, is superintending the expedition himself. About two o'clock he went across to the place selected for the landing, which is about a mile below the Rip Raps. It is said he was the first to step on shore, and after examining for himself the facilities for landing, returned to the Point, where he was received with enthusiastic cheering by the troops who were embarking.

Washington, May 11. The following was received at the War Department this morning:

Fortress Monroe, May 10—12 o'clock, midnight. Norfolk is ours, and also Portsmouth and the Navy Yard.

General Wool having completed the landing of his forces at Willoughby Point about nine o'clock this morning, commenced his march on Norfolk with 5000 men. Secretary Chase accompanied the General.

About five miles from the landing place a rebel battery was found on the opposite side of the bridge over Tanner's Creek; and after firing a few discharges upon two companies of infantry that were in the advance, the rebels burned the bridge. This compelled our forces to march around five miles further.

At five o'clock in the afternoon our forces were within a short distance of Norfolk, and were met by a delegation of citizens.

The city was formally surrendered.

Our troops were marched in, and now have possession.

Gen. Viele is in command as Military Governor.

The city and Navy Yard were not burned. The fires which had been seen for some hours proved to be woods on fire.

Gen. Wool, with Secretary Chase, returned about 11 o'clock to-night.

Gen. Huger withdrew his forces without a battle.

Commander Rodgers' expedition was heard from this afternoon ascending the James river.

The iron-clad steamer Galena had sunk the rebel steamer Yorktown and captured the Jamestown.

Reports from Gen. McClellan are favorable.
(Signed) Edwin M. Stanton, Secretary of War.

Fortress Monroe, May 11. The Merrimac was blown up by the rebels at two minutes before five o'clock this morning. She was set fire to about three o'clock. The explosion took place at the time stated.

It is said to have been a grand sight by those who saw it.

The Monitor and the gunboats have gone up toward Norfolk.

"On to Richmond."

New Kent Court House, Va., May 10, 3 P. M. The pursuit of the retreating rebels by our troops under command of Gen. Stoneham, has, in every respect, been successful.

His headquarters are now here, twenty-seven miles from Richmond, while the advance, consisting of the 8th Illinois cavalry, is five miles ahead. The enemy is in sight, but are gradually falling back.

The inhabitants have in nearly every instance left, but from the best information that has been obtained, the enemy will make a stand at Bottom Bridge, fifteen miles from Richmond, at the head-waters of the Chickahominy river.

Gen. McClellan, with the main body of the army, is rapidly following up within a few miles.

Cumberland, a small town on the Pamunkey river, was deserted this morning by the rebels, and is now occupied by our forces.

The country between here and Bottom Bridge is thickly wooded, with few clearings, and many places low and swampy.

The jail here was burnt yesterday.

The railroad from West point to the bridge has been torn up. The destruction of the bridge will probably follow.

Washington, May 12. The news from the different Union armies is encouraging; and the general opinion here is that this week will witness the virtual overthrow of the rebellion.

Another Naval Victory.

LATEST FROM PITTSBURG.

Washington, May 11. The following has been received:—

Flag Ship Benton, above Fort Pillow, Mississippi River, May 10.

To Hon. Gideon Welles, Sec of the Navy:

The naval engagement for which the rebels have been preparing took place this morning. The rebel fleet, consisting of eight iron-clad gunboats, four of which were fitted with rams, came up handsomely. The action lasted one hour. Two of the rebel gunboats were blown up and one sunk, when the enemy retired precipitately under the guns of the fort. Only six vessels of my squadron were engaged. The Cincinnati sustained some injury from the rams, but will be in fighting condition to-morrow. Capt. Stemble distinguished himself, and is seriously wounded. The Benton is uninjured. Mortar boat No. 16, in charge of Second Master Gregory, behaved with great spirit. The rebel squadron is supposed to be commanded by Commodore Hollins. (Signed) C. H. Davis,
Captain Commanding Western Flotilla, Mississippi River, pro tem.

Cairo, May 11. The desperation of the rebel cause on the Mississippi culminated yesterday in an attack on the flotilla. Early Saturday morning eight of their gunboats came around the point above the fort, and boldly advanced toward the fleet. The Cincinnati, which was stationed at the point where the rebels came up to on Friday, did not attack them until the fleet had passed above her. As soon as she was seen, a simultaneous attack from the whole of their gunboats was made upon her with but little effect, as the guns were poorly aimed. The Cincinnati, in the meantime, had hauled into the stream, where an iron-clad ram, supposed to be the Mallory, advanced in the face of the continued broadsides from the former, until within forty yards, and, being a faster sailor, succeeded in mooring between the Cincinnati and their right-hand, when men appeared on her decks, preparing to board, with grapnels thrown out, which design was frustrated by throwing hot water from the steam batteries of the Cincinnati.

In the meantime the rest of our gunboats had arrived at the scene of action and engaged the rebel fleet. The Mallory, undaunted by her failure, crowded on a full head of steam and came toward the Cincinnati, evidently intending to run her down. Captain Stembel, in command of the latter, waited until the rebel monster was within twenty yards, when he sent a broadside into her from his Parrott guns, which did fearful execution.

The two boats were so close together by this time that it was impossible for the gunners of the Cincinnati to swab out the guns, and it was only by bringing the steam batteries to bear upon her again that the Mallory was compelled to haul off. Captain Stembel shot her pilot with his revolver, and was himself wounded by a pistol shot, fired by the pilot's mate of the Mallory.

While the engagement between the Mallory and Cincinnati was in progress, our shots exploded the boilers of one of the rebel gunboats and set fire to another, burning her to the water's edge. The air was very heavy, and under cover of the dense smoke which hung over the river, the rebel fleet retired, but was pursued until they gained shelter under the guns of Fort Wright. None of our boats were injured except the Cincinnati. The damage to her is so slight that she can be repaired in twenty-four hours. Four men were wounded on her, including the Master's Mate. No other casualities are mentioned.

When the smoke cleared away, a broadside from the flagship Benton was sent after the Mallory, and shortly after she was seen to careen and went down with all on board.

On Friday the rebel General Briggs' division attacked Gen. Paine's division two miles beyond Farmington. A sharp engagement followed, our men fighting bravely and making several bayonet charges on the enemy, who were repulsed with great slaughter. Large reinforcements of rebels having arrived, our troops retired to Farmington. We lost nearly two hundred in killed, wounded and prisoners.

Williamsburg, May 8. Gen. McClellan on the 6th inst. had a most decisive victory. Only about 30,000 of our troops were engaged against 50,000 of the best rebel troops. Our men fought most valiantly, and used the bayonet freely, which the rebels could not stand. They fought well until they felt the cold steel, when they took to their heels and run like hounds, leaving their dead, wounded and sick upon our hands. Joe Johnson led them in person. They have lost several of their best officers.

Pittman's Ferry, Ark., May 8. Drafting for the army is going on, regardless of position, and many Union men are flying to the mountains and swamps. Fort Pillow is the only defence on the Mississippi that is considered secure on the water side. Gen. Price's army has gone to Fort Pillow and Corinth. The force at Corinth is supposed to be 110,000. Fifteen boats are now at Little Rock, taking on board 12,000 Arkansas troops for Corinth. The rivers are very high.

Fortress Monroe, May 11. The fire which threw a broad red glare across the heavens on Saturday night, proceeded from the destruction of the Portsmouth Navy Yard, which was done by order of the rebel Commandant, scarcely anything being left but black, tall chimneys. Even the immense stone dry dock was mined and damaged, and it is said that that the engines and pumps belonging to it were removed to Richmond.

Philadelphia, May 19. The iron-clad steamer Ironsides was successfully launched this morning.

It is stated by the editor of the Christian Banner at Fredericsburg that more than $125,000 worth of vessels were destroyed, to say nothing about a vast amount of grain and other property which was consumed in them, all of which will prove in the end a total loss to the owners. From $15,000 to $20,000 worth of cotton was also burnt, which might have been saved.

New York, May 7. Very Cruz dates of the 24th, state that the French have opened hostilities, and have taken possession of Orizaba. Cordova has declared for Almonte. The British ministers are said to be holding private interviews with Doblado at Puebla. The Mexicans have received reinforcements of nine thousand men, and General Zaragoza would dispute the march of the French.

The Spanish troops on the Island of St. Domingo had attacked the Hatiens, and some batteries and troops had been sent there. The Spanish claim the title to certain lands which the Hatiens will not yield.

Destructive Fire in Troy, New York.—Probably the greatest conflagration ever known in America has spread over one of the most enterprising cities of the Empire State. It commenced burning about twelve o'clock on Saturday, continued through the day and night, and was not subdued until near noon on Sunday. For twenty-four hours it raged with fury, constantly increased by a high wind, and when finally subdued, over fifty acres of the most densely populated and business part of the city had been laid in ashes.

The number of buildings destroyed reaches full 800.

Distress in England.—There is deep distress in Lancashire. In the district of Blackburn "it is calculated that one person out of four is undergoing the horrible process of starvation." Of the eighty-four factories in Blackburn, only eighteen are working full time, twenty-three are altogether stopped, twenty-five are running four or five days, and the remainder three days a week. No fewer than seven thousand operatives are wholly unemployed, representing a loss, in wages alone, of thirty thousand dollars per week.

A grove meeting will be held on the ground after the discussion is over.

Multitudes of commendatory notices from preachers and papers, of all kinds, might be quoted. Read it and be satisfied.

For the Crisis.

The Sabbath Twilight.

Thrice hallowed hour! A holy calm pervades
The inmost soul, while a sweet quiet rests
On all around. The peaceful, mellow light
In the clear west, scatt'ring the parting gift
Of day's unrivall'd king, yields us a joy
Serene and tranquil. Heavenly thoughts come in
To fill the mind, and elevate awhile,
Ere the week's varied cares shall press upon
And draw it earthward. We would linger here
Within this hallowed hour, so choice, so blest,
And offer praise to Him who hath in love
Bestowed the sacred boon—one day in seven
To worship and implore all needed grace,
As pilgrims in this world of sin and care.
It seems a foretaste of that purer joy
And heavenly rest awaiting all the saints
In Paradise restored. O glorious hope!
To gaze upon effulgence brighter far
Than gloomy sunset, or the clear soft hues
Of this blest twilight—to behold His face
Who hath so loved us as to suffer death,
That we might have the gift of endless life,
And with Him hold communion. Rest indeed!
Uninterrupted and eternal rest.

Mrs. A. C. Judson.

For the Crisis.

Influence of Bad Habits.

"Did you read that article in the Crisis from Eld. —— last week?" asked one brother of another.

"No," said the other, "I never read his his articles since I became acquainted with his habits."

"Why not? he writes well," said the inquirer.

"Because he is an inveterate tobacco chewer and smoker—keeps intoxicated with it most of the time; he bedaubs his face and his clothes with tobacco slime, and poisons the atmosphere all about him, so that he is uncomely to look upon, and a stench to those who are near him," said the other.

"Do you condemn all who use tobacco?"

"No, by no means. But I do not believe a man is in a condition to teach the self-denying, self-sacrificing gospel of Christ to others, who is a living demonstration that the gospel has not sanctified his heart, or led him to deny self."

"But he says good things," continued the interrogator.

Yes, and so does Socrates, the heathen philosopher, and lives more like a christian too, for he was a worthy example of self-denial, and of many virtues. Aristotle said good things, so did Demas, Saul of Tarsus, Demetrius, Tertullus, Goethe, Pope Gregory, Pius IX., Theodore Parker, and a host of others, whom we would not receive as teachers of the self-crucifying, self-denying, purifying gospel of Christ, thought I, as I pondered upon this conversation. I recollected asking a young lady once if she did not think the exhortaion of a certain elderly brother was good, and very pointed.

"Yes," said she, "but it does no good."

"Why not?" I asked.

"Why, he is the greatest smoker in the place. I have frequently seen him get his pipe out and fill it in meeting, so he could smoke as soon as meeting closed. We think he is a good man, but don't see what good his religion does him."

These are but samples of thousands of cases continually occurring. The bad examples of christians and ministers who are not properly "crucified to the world," who do not "deny the fleshly lusts, which war against the soul," are constantly preaching to the beholders, that christianity is of but little worth, after all that is said in its favor. One class, professing piety, and teaching the great importance of repentance and a change of heart to become christians and secure eternal life, go on in the gratification of a perverted appetite, eating and drinking whatever they lust for, and smoking it also. Another class indulge in all their lustful eyes call "beautiful," to wear, and to ornament their persons and houses, if they can get the money or credit, or make their guardians bankrupt in doing it. Another class fan all their passions of patriotism, love of country, of justice, revenge, of mastery, of war on enemies, into a flame, and then exercise them all as circumstances will allow them to do, yet as pious as John.

Another class, whose love of honor had nearly ruined them before they sought the Lord, still gratify this principle, until they must be preferred before all others, or make a fuss about their "dignity." Another class, bound to command, make every one associated with them unhappy and disgusted by their imperious demands, authoritative and impudent requests, and vehement threats; yet are so "tonguey, so "gifted," and so "eloquent" in meetings, and in religious communications, that one almost thinks he has fallen in with a company of angels. But let him live with them long enough to learn them, and he would conclude they had been doomed to "the place prepared for the devil and his angels." Another class, with a large stock of envy, bring this passion into the religious market, and figure with it to bring down to their level, or under their feet, all whose character and graces have placed them at responsible posts, and elevated them in the confidence and affections of the church.

Another class, who naturally have long and sharp tongues, do not get them "tamed" by the grace of God, sometimes lose their ears, talk out all the "evil imaginations of their own hearts" among themselves, and offer them to their neighbors. For want of ears they cannot hear "the truth" and [illegible] of matters; they seem to hear evil "reports" through the organs of combativeness and destructiveness in the back of the head, and, like Ahab, are mad with those who show the truth, but are willingly led in the way of error, make much noise, keep up a tumult and war among the brethren, unite with the "sons of Belial" to do the work of defaming and destroying the innocent, hinder the work of God, bring reproach upon the cause of Christ, and lead spectators to say, "Christianity don't make people any better than we are." All such should remember this is not christianity, but fallen humanity.

The Remedy. All such should give up their "false hope," and repent of their sins, —"do their first work," if they ever were truly converted,—consecrate all to God. Let the cleansing efficacy of the blood of Christ, through the Spirit of the living God, "wash you," "crucify you with Christ to the world, with its affections and lusts."

Richmond, Me. I. C. Wellcome.

Scripture Readings.—No. 1.

Malachi 4: 2.—"But to you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise, and healing shall be in his wings: and ye shall go forth, and bound as young calves let loose from bonds." Brenton's Translation of the Septuagint.

Did you ever see a young calf get loose and run in the spring-time?

Luke 10: 40–42.—"But Martha was harassing herself with much preparation for his entertainment; and came up to him, and said: Master, dost thou not care that my sister leaves me to prepare alone? Bid her, therefore, help me. But Jesus answered and said unto her: Martha! Martha! thou art troubling and perplexing thyself about many dishes, when only one is needful: now Mary hath chosen for herself that good portion of the entertainment which shall not be taken from her." Wakefield's Version.

I breakfasted on hasty-pudding to-day. Is n't that scriptural? Marthas, please take notice!

Romans 5: 10, 11. "For he who died, died by sin once; but he who liveth, liveth by God: so then conclude ye yourselves to be dead verily by sin; but alive by God, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Macknight's Version. Rev. 21: 16, 17. "And the city lieth four square; and its length is the same as its breadth, and he measured the city with the reed, twelve thousand furlongs: its length and its breadth are equal: and the height of its wall is one hundred and forty-four cubits. Granville Penn's Supplemental Annotations to his Version.

This correction is based upon a comparison of several varying old manuscripts. The twelve thousand furlongs seem to be the entire length of the walls, which would be 375 miles on a side. As the foot is a measure which was probably taken originally from the length of the human foot, so a cubit is the length of the arm from the elbow down. My arm from the elbow measures just twenty-one inches. This was about the average length of an ancient cubit, though the measures sometimes varied. The wall was 144 cubits high, (according to the measure of a man, that is of the angel) or about 250 feet in height.

Proverbs 26: 4, 5—"Answer not a fool according to his folly, lest thou also be like unto him. Answer a fool according to thine own wisdom, lest he be wise in his own conceit."—Syriac Version. Prov. 26: 22.—"The words of a talebearer are as dainty morsels; they go down into the innermost parts of the belly." So Prov. 18: 8. Prof. W. W. Turner's MSS. Revision. Job 30: 23.—"I know that death will destroy me; for the earth is the house of all the dead." The Ancient Coptic Version by H. Tattam. H. L. For the Crisis.

About that Book.

I mean the one that ought to be in existence, "The Coming Struggle between Spiritualism and the Powers of Darkness." That is a long title, to be sure, but it brings to mind many a prediction of things in the last days. The readers of the Crisis may remember seeing articles under this caption over the signature "L." They were not thoroughly read. Those who read most carefully speak most highly of the work. It may contain sentiments not generally believed, but the main subject can not be disputed.

Brethren, we know that Spirit-ism is an evil, spreading like wildfire North, East, South and West. Multitudes are seeking knowledge of the dead who "know not anything." God is being mocked and denied an existence. Jesus is blasphemed. The Bible is ridiculed, its holy doctrines laughed to scorn. This class can not be put down by silence nor contempt. They make great pretensions to reason; give them reason. We cannot pronounce them all ignoramuses, for many an educated person is in their ranks. We know they are deceived; shall we allow them to deceive others?

Sisters, ye who spend money for vanities, will ye not aid in putting down this awful error? O do not spend a single cent for useless ornaments, when the world and church is dying for want of light and truth. The Lord is soon coming. In that great day your silks and trimmings will look small compared with a cup of cold water given to one of Christ's "little ones." I beseech of you all, assist in scattering printed words of truth through the world. Send in dimes if you have not dollars. Be in earnest. We want new books published and old ones circulated. Be honest, ye stewards. M. Mathews.

☞ A lie always needs a truth for a handle to it. The worst lies are those whose handle is true and whose blade is false.

Correspondence.

From Sr. B. Mathewson.

Bro. Grant:— We had hoped that your peregrinations would have brought you hither ere this, but as Providence has seemed to direct otherwise, we thought you, as well as others, might be interested to hear how the cause of truth is progressing in Sandy Hill. Well, I cannot say our progress is a rapid one, but that God is giving us slow but sure progress is the veritable truth. Yesterday was a good day, one in which God was pleased to manifest himself to us as he does not to the world. It was our communion. I think you have been apprised that we hold our church covenant meeting the last Saturday in each month, and partake of the Lord's Supper the following day. Yesterday my husband baptized four who have recently embraced Christ; they, with one more, who has formerly been a Baptist, just in the vigor of manhood, received the right hand of fellowship. The previous month three were baptized, who, with a sister from the Baptist Church in Ft. Edward, received the right hand of fellowship. Thus you see we are having some additions to our numbers; and one good reason for believing they are such as will be saved, is their understanding that there is something for Jesus Christ's soldiers to do as well as say. The most of the interest manifested among the unconverted is in Durkee town, Bro. Pike's neighborhood. The distance is such as to render it quite impracticable for them to attend our prayer meetings as often as young converts or those more advanced should do in order to grow in grace and heed the divine injunction which shows us the necessity of exhorting one another much when we see the day of God approaching. Heb. 10: 25. Consequently they have established prayer meetings in that neighborhood, at which I heartily rejoice, because I know the prayer meeting to be one of God's most important instruments to facilitate a growth in grace; as one eminent revivalist remarked, "Prayer meetings are the thermometer of the church. Show me the way they are attended, and I will show you how the church stand." This is even so, and when one has lost his or her interest for the prayer meeting, they have left their first love, and should remember that unless they repent "quickly," they with the church at Ephesus are in inevitable danger.

You, dear Bro., are aware of the rigid obstinacy manifested here to that portion of truth which declares that "God only hath immortality." I am happy to inform you that prejudice seems giving way on this point, and that our hearts are cheered by seeing one after another act the part of the noble Bereans in examining the Scriptures to see whether these things are so. If all would act thus, I think there would be but little difference of opinion in these matters. But there are many who persistently refuse to receive any more light on the Scriptures than their fathers had. For one, I respect the fathers, so far as they kept upon the track God has laid for them; but when I can see plainly where they switched off this track, I prefer to go no further with them. I never felt more determined to take the Bible as the man of my counsel than at the present. I often ask myself, What could the children of God do in these days of peril were it not for this chart and compass? But I will soon close, after assuring you of our continued interest in the Crisis, though from our recent silence perhaps we have given you reason to think otherwise. As we look at the receipts from week to week, we feel to praise the Lord for thus amply sustaining a paper promotive of so much good.

I have felt quite an interest in Sr. Henry's "Hospital Rambles," and in her efforts to spread the light and truth of the gospel. Though incompetent to perform such labor myself, I delight to "help those women which labor in the gospel," if it be only by an assurance of my sympathy and prayers. I wish Sr. H.'s desires could be granted relative to some efficient minister going into that region. It seems Bro. Smith's labors are much blessed, but they two are the only ones to spread this glorious truth (as she remarked in a private correspondence) in all that region—a tract of country larger than the entire State of Mass.! I am sure that what is done must be done quickly. Then let us be active, my brethren and sisters, and so demean ourselves that it may be said of us as of the woman in the gospel, "She hath done what she could." Any little errand we can do for the Lord, however menial it may appear to the carnal heart, let us do with our might, and thus glorify our Father which is in heaven.

Sandy Hill, N. Y.

From G. L. Raymond.

Bro. Grant:—The Lord has been doing a good work in this vicinity within the last few weeks. Reformation is going on in the parish of Richmond; a number of backsliders have been reclaimed, and some twenty or thirty who had not been professors but were traveling the broad road to destruction are now rejoicing in hope of the glory of God, and are expecting soon to see him. The work has been effected through the instrumentality of Bro. Samuel Bragg and wife. Bro. Moses Corliss is now laboring with them. Upwards of twenty have been baptized, and a number more are expected soon to follow. Some who have been professors for years and thought that their infant baptism was all that was necessary, upon having it set forth in the gospel manner as a likeness of the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, and thus seeing it in its true light, have become convinced, and went forward rejoicing that light had shone upon them, and were much blest in so doing. There being no house for meeting in the place that they could get, and having to hold their meetings in private houses, they have gone to work and put up a house, and have it now enclosed, with about material enough to finish it. It is the first Advent meeting house built in the province of New Brunswick.

Truly we have great reason to honor and glorify our heavenly Father for his loving kindness and long and tender compassion toward us who have been so unworthy of the least favor. I bless and thank his dear name that he through so much mercy hath visited us by his Spirit in this place once more. It seems like a shower of the latter rain which is calculated to ripen off the harvest when his dear people will all be gathered. I hope to be gathered with them. Have had sweet communion with some of them in days past; should like to see them now, but hope to when they all meet. The first house of Israel would not be gathered, or Christ would have done it. The second house of Israel, the nominal church, will not accept of a personal coming Savior as a King; therefore they will not be gathered; but Abraham's seed, the heirs according to promise, will. Thank God. They will have this Man to reign over them, and are praying for him to come.

Woodstock, N. B.

From Sr. A. E. Clark.

Bro. Grant:—For a long time I have felt that it would be a precious privilege to write you, and tell you how the Lord has blest my soul within the past year, and of the new Bible I have found; how I have learned that man is mortal and not immortal, the unconscious state of the dead, the final destruction of the wicked, and many more glorious truths. How beautifully the Scriptures harmonize now! It seems as though I had been brought out of darkness into a most glorious and heavenly light. Very highly do we prize the precious pages of the Crisis. Its weekly visit is hailed with joy, and as we read its many heart-cheering letters, we almost forget our loneliness. It seems as though we were conversing with dear brethren and sisters of "like precious faith." . . .

I trust I became a follower of Christ at the age of fifteen (thirteen years since). My husband and myself are members of the F. W. Baptist church in this place; yet in our hearts we feel that it would be a great privilege to be numbered among those who are looking for the immediate return of our Deliverer. I can but wonder, when I look around, to see the thoughtlessness apparent among the people, and especially among professors of religion. How unconscious they seem of the time in which we live! I often feel sad when I see how professed christians dislike to hear anything in regard to Christ's soon coming. If they love him, why do they not love his appearing? If they read the Bible, why can they not see that the last page of prophecy is being rapidly fulfilled? If we are humble followers of Christ, how can we but rejoice when we see the evening shadows fast passing away, and the day of bright glory appearing in view? Have we not reason to rejoice when we know that our redemption draweth nigh? Soon, if we are faithful, we shall receive our crown of never-fading glory.

My dear Bro., is not ours a blessed hope? How thankful I feel for the light I have received. I trust that I shall no more walk in darkness. Pray for me, that I may be faithful to the end, and ever willing to do little errands for my blessed Master.

Piermont, N. H., Apr. 20, '62.

From Sr. M. K. Lambert.

Bro. Grant:—Don't stop our paper. We cannot do without it. It is food and drink to our hungry souls. The precious epistles, the warm exhortations, the truthful sermons, and sweet poetry, gladden our hearts from week to week, and make us rejoice in view of the time when God's dear children will meet in the land of the pure and holy; when death, the destroyer of our race, will himself be destroyed; when our little son Hobert, aged six years, whom we laid in the grave yesterday, will come forth to life immortal, and forever bloom in the paradise of God.

May the Lord bless and prosper those who are engaged in publishing the Crisis, and may it continue to feed the waiting household with meat in due season, till the Master appear, is the prayer of your unworthy sister.

Mapleton, Kansas, Apr. 21, '62.

From Bro. I. K. Lombard.

Bro. Grant:—I visited our dear Bro. Grow last Wednesday (Apr. 23d), and found him very weak and still failing. He has been sick several weeks,—about six I think,—and his physician thinks, considering his age (upwards of eighty), he will hardly be able to resist the disease. He can endure but about five minutes' conversation at a time, but retains his mental faculties otherwise unimpaired.

My interview was necessarily short, but it reminded me of the riches of God's grace, while I beheld love beaming in his countenance, and sparkling in his eyes, and praise and thanksgiving continually flowing from his lips. He gives no evidence of a conflict within, but a calm, serene, heavenly expression rests upon his features, as a sure evidence of the support of that grace which has sustained him for many years. As an indication of the state of his mind, I will mention that he gave to me to carry to Bro. and Sr. Willard the text, "God is love."

For the Crisis.

Acrostic.

[Respectfully inscribed to my affectionate mother.]

Does memory weave sad hours of passing gloom,
Earnest with love long buried? and does the tomb
Afford no blissful proof of sweet repose and life,
Reserved for breaking hearts beyond this world of strife?
Each fleshly pang, though borne through time's
Swift course alone, may be the chast'ning rod
That ripely fits thee for the paradise of God.

Many the days long fled since that bright hey-day morn
On which your precious bark, trusting to manly, willing hands
To check its course, was launched afloat upon the world's wide sea;
How soon 't was wrecked! Thou lonely, mourning voyager! Still she Entreats her way. 'T is well. The angel's clarion blast shall Rend the wave where tropic blossoms bloom above his grave.

For the Crisis.

Pray for Us.

"Brethren, pray for us." So said an apostle. And if ever we needed your prayers it is in this time of peril; to cheer our hearts, to stay up our hands, to draw the truth out of us, to kill our hobbies, to send us home, if not sent of God, to cheer our companions in their lonely moments at home; they need your prayers, that they may be sustained under the cares, toils and perplexities of a life almost bereft of companion or earthly friend. Pray that our children may be converted, and share with the redeemed in the new earth. Pray not for our sakes only, but for your own sakes, that our coming unto you may be blessed of God. It will be blessed in proportion as you pray.

Pray that you may be strengthened in the faith, rooted and grounded, built up, encouraged, and proof against this evil time. Pray that the poor wanderer may come back to his Father's house; that the hypocrite may be detected and sinners converted. Pray. Do not be satisfied with a form, or with saying your prayers, but pray; and for our beloved country in prospect. Thy kingdom come!

"Lovers of Pleasures more than Lovers of God."

Dear Bro. Grant:—The following extracts I clip from the Christian Era. They plainly show that we have arrived at the point of time spoken of by Timothy, when men would be "lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." They show plainly that the Lord's money is squandered away for articles worse than useless; such as costly furniture, paintings, &c., to adorn their houses, while the poor of the Lord's children are forgotten. How is it with us, brethren and sisters, are we not guilty more or less in this respect, paying the Lord's money away for useless articles, to adorn our mortal bodies?

There are some of our brethren who would gladly give the most of their time to preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and labor from house to house, but for the lack of the things of this life to make their families comfortable. These things ought not so to be. God help us to deny ourselves, that we may have something to give to those that are striving to save sinners from the wrath to come. Some complain of a lack of faith. Let such go to work for the Lord, deny themselves, make a sacrifice for God, and they will soon find their faith greatly increased. A word to the wise is sufficient. The Lord is at hand; the day of mercy will soon be over forever. Work while it lasts. Soon the crown of life will be given to all the faithful.

Jeremiah Carr.

South Albion, Me., Feb. 18, 1862.

The following is the extract:—

"Our churches at present are languishing. Their spiritual life ebbs, with little prospect of a turn in the tide. Devotional meetings do not attract the members by the marked presence of the Holy Spirit, and few unconverted persons are drawn within their influence. Little power accompanies the services of the Sabbath. Few houses of worship are filled. Few converts are gathered, and fewer of this small number have an apostolic zeal and earnestness.

This is a sad picture to draw but no doubt it is truthful. But then the contrast of condition and opportunity, advantages and results, makes this state of things exceedingly deplorable. We have the best of teachers, the best scholars, the best schools, the best pastors, the best church choirs, the finest church edifices, and organs, and every other advantage to attract the people to the preaching of the gospel and the services of the sanctuary, yet these forms of godliness have not the power accompanying them to draw sinners to Christ. The presence of the Holy Spirit is not there. The churches are languishing.

Calling recently on a christian brother, a foreigner [illegible] circumstances, we asked him, Where do you attend church? He promptly replied, 'Nowhere, regularly. I did go to —— for a time, and put myself in the way of getting acquainted there, but it was no home for me. And I have no desire to go there again. The last time I went there I took with me a friend who was concerned for his soul's salvation. With some effort I obtained for him an introduction to the pastor. He was rather indifferently turned over by the pastor to one of the deacons. Both pastor and deacon were told that this young man was serious. Neither of them manifested much interest for him and I left the house to go there no more.

A few years ago, a dear friend of ours, who had been brought up in the Unitarian faith, after spending a short time in our family, became anxious about her soul. We took her to one of our favorite churches, and there she had her mind fastened under deep conviction. She wanted to see the pastor for conversation. We took her to his residence. Taking her seat in the pastor's parlor to await his appearance, the attractions of the room aroused her attention, and she cast her eyes over the elegantly carpeted floor, the walls of the room decorated with costly paintings, tables, chairs, ottomans, sofas, the gorgeous window curtains, the massive mirrors, all which appeared to her to be in regal style; she at once became absorbed in a train of thought very different from that in which she came. On the arrival of the pastor, the introduction, the remarks during the interview, were well suited to the place and consistently brief. The next Sabbath we invited her to accompany us to hear the same pastor, but she declined. Her seriousness upon religious matters had left her. Last summer we stood by her grave in the beautiful cemetery in the town of L——, in Worcester county. After a long sickness she passed away without giving any evidence of a change of heart."

What's in a Name?

Some correspondents write and lash, cut and sear every thing and everybody but their own dear selves, and then skulk behind a fictitious name, or wrong initials, or something else. One says, after lashing away at somebody, "Don't insert my name, as I should be ashamed of it." Some others, after thrashing some one considerably, crouch behind the fictitious name of "Dixie." Another, forsooth, will take a more pleasing name; but we will not specify further.

Now, brethren, this is not right. Do you suppose that we wish to father that which you are ashamed to own? Do you expect us to insert such articles as would do your private character an injury, and thereby expose our public character? If you do, you are mistaken. We shall do no such thing, if we know it. Let all write in the spirit of meekness and love, and then they will be more likely to be a blessing to the cause than by harshness and the like. Much more good will be accomplished with a kind treatment than by fretting and scolding. Let us strive to be "wise as serpents and harmless as doves."—Millennial Harbinger.

Conformity to the world.—As I grow older as a parent, my views are changing fast as to the degree of conformity to the world which we should allow our children. I am horrorstruck to count up the profligate children of pious persons and even ministers. By dress, books, and amusements, an atmosphere is formed which is not that of christianity. More than ever do I feel that our families must stand in a kind but determined opposition to the fashions of the world, breasting the waves like the Eddystone lighthouse. And I have found nothing yet which requires more courage and independence than to rise even a little, but decidedly, above the par of the religious world around us. Surely the way in which we commonly go on is not that way of self-denial and sacrifice and cross-bearing which the New Testament talks of. Then is the offence of the cross ceased. Our slender influence on the circle of our friends is often to be traced to our leaving so little difference between us.—Alexander's Letters.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

Bedrooms in Spring.

If two persons are to occupy a bedroom at night, let them step upon weighing scales as they retire, and then again in the morning, and they will find their actual weight is at least a pound less in the morning. Frequently there will be a loss of two or more pounds, and the average loss throughout the year will be more than one pound. That is, during the night there is a loss of a pound of matter, which has gone off from their bodies, partly from their lungs, and partly through the pores of the skin. The escaped material is carbonic acid and decayed animal matter, or poisonous exhalations. This is diffused through the air, in part absorbed by the bed-clothes. If a single ounce of wool or cotton be burned in the room, it will so completely saturate the air with smoke that one can hardly breathe, though there can only be an ounce of foreign matter in the air. If an ounce of cotton be burned in every half-hour during the night, the air will be kept continually saturated with smoke, unless there can be an open door or window for it to escape.

Now the sixteen ounces of smoke thus formed is far less poisonous than the sixteen ounces of exhalation from the lungs and bodies of the two persons who have lost a pound in weight during the night hours of sleeping, for while the dry smoke is mainly taken into the lungs, the damp odors from the body are absorbed both into the lungs and into the pores of the whole body. Need more be said to show the importance of having bedrooms well ventilated, and of thoroughly airing the sheets, coverlids and mattresses, in the morning, before packing them up in the form of a neatly made bed?—Agriculturist.

The Temperature of Rooms.

The Siecle says: "Generally speaking, during winter, apartments are too much heated. The temperature in them ought not to exceed fifteen degrees Centigrade—fifty-nine degrees Fahrenheit—and even in periods of great cold scientific men declare that twelve or thirteen degrees had better not be exceeded. In the wards of hospitals, and in the chambers of the sick, care is taken not to have greater heat than fifteen degrees. Clerks in office, and other persons of sedentary occupations, when the rooms in which they sit are too much heated, are liable to cerebral congestion and to pulmonary complaints. In bedrooms, and particularly those of children, the temperature ought to be maintained rather low; it is even prudent only rarely to make fires in them, especially during the night. In addition to keeping up only a moderate temperature, the windows of all rooms, whatever the weather, ought to be opened for a time every day, so as to renew the air."

Measles.

I have seen a great many cases of measles treated hygienically. I never have known the treatment to fail in a single instance. I give the readers of this Journal the benefits of my observation in the following formula:

1. When the person first complains, stop his eating.
2. Procure, by tepid enemas, an evacuation of the bowels.
3. When the febrile stage appears, give wet-sheet pack thirty to forty minutes, and dripping sheet after it at a temperature of ninety degrees.
4. Give plenty of water to drink, but not too cold.
5. Keep the patient's mind quiet. Keep strangers and company away.
6. Do not let him take cold.
7. Keep the room in which he is well ventilated.
8. Keep his person and bed clothing clean.
9. Stand back and give nature an opportunity to do the doctoring, and you will not need to give calomel, nor make your children paralytic.—Water Cure Journal.

To Cure Diphtheria.—A gentleman who has administered the following remedy for diphtheria, informs us that it always proved effectual in affording a speedy relief:—

"Take a common tobacco pipe, place a live coal in the bowl, and drop a little tar upon the coal, and let the patient draw the smoke into the mouth and discharge it through the nostrils. The remedy is simple, and should be tried whenever occasion may require. Many valuable lives may be saved by proper treatment as above."

A new cure for Neuralgia.—Dr. Little, of Edinburg, Scotland, in his treatment of neuralgia, is accustomed to use lint saturated with chloroform, which he places on the part affected, and over which he places a watch crystal, holding it down for ten minutes, so that the periphery may press against the surface in such a manner as to prevent the circulation of air. It is said that this produces a sensation of intense heat, and with rare exceptions results in completely removing the pain.

☞ The shoots of potatoes exposed to light contain solanum—a powerful poison. The tubers of potatoes which are covered with earth from the light, never contain this poison, but if exposed when growing, they become green on the skin, which is a sign that this poison has been developed in them. On no account should green potatoes be given to persons or animals.

Dyspepsia and Drunkenness.—In the Journal of Health we find the following: "A drunkard is never so great a fool as to kill himself; the dyspeptic is. More persons are destroyed by eating too much than by drinking too much. Gluttony kills more than drunkenness in civilized society. The dyspeptic kills himself; the drunkard kills others."

A sure Remedy for a Felon.—Take a pint of common soft soap, and stir in it airslacked lime till it is of the consistency of Glazier's putty. Make a leather thimble, fill it with this composition, and insert the finger therein, and change the composition once in twenty minutes, and a cure is certain.

For Chapped Hands.—Mix a quarter of a pound of unsalted lard, which has been washed in soft water, and then in rosewater, with the yolk of two new-laid eggs and a large spoonful of honey. Add so much oat-meal or almond paste as will work into a paste.

☞ A lady named Temple, who is well known in the fashionable regions of Belgravia, is stated to have discovered a remedy for stuttering. It is simply the act of reading in a whisper, and gradually augmenting the whisper to a louder tone.

☞ The corn "silk," made into strong tea, is said to have wonderful effect in curing diseases of the kidneys. It is a great remedy in Germany.

Riches.

Rich is he whose treasure lieth
In the treasure-house above!
Happy he who overcometh
Evil by the works of love!

If but treasure there is garnished,
Whatsoever may befal,
We may rest with strong assurance
God at length will give us all.

He is rich in grace and glory,
And in all that's great and good;
All He gives will not impoverish,
Though it be a perfect flood!

For his sources are eternal,
Whence he draws for each and all,
And his goodness always blendeth
With the needy's humble call.

Always bearing, always granting
All requests which tend to good,
Nor withholding his compassion,
Pledging us his sacred word.

Truth.

The heading of this article is a very small word; but the intrinsic worth and influence of that which it expresses, is far beyond all human calculation. We are advised in the Book of books to "buy the truth and sell it not." Such advice, when followed, must be productive of good results; for when we become the possessors of that which is really true, no matter at what cost, it is a bargain that we need never regret. The least particle of truth is worth more than error piled mountains high. Truth is of God, the fountain of all goodness; error is of the Devil, and opposed to all that is godly. Truth is immortal, and must endure as long as its author lives; error must die, and be blotted out of the fair universe of God. Truth is a blessing to all that embrace it; error is a curse to all that come under its influence, and destructive of the best interests of humanity. Truth, in whatever light we view it, is exceedingly glorious, and worthy of all acceptation; error, when contrasted with truth, appears inexpressibly loathsome and contemptible, and unworthy to be cherished by intelligent beings.

Thrones and titles must crumble into dust, and all the kingdoms of this world must fall before the hand of time. Worldly wisdom will waste away, and its most noted philosophers must die and be forgotten; still truth will ever remain unspotted and secure. The heavens and earth must pass away, when the wrath of Jehovah shall at last deluge all earthly grandeur in a flood of fire, that shall destroy all perishable things. Then error shall find its grave, from which no angelic trump can ever awaken it; but truth shall wing its way above the fiery ordeal unharmed, and reign supreme amid the glorified hosts of those whom God shall bless with life and glory evermore. The truth never can be permanently overthrown, because it is held up by that Omnipotent being who created the world and sustains the universe by his unlimited power. Efforts have been made to put down truth, by overthrowing those individuals who were identified with it. If we commence back to righteous Abel, and read the entire history of prophets, and other saints of the Most High that were slain by sin's polluted hands, even down to Him who said, "I am the truth"; and then continue through the history of the martyrs who died for their faith in Jesus, and even to the present time those whose names are cast out as evil for the truth's sake,—we find throughout the entire history that mighty efforts have been made to prop up error, and substitute the false for that which is true; but all such efforts have been and must be fruitless.

"Truth crushed to earth must rise again;
The eternal years of God are hers;
While error wounded writhes in pain,
And dies amid her worshipers."

In buying truth, we may have to part with all that we have previously considered desirable. We shall be in a small minority in this present state; the applause of men will be withheld from us; we may have to bid adieu to our former associates; the finger of scorn may be pointed at us by an ungodly world, and a formal, time-serving church; we may be turned out of the synagogue, as others have been before us; and it may affect our pockets somewhat, as riches are frequently accumulated by false statements: still, what we lose sinks into utter insignificance in comparison to what we gain. It is like giving up sand for pearls, and rags for diamonds. We give up the fading things of earth, that we may possess eternal and glorious realities. We let go the fellowship of wicked men, and become allied to God, angels, and the holy and faithful of all ages. It is certainly a very profitable exchange. Iniquity may seem to prosper for a time, but in the end truth will triumph over pride, hypocrisy, deceit, sarcasm, guile, and every evil influence; and those that continually abide in the truth shall be abundantly satisfied when they are called to possess an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

The great question with us who prefer to walk in the footsteps of Him who was "the way, the truth, and the life," should not be, What is the most popular doctrine? or, What saith the creed? or, What can be the easiest lived out? but simply, What is the truth? And after ascertaining the true position, we should walk therein, if we have to go alone. The Lord help us, one and all, to "buy the truth and sell it not."

The Seventh Seal.

The opening of the seals was to show the "things which must be hereafter" (Rev. 4:1); not the symbol merely, but the "things" themselves. Therefore, in the Revelation, as in all other prophecies, the "things" symbolized are always literal. The symbolical beasts, or creatures, represented by the lion, calf, face of a man, and the eagle, symbolize the church as expressed in 5:9, where they are represented as singing "a new song, saying, . . . Thou (the Lamb) has redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation." This point is then settled, a literal people redeemed by literal blood, and symbolised by four living creatures.

The first seal is opened, and the "white horse" appears. Says Barnes:—"In general, then, the horse would properly symbolise war. . . . The particular character or complexion of the event—as peaceful or warlike—is denoted by the color." Thus the bow, the crown, and the going forth conquering and to conquer, are literal events; the introduction, or commencement of "things" which must be hereafter. Mr. Barnes, in his "Notes," assigns this period from the year 96 to 180, or from Nerva to the accession of Commodus. "A. D. 98, Trajan, a great general, and popular emperor; under him the empire attains its greatest extent,"—"conquering and to conquer."

The second seal is opened, and the red horse appears,—the character of the government is changed—peace is taken from the earth. Again says Mr. Barnes, "As the white horse denoted prosperity, triumph and happiness, so this (the red horse) would denote carnage, discord, bloodshed." And what period could better denote such a state than from the accession of Commodus to the days of Domitian. Peace was literally taken from the earth. See Gibbon's Dec. and Fall, vol. i, pp. 110–197.

The third seal is opened, and the black horse appears. "Famine, pestilence, oppression . . . might be denoted by the color of the horse."—Barnes. "A measure of wheat for a penny"—thereby raising the price of grain eight times higher than usual,—showed the literal fulfillment of this prophecy from the third to the fifth century, at times, throughout the Roman empire. I have the facts to show that the things here spoken of did occur at that time, as never before, and that bread stuffs were literally weighed out for the people, the scarcity was so great.

The fourth seal is opened, and the pale horse appears, and a literal killing with sword, with hunger, with death, and with the beasts of the field was accomplished by Papal Rome.

The fifth seal is opened, and a literal cry goes up from the fires of Smithfield and other altars,—"How long, O Lord!"

The sixth seal is opened, and the literal signs in the heavens appear, and "this generation" that has seen them will not "pass away," blessed be God, till the angels come to gather the "golden sheaves" into the garner of the Lord. This brings us down to "the great day of his wrath."

The seventh seal is opened. The sealing in the seventh chapter is an event that occurs "after the opening of the sixth seal, and before the opening of the seventh."—Barnes. It is a simple explanation to show the safety of the church in the impending dangers, and events which will occur under the seventh seal or in "the great day of his wrath." There was silence in heaven. The calm before the tempest. "In view of these apprehended terrors, the inhabitants of heaven are represented as standing in awful silence, as if anticipating and apprehending what was to occur."—Barnes.

The seven angels with their trumpets appear, and another angel having a golden censer; incense is offered with the prayers of all saints. Here the united cry (day and night) comes up before the throne. The censer is filled with fire and cast into the earth. This is an indication that prayer no longer avails; or as if prayer were now in vain."—Barnes. He that is holy will be holy still, and he that is filthy will be filthy still. "The successive opening of seals disclosing most important events—increasing in interest as each new one was opened; the course of events which seemed to be leading to the consummation of all things, arrested after the opening of the sixth seal; and now the last in the series to be opened disclosing what the affairs of the world would be at the consummation of all things."—Barnes.

The events, or "things," under the seventh seal, belong to that time, as much as the signs belong to the sixth seal; and we may not place them elsewhere without violating every principle of prophetic interpretation. The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they (the hail, fire, etc.,) were cast upon the earth, and the effect will be that literal trees and grass are burnt up.

The second angel sounds, the third part of the sea becomes blood, and the third part of the creatures in the sea, that had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed. As truly literal as the plagues of Egypt, and all to be accomplished in the great day of his wrath. No wonder the exclamation, "Who shall be able to stand?" The sounding of the trumpets, and the pouring out of the vials, will occupy three and a half years, they having reference to the same time and "things." Thus—

TRUMPETS.

The first trumpet sounds, and hail, fire and blood follow.
2d trump—Sea become blood
3d " Waters bitter
4th " Sun smitten.
5th " Torment five months
6th " Angels loosed in the Euphrates.
7th " The kingdom of God comes.

VIALS.

The first vial is poured, and grievous sores ensue.
2d Vial.—Sea as the blood of a dead man.
3d " Waters become blood
4th " Sun scorches with heat
5th " Gnawed their tongues for pain.
6th " Euphrates dried up
7th " It is done.

Now as the sealing is after the opening of the sixth, and before the opening of the seventh seal, it follows that the trumpets are yet future; for at the sounding of the fifth trumpet, the sealed ones only are exempt from "hurt." The time of the sounding of the fifth and sixth trumpets, being literal, will make up their share of the three and a half years, during which the wrath of God will be made manifest upon the inhabitants of earth, till the slain of the Lord shall be from one end of the earth to the other, neither lamented, gathered, or buried; in view of which, I sing,

"Let me go! ere the hopes of the wicked shall fall,
Ere cheeks that have bloomed shall wax deathly and pale;
Yes, hide me, dear Savior, from earth's final groan,
Let me go with the dear ones—oh! let me go home!"

Yours "for the war," H. PRATT.

Suffer Patiently.

Are we willing to suffer in obscurity, become little and unknown, if so we may most honor Christ? This is a question I have meditated upon a good deal recently. I am sure I never knew how much meaning was contained in those two simple words—suffer patiently! To me they have an uncommon sweetness; for they were spoken in a kind, Christ-like way by one of God's children at a time when all was dark and dreary; and it seemed for the time I had forgotten where to look for light. I was looking at my own unworthiness, and my trials seemed like mountains before me. I had been in very trying circumstances for a long time previous to this; and when I could almost look through the dark clouds and discern the silvery lining, another one appeared, heavier, darker, and more threatening, and I was groping about in the darkness and gloom, not knowing where to look for my Lord. Surely it seemed the Lord had hid himself from me, and I was indeed left alone. In the midst of all these mental difficulties I was prostrated upon a bed of sickness, at a time when it seemed to be impossible for me to be passive and say, "Thy will, O Lord, not mine." But Father was near watching over me, and sent one that had traveled through the same dark valley to encourage and cheer my despondent heart. I remarked, "I want to labor for God." "Yes," he replied, "you must work or you will die out." I looked up in utter astonishment. "What can I do?" He answered in a very gentle way, "Suffer patiently; that will be a more purifying work for you than any other at present." The idea had never before occurred to me that I could thus honor God.

There may be others that are tossed about upon the rough ocean, and perhaps they, too, often feel that every wave will upset their frail bark and they sink in despair. Look up! fellow pilgrim. Let us delight to "suffer patiently" a little while longer, that we may come out of the furnace purified like pure gold, fitted and prepared to reign with Jesus in the kingdom of eternal rest,—a rest from all these innumerable trials and cares which seem now almost to overwhelm us. If we are only faithful a little longer, we shall soon know what it is to be free. O may God give us needed grace for every necessary trial, and withhold nothing that is essential to our purification and redemption. CARRIE.

ON THE DEATH OF SR. PERKINS, MARCH 3D, '62.

She'll soon come back, ye mourning ones,
Though ye have lain her low,
And now above her dreamless bed
Cold, wintry winds may blow.

She'll soon come back,—she only sleeps
Beneath a guarded sod;
For angels watch the slumbering saint
Whose life is hid in God.

She'll soon come back. Ah! dry those tears,
Behold the morning nigh;
Jesus shall come,—the dead shall live,—
The living never die.

She'll soon come back. O! power divine!
Thou God so good, so wise,
Help us, poor erring souls, to gain
The life that never dies. MARIA

Letter from an Episcopal Minister.

The following letter from a minister of the Church of England in this country, will illustrate the spread of truth among various classes and in various directions:—

"21st April, 1862.

MY DEAR BRO. HASTINGS:—I received your very kind letter, as well as the packages of books, for which I am very much obliged to you. Your epistle to me was full of sympathy and christian kindness, both of which you will readily believe I greatly need under my present trying circumstances. I think I told you in my last letter that my salary had been withdrawn from me, because I had been compelled scripturally and conscientiously to believe and preach that 'the wages of sin is death'—not eternal life in torments. This change in my theological views has not been hastily brought about. The subject has occupied my mind more or less for some years past. The first book that drew my attention to the question of what the end of them shall be who obey not the gospel, was Locke's 'Reasonableness of Christianity,' a book well worthy of a careful perusal. Since then I have read a good deal on the subject; amongst other works, 'Whateley's Future State,' Geo. Storrs' Six Sermons,—but most of all I have read and studied carefully and prayerfully the inspired oracles of truth. The result has been that I have been compelled to embrace the doctrine that when 'sin is perfected it bringeth forth death'—not eternal life in misery—death moral, and death physical, and death eternal. It was no easy matter for me to be thus compelled to embrace this view. The opposite had been instilled into my mind as the truth of God from earliest childhood; and in manhood as a minister of the Church of England I had taught it as such. I found it no easy matter, I can assure you, my dear brother, to give up a belief in the torment theory, when I found that it was equivalent to giving up the maintenance of a wife and family, and in a measure also the friendship of many with whom I took sweet counsel and walked to the house of God as dear friends. Thank God, my love of the truth as it is in Jesus, has enabled me to make the sacrifice of all, and take my stand on the promises of our heavenly Father. In his good time and pleasure he will provide and make all things work together for good.

I have recently read the controversy between Hudson and Cobb, and Adams and Cobb. The result of which has been to confirm me in the faith which I have adopted. To me it is evident that Universalism has, strictly speaking, neither Scriptural salvation nor curse. It cannot be said that Mr. Cobb's productions are 'multum in parvo.' I must confess that I have seldom met with more long winded special pleading to so little purpose. Let his first chapter in answer to Hudson's be witness to the truth of this assertion. There are doubtless many passages of Scripture quoted by destructionists in support of the doctrine of physical death that prove no such thing. We cannot be too careful not to quote Scripture at random—not to quote it in fact in support of any doctrine without knowing all its surroundings—the complete drift of the passage in which it is found. The expression 'death' is no doubt very frequently to be found in Scripture as expressive of moral and spiritual alienation from God, or a state of sin; but why, then, did such an expression as 'death' come to be used of such a thing? Is there any real analogy between alienation from God and physical death? I can see none. To me the answer to this question is simple. The law of association and the doctrine of prolepsis explain the matter. A state of sin unrepented of, unchanged, leads infallibly to death. The apostle speaks of the 'eternal judgment' not because the judgment shall continue forever, but because the effect of the sentence is eternal death. Our courts are called courts of justice because justice is done therein. The condemned criminal is said to be dead because that event is certain. His sentence infallibly leads to it. On this ground alone, it appears to me, can alienation from God or a state of sin be called 'death.' I should like to hear another explanation if any can be given.

I was very much struck with Mr. Cobb's treatment of the 27th verse of the 9th of Hebrews. It appeared to me that few men would have risked their honesty and scholarship in giving such an interpretation as he has given, but such as had some doctrine to support at all hazards. It is difficult to believe that the apostle would have the Hebrews understand by his expression, 'tois anthropois'—the Jewish Priesthood!! And then with regard to the force of the article which he notices—it is well known by every classical scholar that the article in such a case is GENERIC, and equivalent to 'all men.' So that the verse might be translated—'as it is appointed unto all men once to die.' His treatment of this verse is a fair sample of what I must denominate miserable special pleading. But I am writing a longer letter than I had intended; let me therefore draw it to a conclusion. I must bide my time and trust in God. I am no prophet, but I will venture for once to predict that many years will not roll away before the doctrine of 'no immortal life apart from Jesus Christ' will be believed and preached by hundreds within the bosom of the Church of England, from whence on account of which I have been expelled. May God keep me steadfast in the truth, whatever may betide me. My wife joins me in kindest regards to you and yours. Believe me to be, my dear Bro. Hastings, most faithfully yours in the Lord. L."

Our prayer is that God may bless our brother abundantly. It is no new thing for a man who has been blind all his days to be cast out of the synagogue just as soon as Jesus gives him sight; but then, one comfort is, the man has eyesight to walk by, and another is that Jesus goes about picking such outcasts up, and taking care of them. We trust that our brother will find increasing light at every step, and be enabled to give it to others as he has opportunity.

Seeing, brother, that you have lost your salary for the truth's sake, I think the Lord will take care of you. Men have ordained that they that preach tradition shall live of tradition. God has ordained that they who preach the gospel shall live of the GOSPEL. May God help you to preach the pure gospel, and if you cannot be a Churchman, you may be what is better, a CHRISTIAN. As such I commend you to the fatherly care of a promise-keeping God, and remain your brother in Christ,

For the Crisis.

Hear Ye!

"Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud: for the Lord hath spoken. Give glory to the Lord your God, before he cause darkness, and before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and, while ye look for light, he turn it into the shadow of death, and make it gross darkness."—JER. 13: 15, 16.

Here Jeremiah stands up as a man inspired of God, and exhorts the wicked Jews to repent, for the Lord hath spoken. God never destroys mankind without first giving them an opportunity of repentance; and then if they do not repent, he withdraws his Holy Spirit from them, and causes darkness to come upon them, and their feet stumble upon the dark mountain of sin; and while they look for light, God turns it into the shadow of death, and makes it gross darkness. "Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud." It appears, then, that no one can be proud and yet be a follower of Christ. In Mal. we read, "For the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Give glory then to the Lord your God, and repent before he cause darkness to encompass you, and before your feet stumble on the dark mountains, and you are lost in the shadow of death. A great portion of the people in this world are too proud to hearken unto God, lest they be humbled, and lose a few of their moth-eaten garments, or their hoarded silver and gold. Therefore God, knowing their hearts, commands them not to be proud, but hearken unto him, repent of their sins, and give glory to him, lest he cause darkness to come upon them. While they are looking for light from another source, God turns it into the shadow of death, and makes it gross darkness. They have lost all hopes of a future life. They have hearkened to the God of Baal, and lived luxuriously upon the things of this present life, and rolled sin as a sweet morsel under their tongue; while the awful warnings of the Almighty have rushed through their ears from day to day, and they have passed them by as but the whisper of winds. But the day of judgment dawns. Their deep despairing wails are hushed to all eternity. They have sunken into the dark and sullen stream of death's eternal night. O! may we who have hearkened unto God, and given ear to his glorious truth, ever sound to a sin-cursed world the salvation of God.

Southington, Ct. S. H.

The Coming Kingdom.

MR. EDITOR:—I was exceedingly interested in the article on the "coming Kingdom," in the Witness of the 21st of February. No subject can be more deeply interesting than this to the true christian, and while we may differ as to the personal reign of Christ on earth, and deem it unwise to fix dates, yet it is not only our duty to watch the signs of the times, and see if they do not indicate the approach of that hour when the Son of man shall appear in his glory, with all his holy angels with him. Without, therefore, entering into the chronological deductions, let us look at the prophecies which in general terms describe the events immediately preceding the Second Advent, and compare them with the present state of the world.

If we refer to the Old Testament, in addition to what is said in the article referred to, of the "overturning" of the nations, it is written in Hag. 2: 7, "I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come." Now I am aware that this prophecy is generally applied to the first Advent of Christ, and primarily no doubt, it does refer to that; but St. Paul referring to it, in his Epistle to the Hebrews, seems also to apply it to the Second. "Whose voice then, he says, shook the earth, but now he hath promised, saying, "Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but heaven, and this word, yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things that cannot be shaken may remain." These words, therefore, seem to point to another shaking which is to precede the Second Coming, and this harmonizes with the Savior's own words, that his Advent should be preceded by great convulsions both in the moral and national world—the sea and waves roaring, distress of nations, and men's hearts failing them for fear, for the powers of the heaven shall be shaken. Such are some of the signs which he predicted. Have not the nations within the last few years been distressed?

Has it not seemed as if God had reached down from heaven, taken the nations of the earth in his hands and shaken them together? For several years past the nations of the old world have been dashing against each other like the waves of an angry sea, and now our own land is convulsed, and at this present moment scarcely a nation on the globe is in a quiescent state.

The New York Times has had within the last few days an article headed "The Great Tribulation in Europe," in which the writer shows that the Old World is on the eve of the most tremendous convulsions that ever occurred. What do these things mean? It is true, that wars and rumors of wars are no new thing. But were the nations of the earth ever so generally, so universally shaken as now?

Again, to the prophet Daniel several particulars were revealed which were to characterize the last days. One was that there should be a time of trial. Another that many should run to and fro. A third that knowledge should be increased, and finally that the wicked should do wickedly, and the wise should understand. Now, I suppose it will be generally admitted that whatever phase of society, or whatever development of knowledge, or wickedness, which the prophets predict, must be regarded as extraordinary. If, for example, the increase of knowledge is to characterize the last days, it is some extraordinary increase—knowledge, probably connected with some remarkable invention or discovery. So in regard to locomotion, or the "running to and fro." What then are the characteristics of this age in these respects?

Do we not all admit that if a man even twenty years ago had predicted the improvements and inventions which we now see, he would have been considered a fit subject for an Insane Asylum? Consider the speed with which we travel. See also, the multitudes on the move, think of the distances passed over in a single day. A man can now go over to Europe and back and scarcely be missed in the community where he lives. A boy of a dozen years can have seen more of the world than his grandfather in his life time. If, in fact, human life is to be measured by what is seen, heard, known and experienced, we live longer now than Methusalah did. The increase of knowledge is even more wonderful than the improvement of locomotion.

Progress has been the watchword of this generation. Discovery and invention, in every department of art and science, have been the order of the day. Books are multiplied ad infinitum. Papers, periodicals, pamphlets, sermons, essays, and addresses are fairly showered upon the land. It is said, upon good authority, that one printing press in the city of New York, prints in one day what would require for the human hand to write, a period of ten thousand years. But the climax of invention for the spread of knowledge or intelligence is the telegraph. What a wonder is this! Intelligence carried thousands of miles away in a second of time, borne, in fact, upon the lightning's wing. And now the electric wires belt the Continent, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, conveying messages with such velocity that time itself seems outrun, and a man in California receives his tidings apparently before they are sent. An interesting thought connected with this subject, is that the Hebrew word translated in Daniel's prophecy "increased," may be rendered, shooting forth as the lightnings. In view of this, some have supposed that the telegraph was really intended. Whether this is so or not, yet it is sufficiently wonderful to claim a place in prophecy. But we have become so accustomed to marvels that we have almost ceased to wonder at anything, no matter how startling or marvellous. Does it not, however, seem as if within the last few years the mind had been brought up to the most intense activity, and that man in wresting the very elements to do his bidding, almost rivalled Omnipotent power? We believe, in fact, that it is conceded by all writers upon the subject, that the last half century, in invention, discoveries and facilities for the increase and dissemination of knowledge, throws all previous periods entirely in the shade. At all events they are most extraordinary, and may well be considered as fully meeting the prophecy of Daniel.

Is it not, to say the least, a thought worthy of the most serious reflection, that two marked characteristics of the last days, viz., in the running to and fro, and the increase, or diffusion of knowledge, should be so marvellously fulfilled at this present day and hour? But look now at the predictions of the Apostles, particularly St. Paul. "In the last days," he says, writing to Timothy, "perilous times shall come; men shall be lovers of themselves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, without natural affection, false accusers, truce-breakers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those who are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." Now, we think it easy to show that each particular here is remarkably fulfilled, but we rather direct the attention to some of the most prominent and startling. "Traitors!" was there ever such a gigantic system of treason on this earth as we now see? and without the approach to an adequate cause. There is no parallel to it on the pages of the world's history. What a spectacle to men and angels and God! Whole communities rising up in rebellion against one of the freest, most tolerant governments that ever existed! Men high in power, plotting its overthrow, violating the most solemn oaths, and breaking the most solemn covenants. Treason entering halls of legislation, into the highest places of trust and power, into the Army, the Navy, here, there, everywhere, like a deadly miasma, poisoning the national atmosphere, and spreading throughout the land desolation, ruin and death. This whole thing, too, has been conceived, matured and accomplished by lies, by false accusations and slanders. Even now the most stupendous falsehoods are told of the North, in short, the rebellion is kept alive by "false accusers," both at home and abroad. A writer in the New York Times styles this an "Age of mendacity." "Was there ever seen," he says, "since the world began, so monstrous a crop of falsehood as has sprung up out of this present rebellion? It would seem as if the father of lies himself had come down in power, finding his especial home, of course, in that region where the 'sum of all villanies' has brought forth its appropriate yield of treason and other crimes, but not by any means confining his operations to that quarter." This is but a sample of the whole article, and we have quoted it as valuable evidence from a secular paper in confirmation of prophetic fulfillment in this particular.

Now, we are aware that these sins are not new, that treason and slandering have been common in all ages; but are not the present forms of them the most extraordinary the world ever saw? So, too, we are sensible that this is a local strife, and that we are a small part of the world. Yet was there ever a local strife so far-reaching in its effects as this? Has not Europe been shaken by this struggle? Nay, more, have not the throes of this moral and political earthquake been felt almost throughout the whole world?

Were we not in danger of drawing out this communication to a tedious length, we would proceed to speak particularly of the other characteristics named by the Apostle. But as it is, we can only glance at them. Covetousness! What an age for

Riches.

Rich is he whose treasure lieth
In the treasure-house above!
Happy he who overcometh
Evil by the works of love!

If but treasure there is garnished,
Whatsoever may befal,
We may rest with strong assurance
God at length will give us all.

He is rich in grace and glory,
And in all that's great and good;
All He gives will not impoverish,
Though it be a perfect flood!

For his sources are eternal,
Whence he draws for each and all,
And his goodness always blendeth
With the needy's humble call.

Always bearing, always granting
All requests which tend to good,
Nor withholding his compassion,
Pledging us his sacred word.

Truth.

The heading of this article is a very small word; but the intrinsic worth and influence of that which it expresses, is far beyond all human calculation. We are advised in the Book of books to "buy the truth and sell it not." Such advice, when followed, must be productive of good results; for when we become the possessors of that which is really true, no matter at what cost, it is a bargain that we need never regret. The least particle of truth is worth more than error piled mountains high. Truth is of God, the fountain of all goodness; error is of the Devil, and opposed to all that is godly. Truth is immortal, and must endure as long as its author lives; error must die, and be blotted out of the fair universe of God. Truth is a blessing to all that embrace it; error is a curse to all that come under its influence, and destructive of the best interests of humanity. Truth, in whatever light we view it, is exceedingly glorious, and worthy of all acceptation; error, when contrasted with truth, appears inexpressibly loathsome and contemptible, and unworthy to be cherished by intelligent beings.

Thrones and titles must crumble into dust, and all the kingdoms of this world must fall before the hand of time. Worldly wisdom will waste away, and its most noted philosophers must die and be forgotten; still truth will ever remain unspotted and secure. The heavens and earth must pass away, when the wrath of Jehovah shall at last deluge all earthly grandeur in a flood of fire, that shall destroy all perishable things. Then error shall find its grave, from which no angelic trump can ever awaken it; but truth shall wing its way above the fiery ordeal unharmed, and reign supreme amid the glorified hosts of those whom God shall bless with life and glory evermore. The truth never can be permanently overthrown, because it is held up by that Omnipotent being who created the world and sustains the universe by his unlimited power. Efforts have been made to put down truth, by overthrowing those individuals who were identified with it. If we commence back to righteous Abel, and read the entire history of prophets, and other saints of the Most High that were slain by sin's polluted hands, even down to Him who said, "I am the truth"; and then continue through the history of the martyrs who died for their faith in Jesus, and even to the present time those whose names are cast out as evil for the truth's sake,—we find throughout the entire history that mighty efforts have been made to prop up error, and substitute the false for that which is true; but all such efforts have been and must be fruitless.

"Truth crushed to earth must rise again;
The eternal years of God are hers;
While error wounded writhes in pain,
And dies amid her worshipers."

In buying truth, we may have to part with all that we have previously considered desirable. We shall be in a small minority in this present state; the applause of men will be withheld from us; we may have to bid adieu to our former associates; the finger of scorn may be pointed at us by an ungodly world, and a formal, time-serving church; we may be turned out of the synagogue, as others have been before us; and it may affect our pockets somewhat, as riches are frequently accumulated by false statements: still, what we lose sinks into utter insignificance in comparison to what we gain. It is like giving up sand for pearls, and rags for diamonds. We give up the fading things of earth, that we may possess eternal and glorious realities. We let go the fellowship of wicked men, and become allied to God, angels, and the holy and faithful of all ages. It is certainly a very profitable exchange. Iniquity may seem to prosper for a time, but in the end truth will triumph over pride, hypocrisy, deceit, sarcasm, guile, and every evil influence; and those that continually abide in the truth shall be abundantly satisfied when they are called to possess an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

The great question with us who prefer to walk in the footsteps of Him who was "the way, the truth, and the life," should not be, What is the most popular doctrine? or, What saith the creed? or, What can be the easiest lived out? but simply, What is the truth? And after ascertaining the true position, we should walk therein, if we have to go alone. The Lord help us, one and all, to "buy the truth and sell it not."

The Seventh Seal.

The opening of the seals was to show the "things which must be hereafter" (Rev. 4: 1); not the symbol merely, but the "things" themselves. Therefore, in the Revelation, as in all other prophecies, the "things" symbolised are always literal. The symbolical beasts, or creatures, represented by the lion, calf, face of a man, and the eagle, symbolise the church as expressed in 5: 9, where they are represented as singing "a new song, saying, . . . Thou (the Lamb) has redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation." This point is then settled, a literal people redeemed by literal blood, and symbolised by four living creatures.

The first seal is opened, and the "white horse" appears. Says Barnes:—"In general, then, the horse would properly symbolise war. . . . The particular character or complexion of the event—as peaceful or warlike—is denoted by the color." Thus the bow, the crown, and the going forth conquering and to conquer, are literal events; the introduction, or commencement of "things" which must be hereafter. Mr. Barnes, in his "Notes," assigns this period from the year 96 to 180, or from Nerva to the accession of Commodus. "A. D. 98, Trajan, a great general, and popular emperor; under him the empire attains its greatest extent,"—"conquering and to conquer."

The second seal is opened, and the red horse appears,—the character of the government is changed—peace is taken from the earth. Again says Mr. Barnes, "As the white horse denoted prosperity, triumph and happiness, so this (the red horse) would denote carnage, discord, bloodshed." And what period could better denote such a state than from the accession of Commodus to the days of Domitian. Peace was literally taken from the earth. See Gibbon's Dec. and Fall, vol. i, pp. 110–197.

The third seal is opened, and the black horse appears. "Famine, pestilence, oppression . . . might be denoted by the color of the horse."—Barnes. "A measure of wheat for a penny"—thereby raising the price of grain eight times higher than usual,—showed the literal fulfillment of this prophecy from the third to the fifth century, at times, throughout the Roman empire. I have the facts to show that the things here spoken of did occur at that time, as never before, and that bread stuffs were literally weighed out for the people, the scarcity was so great.

The fourth seal is opened, and the pale horse appears, and a literal killing with sword, with hunger, with death, and with the beasts of the field was accomplished by Papal Rome.

The fifth seal is opened, and a literal cry goes up from the fires of Smithfield and other altars,—"How long, O Lord!"

The sixth seal is opened, and the literal signs in the heavens appear, and "this generation" that has seen them will not "pass away," blessed be God, till the angels come to gather the "golden sheaves" into the garner of the Lord. This brings us down to "the great day of his wrath."

The seventh seal is opened. The sealing in the seventh chapter is an event that occurs "after the opening of the sixth seal, and before the opening of the seventh."—Barnes. It is a simple explanation to show the safety of the church in the impending dangers, and events which will occur under the seventh seal or in "the great day of his wrath." There was silence in heaven. The calm before the tempest. "In view of these apprehended terrors, the inhabitants of heaven are represented as standing in awful silence, as if anticipating and apprehending what was to occur."—Barnes.

The seven angels with their trumpets appear, and another angel having a golden censer; incense is offered with the prayers of all saints. Here the united cry (day and night) comes up before the throne. The censer is filled with fire and cast into the earth. This is an indication that prayer no longer avails; "or as if prayer were now in vain."—Barnes. He that is holy will be holy still, and he that is filthy will be filthy still. "The successive opening of seals disclosing most important events—increasing in interest as each new one was opened; the course of events which seemed to be leading to the consummation of all things, arrested after the opening of the sixth seal; and now the last in the series to be opened disclosing what the affairs of the world would be at the consummation of all things."—Barnes.

The events, or "things," under the seventh seal, belong to that time, as much as the signs belong to the sixth seal; and we may not place them elsewhere without violating every principle of prophetic interpretation. The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they (the hail, fire, etc.,) were cast upon the earth, and the effect will be that literal trees and grass are burnt up.

The second angel sounds, the third part of the sea becomes blood, and the third part of the creatures in the sea, that had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed. As truly literal as the plagues of Egypt, and all to be accomplished in the great day of his wrath. No wonder the exclamation, "Who shall be able to stand?" The sounding of the trumpets, and the pouring out of the vials, will occupy three and a half years, they having reference to the same time and "things." Thus—

TRUMPETS.

The first trumpet sounds, and hail, fire and blood follow.
2d trump—Sea become blood
3d " Waters bitter
4th " Sun smitten
5th " Torment five months
6th " Angels loosed in the Euphrates.
7th " The kingdom of God comes.

VIALS.

The first vial is poured, and grievous sores ensue.
2d Vial—Sea as the blood of a dead man.
3d " Waters become blood
4th " Sun scorches with heat
5th " Gnawed their tongues for pain.
6th " Euphrates dried up.
7th " It is done.

Now as the sealing is after the opening of the sixth, and before the opening of the seventh seal, it follows that the trumpets are yet future; for at the sounding of the fifth trumpet, the sealed ones only are exempt from "hurt." The time of the sounding of the fifth and sixth trumpets, being literal, will make up their share of the three and a half years, during which the wrath of God will be made manifest upon the inhabitants of earth, till the slain of the Lord shall be from one end of the earth to the other, neither lamented, gathered, or buried; in view of which, I sing,

"Let me go! ere the hopes of the wicked shall fail,
Ere cheeks that have bloomed shall wax deathly and pale;
Yes, hide me, dear Savior, from earth's final groan,
Let me go with the dear ones—oh! let me go home!"

Yours "for the war," H. PRATT.

Suffer Patiently.

Are we willing to suffer in obscurity, become little and unknown, if so we may most honor Christ? This is a question I have meditated upon a good deal recently. I am sure I never knew how much meaning was contained in those two simple words—suffer patiently! To me they have an uncommon sweetness; for they were spoken in a kind, Christ-like way by one of God's children at a time when all was dark and dreary; and it seemed for the time I had forgotten where to look for light. I was looking at my own unworthiness, and my trials seemed like mountains before me. I had been in very trying circumstances for a long time previous to this; and when I could almost look through the dark clouds and discern the silvery lining, another one appeared, heavier, darker, and more threatening, and I was groping about in the darkness and gloom, not knowing where to look for my Lord. Surely it seemed the Lord had hid himself from me, and I was indeed left alone. In the midst of all these mental difficulties I was prostrated upon a bed of sickness, at a time when it seemed to be impossible for me to be passive and say, "Thy will, O Lord, not mine." But Father was near watching over me, and sent one that had traveled through the same dark valley to encourage and cheer my despondent heart. I remarked, "I want to labor for God." "Yes," he replied, "you must work or you will die out." I looked up in utter astonishment. "What can I do?" He answered in a very gentle way, "Suffer patiently; that will be a more purifying work for you than any other at present." The idea had never before occurred to me that I could thus honor God.

There may be others that are tossed about upon the rough ocean, and perhaps they, too, often feel that every wave will upset their frail bark and they sink in despair. Look up! fellow pilgrim. Let us delight to "suffer patiently" a little while longer, that we may come out of the furnace purified like pure gold, fitted and prepared to reign with Jesus in the kingdom of eternal rest,—a rest from all these innumerable trials and cares which seem now almost to overwhelm us. If we are only faithful a little longer, we shall soon know what it is to be free. O may God give us needed grace for every necessary trial, and withhold nothing that is essential to our purification and redemption. CARRIE.

ON THE DEATH OF SR. PERKINS, MARCH 3D, '62.

She'll soon come back, ye mourning ones,
Though ye have lain her low,
And now above her dreamless bed
Cold, wintry winds may blow.

She'll soon come back,—she only sleeps
Beneath a guarded sod;
For angels watch the slumbering saint
Whose life is hid in God.

She'll soon come back. Ah! dry those tears,
Behold the morning nigh;
Jesus shall come,—the dead shall live,—
The living never die.

She'll soon come back. O! power divine!
Thou God so good, so wise,
Help us, poor erring souls, to gain
The life that never dies MARIA

Letter from an Episcopal Minister.

The following letter from a minister of the Church of England in this country, will illustrate the spread of truth among various classes and in various directions:—

"21st April, 1862.

MY DEAR BRO. HASTINGS:—I received your very kind letter, as well as the packages of books, for which I am very much obliged to you. Your epistle to me was full of sympathy and christian kindness, both of which you will readily believe I greatly need under my present trying circumstances. I think I told you in my last letter that my salary had been withdrawn from me, because I had been compelled scripturally and conscientiously to believe and preach that 'the wages of sin is death'—not eternal life in torments. This change in my theological views has not been hastily brought about. The subject has occupied my mind more or less for some years past. The first book that drew my attention to the question of what the end of them shall be who obey not the gospel, was Locke's 'Reasonableness of Christianity,' a book well worthy of a careful perusal. Since then I have read a good deal on the subject, amongst other works, 'Whateley's Future State,' Geo. Storrs' Six Sermons,—but most of all I have read and studied carefully and prayerfully the inspired oracles of truth. The result has been that I have been compelled to embrace the doctrine that when 'sin is perfected it bringeth forth death'—not eternal life in misery—death moral, and death physical, and death eternal. It was no easy matter for me to be thus compelled to embrace this view. The opposite had been instilled into my mind as the truth of God from earliest childhood; and in manhood as a minister of the Church of England I had taught it as such. I found it no easy matter, I can assure you, my dear brother, to give up a belief in the torment theory, when I found that it was equivalent to giving up the maintenance of a wife and family, and in a measure also the friendship of many with whom I took sweet counsel and walked to the house of God as dear friends. Thank God, my love of the truth as it is in Jesus, has enabled me to make the sacrifice of all, and take my stand on the promises of our heavenly Father. In his good time and pleasure he will provide and make all things work together for good.

I have recently read the controversy between Hudson and Cobb, and Adams and Cobb. The result of which has been to confirm me in the faith which I have adopted. To me it is evident that Universalism has, strictly speaking, neither Scriptural salvation nor curse. It cannot be said that Mr. Cobb's productions are 'multum in parvo.' I must confess that I have seldom met with more long winded special pleading to so little purpose. Let his first chapter in answer to Hudson's be witness to the truth of this assertion. There are doubtless many passages of Scripture quoted by destructionists in support of the doctrine of physical death that prove no such thing. We cannot be too careful not to quote Scripture at random—not to quote it in fact in support of any doctrine without knowing all its surroundings—the complete drift of the passage in which it is found. The expression 'death' is no doubt very frequently to be found in Scripture as expressive of moral and spiritual alienation from God, or a state of sin; but why, then, did such an expression as 'death' come to be used of such a thing? Is there any real analogy between alienation from God and physical death? I can see none. To me the answer to this question is simple. The law of association and the doctrine of prolepsis explain the matter. A state of sin unrepented of, unchanged, leads infallibly to death. The apostle speaks of the 'eternal judgment' not because the judgment shall continue forever, but because the effect of the sentence is eternal death. Our courts are called courts of justice because justice is done therein. The condemned criminal is said to be dead because that event is certain. His sentence infallibly leads to it. On this ground alone, it appears to me, can alienation from God or a state of sin be called 'death.' I should like to hear another explanation if any can be given.

I was very much struck with Mr. Cobb's treatment of the 27th verse of the 9th of Hebrews. It appeared to me that few men would have risked their honesty and scholarship in giving such an interpretation as he has given, but such as had some doctrine to support at all hazards. It is difficult to believe that the apostle would have the Hebrews understand by his expression, 'tois anthropois'—the Jewish Priesthood!! And then with regard to the force of the article which he notices—it is well known by every classical scholar that the article in such a case is GENERIC, and equivalent to 'all men.' So that the verse might be translated—'as it is appointed unto all men once to die.' His treatment of this verse is a fair sample of what I must denominate miserable special pleading. But I am writing a longer letter than I had intended; let me therefore draw it to a conclusion. I must bide my time and trust in God. I am no prophet, but I will venture for once to predict that many years will not roll away before the doctrine of 'no immortal life apart from Jesus Christ' will be believed and preached by hundreds within the bosom of the Church of England, from whence on account of which I have been expelled. May God keep me steadfast in the truth, whatever may betide me. My wife joins me in kindest regards to you and yours. Believe me to be, my dear Bro. Hastings, most faithfully yours in the Lord. L."

Our prayer is that God may bless our brother abundantly. It is no new thing for a man who has been blind all his days to be cast out of the synagogue just as soon as Jesus gives him sight, but then, one comfort is, the man has eyesight to walk by, and another is that Jesus goes about picking such outcasts up, and taking care of them. We trust that our brother will find increasing light at every step, and be enabled to give it to others as he has opportunity.

Seeing, brother, that you have lost your salary for the truth's sake, I think the Lord will take care of you. Men have ordained that they that preach tradition shall live of tradition. God has ordained that they who preach the gospel shall live of the GOSPEL. May God help you to preach the pure gospel, and if you cannot be a Churchman, you may be what is better, a CHRISTIAN. As such I commend you to the fatherly care of a promise-keeping God, and remain your brother in Christ,

Boston, May 1, '62. H. L. HASTINGS.

For the Crisis.

Hear Ye!

"Hear ye, and give ear, be not proud: for the Lord hath spoken. Give glory to the Lord your God, before he cause darkness, and before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and, while ye look for light, he turn it into the shadow of death, and make it gross darkness."—JER. 13: 15, 16

Here Jeremiah stands up as a man inspired of God, and exhorts the wicked Jews to repent, for the Lord hath spoken. God never destroys mankind without first giving them an opportunity of repentance; and then if they do not repent, he withdraws his Holy Spirit from them, and causes darkness to come upon them, and their feet stumble upon the dark mountain of sin, and while they look for light, God turns it into the shadow of death, and makes it gross darkness. "Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud." It appears, then, that no one can be proud and yet be a follower of Christ. In Mal. we read, "For the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Give glory then to the Lord your God, and repent before he cause darkness to encompass you, and before your feet stumble on the dark mountains, and you are lost in the shadow of death. A great portion of the people in this world are too proud to hearken unto God, lest they be humbled, and lose a few of their moth-eaten garments, or their hoarded silver and gold. Therefore God, knowing their hearts, commands them not to be proud, but hearken unto him, repent of their sins, and give glory to him, lest he cause darkness to come upon them. While they are looking for light from another source, God turns it into the shadow of death, and makes it gross darkness. They have lost all hopes of a future life. They have hearkened to the God of Baal, and lived luxuriously upon the things of this present life, and rolled sin as a sweet morsel under their tongue; while the awful warnings of the Almighty have rushed through their ears from day to day, and they have passed them by as but the whisper of winds. But the day of judgment dawns. Their deep despairing wails are hushed to all eternity. They have sunken into the dark and sullen stream of death's eternal night. O! may we who have hearkened unto God, and given ear to his glorious truth, ever sound to a sin-cursed world the salvation of God.

Southington, Ct. S. H.

☞ Do well, but don't boast of it, for that will lessen the commendation you might otherwise have deserved.

The Coming Kingdom.

MR. EDITOR:—I was exceedingly interested in the article on the "coming Kingdom," in the Witness of the 21st of February. No subject can be more deeply interesting than this to the true christian, and while we may differ as to the personal reign of Christ on earth, and deem it unwise to fix dates, yet it is not only our duty to watch the signs of the times, and see if they do not indicate the approach of that hour when the Son of man shall appear in his glory, with all his holy angels with him. Without, therefore, entering into the chronological deductions, let us look at the prophecies which in general terms describe the events immediately preceding the Second Advent, and compare them with the present state of the world.

If we refer to the Old Testament, in addition to what is said in the article referred to, of the "overturning" of the nations, it is written in Hag. 2: 7, "I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come." Now I am aware that this prophecy is generally applied to the first Advent of Christ, and primarily no doubt, it does refer to that; but St. Paul referring to it, in his Epistle to the Hebrews, seems also to apply it to the Second. "Whose voice then, he says, shook the earth, but now he hath promised, saying, "Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but heaven, and this word, yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things that cannot be shaken may remain." These words, therefore, seem to point to another shaking which is to precede the Second Coming, and this harmonizes with the Savior's own words, that his Advent should be preceded by great convulsions both in the moral and national world—the sea and waves roaring, distress of nations, and men's hearts failing them for fear, for the powers of the heaven shall be shaken. Such are some of the signs which he predicted. Have not the nations within the last few years been distressed?

Has it not seemed as if God had reached down from heaven, taken the nations of the earth in his hands and shaken them together? For several years past the nations of the old world have been dashing against each other like the waves of an angry sea, and now our own land is convulsed, and at this present moment scarcely a nation on the globe is in a quiescent state.

The New York Times has had within the last few days an article headed "The Great Tribulation in Europe," in which the writer shows that the Old World is on the eve of the most tremendous convulsions that ever occurred. What do these things mean? It is true, that wars and rumors of wars are no new thing. But were the nations of the earth ever so generally, so universally shaken as now?

Again, to the prophet Daniel several particulars were revealed which were to characterize the last days. One was that there should be a time of trial. Another that many should run to and fro. A third that knowledge should be increased, and finally that the wicked should do wickedly, and the wise should understand. Now, I suppose it will be generally admitted that whatever phase of society, or whatever development of knowledge, or wickedness, which the prophets predict, must be regarded as extraordinary. If, for example, the increase of knowledge is to characterize the last days, it is some extraordinary increase—knowledge, probably connected with some remarkable invention or discovery. So in regard to locomotion, or the "running to and fro." What then are the characteristics of this age in these respects?

Do we not all admit that if a man even twenty years ago had predicted the improvements and inventions which we now see, he would have been considered a fit subject for an Insane Asylum? Consider the speed with which we travel. See also, the multitudes on the move, think of the distances passed over in a single day. A man can now go over to Europe and back and scarcely be missed in the community where he lives. A boy of a dozen years can have seen more of the world than his grandfather in his life time. If, in fact, human life is to be measured by what is seen, heard, known and experienced, we live longer now than Methusalah did. The increase of knowledge is even more wonderful than the improvement of locomotion.

Progress has been the watchword of this generation. Discovery and invention, in every department of art and science, have been the order of the day. Books are multiplied ad infinitum. Papers, periodicals, pamphlets, sermons, essays, and addresses are fairly showered upon the land. It is said, upon good authority, that one printing press in the city of New York, prints in one day what would require for the human hand to write, a period of ten thousand years. But the climax of invention for the spread of knowledge or intelligence is the telegraph. What a wonder is this! Intelligence carried thousands of miles away in a second of time, borne, in fact, upon the lightning's wing. And now the electric wires belt the Continent, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, conveying messages with such velocity that time itself seems outrun, and a man in California receives his tidings apparently before they are sent. An interesting thought connected with this subject, is that the Hebrew word translated in Daniel's prophecy "increased," may be rendered, shooting forth as the lightnings. In view of this, some have supposed that the telegraph was really intended. Whether this is so or not, yet it is sufficiently wonderful to claim a place in prophecy. But we have become so accustomed to marvels that we have almost ceased to wonder at anything, no matter how startling or marvellous. Does it not, however, seem as if within the last few years the mind had been brought up to the most intense activity, and that man in wresting the very elements to do his bidding, almost rivalled Omnipotent power? We believe, in fact, that it is conceded by all writers upon the subject, that the last half century, in invention, discoveries and facilities for the increase and dissemination of knowledge, throws all previous periods entirely in the shade. At all events they are most extraordinary, and may well be considered as fully meeting the prophecy of Daniel.

Is it not, to say the least, a thought worthy of the most serious reflection, that two marked characteristics of the last days, viz., in the running to and fro, and the increase, or diffusion of knowledge, should be so marvellously fulfilled at this present day and hour? But look now at the predictions of the Apostles, particularly St. Paul. "In the last days," he says, writing to Timothy, "perilous times shall come; men shall be lovers of themselves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, without natural affection, false accusers, truce-breakers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those who are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." Now, we think it easy to show that each particular here is remarkably fulfilled, but we rather direct the attention to some of the most prominent and startling. "Traitors!" was there ever such a gigantic system of treason on this earth as we now see? and without the approach to an adequate cause. There is no parallel to it on the pages of the world's history. What a spectacle to men and angels and God! Whole communities rising up in rebellion against one of the freest, most tolerant governments that ever existed! Men high in power, plotting its overthrow, violating the most solemn oaths, and breaking the most solemn covenants. Treason entering halls of legislation, into the highest places of trust and power, into the Army, the Navy, here, there, everywhere, like a deadly miasma, poisoning the national atmosphere, and spreading throughout the land desolation, ruin and death. This whole thing, too, has been conceived, matured and accomplished by lies, by false accusations and slanders. Even now the most stupendous falsehoods are told of the North, in short, the rebellion is kept alive by "false accusers," both at home and abroad. A writer in the New York Times styles this an "Age of mendacity." "Was there ever seen," he says, "since the world began, so monstrous a crop of falsehood as has sprung up out of this present rebellion? It would seem as if the father of lies himself had come down in power, finding his especial home, of course, in that region where the 'sum of all villanies' has brought forth its appropriate yield of treason and other crimes, but not by any means confining his operations to that quarter." This is but a sample of the whole article, and we have quoted it as valuable evidence from a secular paper in confirmation of prophetic fulfillment in this particular.

Now, we are aware that these sins are not new, that treason and slandering have been common in all ages; but are not the present forms of them the most extraordinary the world ever saw? So, too, we are sensible that this is a local strife, and that we are a small part of the world. Yet was there ever a local strife so far-reaching in its effects as this? Has not Europe been shaken by this struggle? Nay, more, have not the throes of this moral and political earthquake been felt almost throughout the whole world?

Were we not in danger of drawing out this communication to a tedious length, we would proceed to speak particularly of the other characteristics named by the Apostle. But as it is, we can only glance at them. Covetousness! What an age for

Riches.

Rich is he whose treasure lieth
In the treasure-house above!
Happy he who overcometh
Evil by the works of love!

If but treasure there is garnished,
Whatsoever may befal,
We may rest with strong assurance
God at length will give us all.

He is rich in grace and glory,
And in all that's great and good;
All He gives will not impoverish,
Though it be a perfect flood!

For his sources are eternal,
Whence he draws for each and all,
And his goodness always blendeth
With the needy's humble call.

Always hearing, always granting
All requests which tend to good,
Nor withholding his compassion,
Pledging us his sacred word.

Truth.

The heading of this article is a very small word; but the intrinsic worth and influence of that which it expresses, is far beyond all human calculation. We are advised in the Book of books to "buy the truth and sell it not." Such advice, when followed, must be productive of good results; for when we become the possessors of that which is really true, no matter at what cost, it is a bargain that we need never regret. The least particle of truth is worth more than error piled mountains high. Truth is of God, the fountain of all goodness; error is of the Devil, and opposed to all that is godly. Truth is immortal, and must endure as long as its author lives; error must die, and be blotted out of the fair universe of God. Truth is a blessing to all that embrace it; error is a curse to all that come under its influence, and destructive of the best interests of humanity. Truth, in whatever light we view it, is exceedingly glorious, and worthy of all acceptation; error, when contrasted with truth, appears inexpressibly loathsome and contemptible, and unworthy to be cherished by intelligent beings.

Thrones and titles must crumble into dust, and all the kingdoms of this world must fall before the hand of time. Worldly wisdom will waste away, and its most noted philosophers must die and be forgotten; still truth will ever remain unspotted and secure. The heavens and earth must pass away, when the wrath of Jehovah shall at last deluge all earthly grandeur in a flood of fire, that shall destroy all perishable things. Then error shall find its grave, from which no angelic trump can ever awaken it; but truth shall wing its way above the fiery ordeal unharmed, and reign supreme amid the glorified hosts of those whom God shall bless with life and glory evermore. The truth never can be permanently overthrown, because it is held up by that Omnipotent being who created the world and sustains the universe by his unlimited power. Efforts have been made to put down truth, by overthrowing those individuals who were identified with it. If we commence back to righteous Abel, and read the entire history of prophets, and other saints of the Most High that were slain by sin's polluted hands, even down to Him who said, "I am the truth"; and then continue through the history of the martyrs who died for their faith in Jesus, and even to the present time those whose names are cast out as evil for the truth's sake,—we find throughout the entire history that mighty efforts have been made to prop up error, and substitute the false for that which is true; but all such efforts have been and must be fruitless.

"Truth crushed to earth must rise again;
The eternal years of God are hers;
While error wounded writhes in pain,
And dies amid her worshipers."

In buying truth, we may have to part with all that we have previously considered desirable. We shall be in a small minority in this present state; the applause of men will be withheld from us; we may have to bid adieu to our former associates; the finger of scorn may be pointed at us by an ungodly world, and a formal, time-serving church; we may be turned out of the synagogue, as others have been before us; and it may affect our pockets somewhat, as riches are frequently accumulated by false statements: still, what we lose sinks into utter insignificance in comparison to what we gain. It is like giving up sand for pearls, and rags for diamonds. We give up the fading things of earth, that we may possess eternal and glorious realities. We let go the fellowship of wicked men, and become allied to God, angels, and the holy and faithful of all ages. It is certainly a very profitable exchange. Iniquity may seem to prosper for a time, but in the end truth will triumph over pride, hypocrisy, deceit, sarcasm, guile, and every evil influence; and those that continually abide in the truth shall be abundantly satisfied when they are called to possess an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away.

The great question with us who prefer to walk in the footsteps of Him who was "the way, the truth, and the life," should not be, What is the most popular doctrine? or, What saith the creed? or, What can be the easiest lived out? but simply, What is the truth? And after ascertaining the true position, we should walk therein, if we have to go alone. The Lord help us, one and all, to "buy the truth and sell it not."

The Seventh Seal.

The opening of the seals was to show the "things which must be hereafter" (Rev. 4:1); not the symbol merely, but the "things" themselves. Therefore, in the Revelation, as in all other prophecies, the "things" symbolized are always literal. The symbolical beasts, or creatures, represented by the lion, calf, face of a man, and the eagle, symbolize the church as expressed in 5:9, where they are represented as singing "a new song, saying, . . . Thou (the Lamb) has redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation." This point is then settled, a literal people redeemed by literal blood, and symbolized by four living creatures.

The first seal is opened, and the "white horse" appears. Says Barnes:—"In general, then, the horse would properly symbolize war. . . . The particular character or complexion of the event—as peaceful or warlike—is denoted by the color." Thus the bow, the crown, and the going forth conquering and to conquer, are literal events; the introduction, or commencement of "things" which must be hereafter. Mr. Barnes, in his "Notes," assigns this period from the year 96 to 180, or from Nerva to the accession of Commodus. "A. D. 98, Trajan, a great general, and popular emperor; under him the empire attains its greatest extent,"—"conquering and to conquer."

The second seal is opened, and the red horse appears,—the character of the government is changed—peace is taken from the earth. Again says Mr. Barnes, "As the white horse denoted prosperity, triumph and happiness, so this (the red horse) would denote carnage, discord, bloodshed." And what period could better denote such a state than from the accession of Commodus to the days of Domitian. Peace was literally taken from the earth. See Gibbon's Dec. and Fall, vol. i, pp. 110–197.

The third seal is opened, and the black horse appears. "Famine, pestilence, oppression . . . might be denoted by the color of the horse."—Barnes. "A measure of wheat for a penny"—thereby raising the price of grain eight times higher than usual,—showed the literal fulfillment of this prophecy from the third to the fifth century, at times, throughout the Roman empire. I have the facts to show that the things here spoken of did occur at that time, as never before, and that bread stuffs were literally weighed out for the people, the scarcity was so great.

The fourth seal is opened, and the pale horse appears, and a literal killing with sword, with hunger, with death, and with the beasts of the field was accomplished by Papal Rome.

The fifth seal is opened, and a literal cry goes up from the fires of Smithfield and other altars,—"How long, O Lord!"

The sixth seal is opened, and the literal signs in the heavens appear, and "this generation" that has seen them will not "pass away," blessed be God, till the angels come to gather the "golden sheaves" into the garner of the Lord. This brings us down to "the great day of his wrath."

The seventh seal is opened. The sealing in the seventh chapter is an event that occurs "after the opening of the sixth seal, and before the opening of the seventh."—Barnes. It is a simple explanation to show the safety of the church in the impending dangers, and events which will occur under the seventh seal or in "the great day of his wrath." There was silence in heaven. The calm before the tempest. "In view of these apprehended terrors, the inhabitants of heaven are represented as standing in awful silence, as if anticipating and apprehending what was to occur."—Barnes.

The seven angels with their trumpets appear, and another angel having a golden censer; incense is offered with the prayers of all saints. Here the united cry (day and night) comes up before the throne. The censer is filled with fire and cast into the earth. This is an indication that prayer no longer avails; "or as if prayer were now in vain."—Barnes. He that is holy will be holy still, and he that is filthy will be filthy still. "The successive opening of seals disclosing most important events—increasing in interest as each new one was opened; the course of events which seemed to be leading to the consummation of all things, arrested after the opening of the sixth seal; and now the last in the series to be opened disclosing what the affairs of the world would be at the consummation of all things."—Barnes.

The events, or "things," under the seventh seal, belong to that time, as much as the signs belong to the sixth seal; and we may not place them elsewhere without violating every principle of prophetic interpretation. The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they (the hail, fire, etc.,) were cast upon the earth, and the effect will be that literal trees and grass are burnt up.

The second angel sounds, the third part of the sea becomes blood, and the third part of the creatures in the sea, that had life, died; and the third part of the ships were destroyed. As truly literal as the plagues of Egypt; and all to be accomplished in the great day of his wrath. No wonder the exclamation, "Who shall be able to stand?" The sounding of the trumpets, and the pouring out of the vials, will occupy three and a half years, they having reference to the same time and "things." Thus—

TRUMPETS.

The first trumpet sounds, and hail, fire and blood follow.
2d trump—Sea becomes blood.
3d " Waters bitter.
4th " Sun smitten.
5th " Torment five months.
6th " Angels loosed in the Euphrates.
7th " The kingdom of God comes.

VIALS.

The first vial is poured, and grievous sores ensue.
2d Vial.—Sea as the blood of a dead man.
3d " Waters become blood.
4th " Sun scorches with heat.
5th " Gnawed their tongues for pain.
6th " Euphrates dried up.
7th " It is done.

Now as the sealing is after the opening of the sixth, and before the opening of the seventh seal, it follows that the trumpets are yet future; for at the sounding of the fifth trumpet, the sealed ones only are exempt from "hurt." The time of the sounding of the fifth and sixth trumpets, being literal, will make up their share of the three and a half years, during which the wrath of God will be made manifest upon the inhabitants of earth, till the slain of the Lord shall be from one end of the earth to the other, neither lamented, gathered, or buried; in view of which, I sing,

"Let me go! ere the hopes of the wicked shall fall,
Ere cheeks that have bloomed shall wax deathly and pale;
Yes, hide me, dear Savior, from earth's final groan,
Let me go with the dear ones—oh! let me go home!"

Suffer Patiently.

Are we willing to suffer in obscurity, become little and unknown, if so we may most honor Christ? This is a question I have meditated upon a good deal recently. I am sure I never knew how much meaning was contained in those two simple words—suffer patiently! To me they have an uncommon sweetness; for they were spoken in a kind, Christ-like way by one of God's children at a time when all was dark and dreary; and it seemed for the time I had forgotten where to look for light. I was looking at my own unworthiness, and my trials seemed like mountains before me. I had been in very trying circumstances for a long time previous to this; and when I could almost look through the dark clouds and discern the silvery lining, another one appeared, heavier, darker, and more threatening, and I was groping about in the darkness and gloom, not knowing where to look for my Lord. Surely it seemed the Lord had hid himself from me, and I was indeed left alone. In the midst of all these mental difficulties I was prostrated upon a bed of sickness, at a time when it seemed to be impossible for me to be passive and say, "Thy will, O Lord, not mine." But Father was near watching over me, and sent one that had traveled through the same dark valley to encourage and cheer my despondent heart. I remarked, "I want to labor for God." "Yes," he replied, "you must work or you will die out." I looked up in utter astonishment. "What can I do?" He answered in a very gentle way, "Suffer patiently; that will be a more purifying work for you than any other at present." The idea had never before occurred to me that I could thus honor God.

There may be others that are tossed about upon the rough ocean, and perhaps they, too, often feel that every wave will upset their frail bark and they sink in despair. Look up! follow pilgrim. Let us delight to "suffer patiently" a little while longer, that we may come out of the furnace purified like pure gold, fitted and prepared to reign with Jesus in the kingdom of eternal rest,—a rest from all these innumerable trials and cares which seem now almost to overwhelm us. If we are only faithful a little longer, we shall soon know what it is to be free. O may God give us needed grace for every necessary trial, and withhold nothing that is essential to our purification and redemption. CARRIE.

ON THE DEATH OF SR. PERKINS, MARCH 3D, '62.

She'll soon come back, ye mourning ones,
Though ye have lain her low,
And now above her dreamless bed
Cold, wintry winds may blow.

She'll soon come back,—she only sleeps
Beneath a guarded sod;
For angels watch the slumbering saint
Whose life is hid in God.

She'll soon come back. Ah! dry those tears,
Behold the morning nigh;
Jesus shall come,—the dead shall live,—
The living never die.

She'll soon come back. O! power divine!
Thou God so good, so wise,
Help us, poor erring souls, to gain
The life that never dies. MARIA.

Letter from an Episcopal Minister.

The following letter from a minister of the Church of England in this country, will illustrate the spread of truth among various classes and in various directions:—

"21st April, 1862.

MY DEAR BRO. HASTINGS:—I received your very kind letter, as well as the packages of books, for which I am very much obliged to you. Your epistle to me was full of sympathy and christian kindness, both of which you will readily believe I greatly need under my present trying circumstances. I think I told you in my last letter that my salary had been withdrawn from me, because I had been compelled scripturally and conscientiously to believe and preach that 'the wages of sin is death'—not eternal life in torments. This change in my theological views has not been hastily brought about. The subject has occupied my mind more or less for some years past. The first book that drew my attention to the question of what the end of them shall be who obey not the gospel, was Locke's 'Reasonableness of Christianity,' a book well worthy of a careful perusal. Since then I have read a good deal on the subject; amongst other works, 'Whateley's Future State,' Geo. Storrs' Six Sermons,—but most of all I have read and studied carefully and prayerfully the inspired oracles of truth. The result has been that I have been compelled to embrace the doctrine that when 'sin is perfected it bringeth forth death'—not eternal life in misery—death moral, and death physical, and death eternal. It was no easy matter for me to be thus compelled to embrace this view. The opposite had been instilled into my mind as the truth of God from earliest childhood; and in manhood as a minister of the Church of England I had taught it as such. I found it no easy matter, I can assure you, my dear brother, to give up a belief in the torment theory, when I found that it was equivalent to giving up the maintenance of a wife and family, and in a measure also the friendship of many with whom I took sweet counsel and walked to the house of God as dear friends. Thank God, my love of the truth as it is in Jesus, has enabled me to make the sacrifice of all, and take my stand on the promises of our heavenly Father. In his good time and pleasure he will provide and make all things work together for good.

I have recently read the controversy between Hudson and Cobb, and Adams and Cobb. The result of which has been to confirm me in the faith which I have adopted. To me it is evident that Universalism has, strictly speaking, neither Scriptural salvation nor curse. It cannot be said that Mr. Cobb's productions are 'multum in parvo.' I must confess that I have seldom met with more long winded special pleading to so little purpose. Let his first chapter in answer to Hudson's be witness to the truth of this assertion. There are doubtless many passages of Scripture quoted by destructionists in support of the doctrine of physical death that prove no such thing. We cannot be too careful not to quote Scripture at random—not to quote it in fact in support of any doctrine without knowing all its surroundings—the complete drift of the passage in which it is found. The expression 'death' is no doubt very frequently to be found in Scripture as expressive of moral and spiritual alienation from God, or a state of sin; but why, then, did such an expression as 'death' come to be used of such a thing? Is there any real analogy between alienation from God and physical death? I can see none. To me the answer to this question is simple. The law of association and the doctrine of prolepsis explain the matter. A state of sin unrepented of, unchanged, leads infallibly to death. The apostle speaks of the 'eternal judgment' not because the judgment shall continue forever, but because the effect of the sentence is eternal death. Our courts are called courts of justice because justice is done therein. The condemned criminal is said to be dead because that event is certain. His sentence infallibly leads to it. On this ground alone, it appears to me, can alienation from God or a state of sin be called 'death.' I should like to hear another explanation if any can be given.

I was very much struck with Mr. Cobb's treatment of the 27th verse of the 9th of Hebrews. It appeared to me that few men would have risked their honesty and scholarship in giving such an interpretation as he has given, but such as had some doctrine to support at all hazards. It is difficult to believe that the apostle would have the Hebrews understand by his expression, 'tois anthropois'—the Jewish Priesthood!! And then with regard to the force of the article which he notices—it is well known by every classical scholar that the article in such a case is GENERIC, and equivalent to 'all men.' So that the verse might be translated—'as it is appointed unto all men once to die.' His treatment of this verse is a fair sample of what I must denominate miserable special pleading. But I am writing a longer letter than I had intended; let me therefore draw it to a conclusion. I must bide my time and trust in God. I am no prophet, but I will venture for once to predict that many years will not roll away before the doctrine of 'no immortal life apart from Jesus Christ' will be believed and preached by hundreds within the bosom of the Church of England, from whence on account of which I have been expelled. May God keep me steadfast in the truth, whatever may betide me. My wife joins me in kindest regards to you and yours. Believe me to be, my dear Bro. Hastings, most faithfully yours in the Lord. L."

Our prayer is that God may bless our brother abundantly. It is no new thing for a man who has been blind all his days to be cast out of the synagogue just as soon as Jesus gives him sight; but then, one comfort is, the man has eyesight to walk by, and another is that Jesus goes about picking such outcasts up, and taking care of them. We trust that our brother will find increasing light at every step, and be enabled to give it to others as he has opportunity.

Seeing, brother, that you have lost your salary for the truth's sake, I think the Lord will take care of you. Men have ordained that they that preach tradition shall live of tradition. God has ordained that they who preach the gospel shall live of the GOSPEL. May God help you to preach the pure gospel, and if you cannot be a Churchman, you may be what is better, a CHRISTIAN. As such I commend you to the fatherly care of a promise-keeping God, and remain your brother in Christ,

Boston, May 1, '62. H. L. HASTINGS.

Hear Ye!

"Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud: for the Lord hath spoken. Give glory to the Lord your God, before he cause darkness, and before your feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and, while ye look for light, he turn it into the shadow of death, and make it gross darkness."—JER. 13: 15, 16.

Here Jeremiah stands up as a man inspired of God, and exhorts the wicked Jews to repent, for the Lord hath spoken. God never destroys mankind without first giving them an opportunity of repentance; and then if they do not repent, he withdraws his Holy Spirit from them, and causes darkness to come upon them, and their feet stumble upon the dark mountain of sin; and while they look for light, God turns it into the shadow of death, and makes it gross darkness. "Hear ye, and give ear; be not proud." It appears, then, that no one can be proud and yet be a follower of Christ. In Mal. we read, "For the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch." Give glory then to the Lord your God, and repent before he cause darkness to encompass you, and before your feet stumble on the dark mountains, and you are lost in the shadow of death. A great portion of the people in this world are too proud to hearken unto God, lest they be humbled, and lose a few of their moth-eaten garments, or their hoarded silver and gold. Therefore God, knowing their hearts, commands them not to be proud, but hearken unto him, repent of their sins, and give glory to him, lest he cause darkness to come upon them. While they are looking for light from another source, God turns it into the shadow of death, and makes it gross darkness. They have lost all hopes of a future life. They have hearkened to the God of Baal, and lived luxuriously upon the things of this present life, and rolled sin as a sweet morsel under their tongue; while the awful warnings of the Almighty have rushed through their ears from day to day, and they have passed them by as but the whisper of winds. But the day of judgment dawns. Their deep despairing wails are hushed to all eternity. They have sunken into the dark and sullen stream of death's eternal night. O! may we who have hearkened unto God, and given ear to his glorious truth, ever sound to a sin-cursed world the salvation of God.

Southington, Ct. A. H.

The Coming Kingdom.

MR. EDITOR:—I was exceedingly interested in the article on the "coming Kingdom," in the Witness of the 21st of February. No subject can be more deeply interesting than this to the true christian, and while we may differ as to the personal reign of Christ on earth, and deem it unwise to fix dates, yet it is not only our duty to watch the signs of the times, and see if they do not indicate the approach of that hour when the Son of man shall appear in his glory, with all his holy angels with him. Without, therefore, entering into the chronological deductions, let us look at the prophecies which in general terms describe the events immediately preceding the Second Advent, and compare them with the present state of the world.

If we refer to the Old Testament, in addition to what is said in the article referred to, of the "overturning" of the nations, it is written in Hag. 2: 7, "I will shake all nations, and the desire of all nations shall come." Now I am aware that this prophecy is generally applied to the first Advent of Christ, and primarily no doubt, it does refer to that; but St. Paul referring to it, in his Epistle to the Hebrews, seems also to apply it to the Second. "Whose voice then, he says, shook the earth, but now he hath promised, saying, 'Yet once more I shake not the earth only, but heaven, and this word, yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things that cannot be shaken may remain." Those words, therefore, seem to point to another shaking which is to precede the Second Coming, and this harmonizes with the Savior's own words, that his Advent should be preceded by great convulsions both in the moral and national world—the sea and waves roaring, distress of nations, and men's hearts failing them for fear, for the powers of the heaven shall be shaken. Such are some of the signs which he predicted. Have not the nations within the last few years been distressed?

Has it not seemed as if God had reached down from heaven, taken the nations of the earth in his hands and shaken them together? For several years past the nations of the old world have been dashing against each other like the waves of an angry sea, and now our own land is convulsed, and at this present moment scarcely a nation on the globe is in a quiescent state.

The New York Times has had within the last few days an article headed "The Great Tribulation in Europe," in which the writer shows that the Old World is on the eve of the most tremendous convulsions that ever occurred. What do these things mean? It is true, that wars and rumors of wars are no new thing. But were the nations of the earth ever so generally, so universally shaken as now?

Again, to the prophet Daniel several particulars were revealed which were to characterize the last days. One was that there should be a time of trial. Another that many should run to and fro. A third that knowledge should be increased, and finally that the wicked should do wickedly, and the wise should understand. Now, I suppose it will be generally admitted that whatever phase of society, or whatever development of knowledge, or wickedness, which the prophets predict, must be regarded as extraordinary. If, for example, the increase of knowledge is to characterize the last days, it is some extraordinary increase—knowledge, probably connected with some remarkable invention or discovery. So in regard to locomotion, or the "running to and fro." What then are the characteristics of this age in these respects?

Do we not all admit that if a man even twenty years ago had predicted the improvements and inventions which we now see, he would have been considered a fit subject for an Insane Asylum? Consider the speed with which we travel. See also, the multitudes on the move, think of the distances passed over in a single day. A man can now go over to Europe and back and scarcely be missed in the community where he lives. A boy of a dozen years can have seen more of the world than his grandfather in his life time. If, in fact, human life is to be measured by what is seen, heard, known and experienced, we live longer now than Methusalah did. The increase of knowledge is even more wonderful than the improvement of locomotion.

Progress has been the watchword of this generation. Discovery and invention, in every department of art and science, have been the order of the day. Books are multiplied ad infinitum. Papers, periodicals, pamphlets, sermons, essays, and addresses are fairly showered upon the land. It is said, upon good authority, that one printing press in the city of New York, prints in one day what would require for the human hand to write, a period of ten thousand years. But the climax of invention for the spread of knowledge or intelligence is the telegraph. What a wonder is this! Intelligence carried thousands of miles away in a second of time, borne, in fact, upon the lightning's wing. And now the electric wires belt the Continent, stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, conveying messages with such velocity that time itself seems outrun, and a man in California receives his tidings apparently before they are sent. An interesting thought connected with this subject, is that the Hebrew word translated in Daniel's prophecy "increased," may be rendered, shooting forth as the lightnings. In view of this, some have supposed that the telegraph was really intended. Whether this is so or not, yet it is sufficiently wonderful to claim a place in prophecy. But we have become so accustomed to marvels that we have almost ceased to wonder at anything, no matter how startling or marvellous. Does it not, however, seem as if within the last few years the mind had been brought up to the most intense activity, and that man in wresting the very elements to do his bidding, almost rivalled Omnipotent power? We believe, in fact, that it is conceded by all writers upon the subject, that the last half century, in invention, discoveries and facilities for the increase and dissemination of knowledge, throws all previous periods entirely in the shade. At all events they are most extraordinary, and may well be considered as fully meeting the prophecy of Daniel.

Is it not, to say the least, a thought worthy of the most serious reflection, that two marked characteristics of the last days, viz., in the running to and fro, and the increase, or diffusion of knowledge, should be so marvellously fulfilled at this present day and hour? But look now at the predictions of the Apostles, particularly St. Paul. "In the last days," he says, writing to Timothy, "perilous times shall come; men shall be lovers of themselves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, without natural affection, false accusers, truce-breakers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those who are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." Now, we think it easy to show that each particular here is remarkably fulfilled, but we rather direct the attention to some of the most prominent and startling. "Traitors!" was there ever such a gigantic system of treason on this earth as we now see? and without the approach to an adequate cause. There is no parallel to it on the pages of the world's history. What a spectacle to men and angels and God! Whole communities rising up in rebellion against one of the freest, most tolerant governments that ever existed! Men high in power, plotting its overthrow, violating the most solemn oaths, and breaking the most solemn covenants. Treason entering halls of legislation, into the highest places of trust and power, into the Army, the Navy, here, there, everywhere, like a deadly miasma, poisoning the national atmosphere, and spreading throughout the land desolation, ruin and death. This whole thing, too, has been conceived, matured and accomplished by lies, by false accusations and slanders. Even now the most stupendous falsehoods are told of the North, in short, the rebellion is kept alive by "false accusers," both at home and abroad. A writer in the New York Times styles this an "Age of mendacity." "Was there ever seen," he says, "since the world began, so monstrous a crop of falsehood as has sprung up out of this present rebellion? It would seem as if the father of lies himself had come down in power, finding his especial home, of course, in that region where the 'sum of all villanies' has brought forth its appropriate yield of treason and other crimes, but not by any means confining his operations to that quarter." This is but a sample of the whole article, and we have quoted it as valuable evidence from a secular paper in confirmation of prophetic fulfillment in this particular.

Now, we are aware that these sins are not new, that treason and slandering have been common in all ages; but are not the present forms of them the most extraordinary the world ever saw? So, too, we are sensible that this is a local strife, and that we are a small part of the world. Yet was there ever a local strife so far-reaching in its effects as this? Has not Europe been shaken by this struggle? Nay, more, have not the throes of this moral and political earthquake been felt almost throughout the whole world?

Were we not in danger of drawing out this communication to a tedious length, we would proceed to speak particularly of the other characteristics named by the Apostle. But as it is, we can only glance at them. Covetousness! What an age for gain; what insane haste do we see for riches. Boasting! Hardly less prominent is this than lying. Disobedience to parents! Has not insubordination on the part of the young to parental authority been for the past few years the theme of almost every minister and teacher? Lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God! How few christians even will forego a pleasure for the sake of religious duties, to attend a religious meeting or the place of worship! Having a form of godliness, yet denying the power! Do we not mourn over the present apathy of the church? Do we not see little evidence of real earnest piety? We might even go farther and find a confirmation in the Apostle's words of the "leading captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts," for scarcely has the world ever seen woman so bold, so brazen-faced and defiant in aiding traitors in carrying out their iniquitous schemes, —she, in part, has been one of the chief instruments in this rebellion. If then we take all these things into consideration, together with the condition of the Papacy and Mohammedanism, can we fail to believe that the prophecies are rapidly culminating in their fulfillment, that the end is near, that the Judge standeth at the doors. We may not be able to set the precise time, it may be unwise to name the year, for mistakes are possible, and when they occur they increase the infidels and scoffers. A vast amount of injury was done by Mr. Miller, in this respect. Yet because he was mistaken, and the excitement caused by his views have repelled many from the subject, let us not blind our eyes to the truth.

It is remarkable that at the present time, the most intense interest exists in the Church of England on this subject, and that both there and in this country, some of the most eminent of our clergy are impressed with the feeling that the end of this dispensation is near. It is not, therefore, the wild speculations, or dreams of fanatics which point to the near approach of the Savior's Advent; but the conclusions of men eminent for piety and learning, of men mighty in Scriptures. Suppose they are right, what then? Should we as christians be appalled? Nay, should we not rather rejoice with exceeding great joy, because our redemption draweth near. St. Paul says, "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous Judge will give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing." Here, then, to love the appearing of Christ is a test of true discipleship; this only assures us that we shall have the reward, a crown incorruptible, and an inheritance undefiled and that fadeth not away.

Reader, do you love the appearing of Christ? Do you long for it? Would it be a joyful sight for you to see him, revealed from heaven in power and great glory, with all his holy angels with him? If otherwise, have you not reason to fear that you are none of his? In view, at least, of all these considerations, it becomes us to watch, to stand with our loins girt about with truth, with our lamps trimmed, and with oil in our vessels, ready to meet the Bridegroom at his coming. Let, then, the words of the glorious Savior himself fall solemnly on all ears, "What I say unto you, I say unto all, watch."—H.—Christian Witness & Church Advocate.

For the Crisis.

"Thy Speech betrayeth thee."

Of how many it can be said with truth at the present day that their speech betrayeth them. Not that it shows to those around that they are the disciples of Christ, but on the contrary that whereas they profess to be his followers, their speech shows but too plainly they have not been with him, neither have they known him; but by their daily walk and conversation they are shown to be of the world; therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them; of whom it may be said, that their "religion is vain" because they bridle not their tongue (James 1: 26). Of this class are they who by their own words shall be condemned,—who, if they speak with their mouth of the abundance of their heart, must have a heart that is far from being filled with the love of God or the things of God,—who know not the saying (and if they know it they heed it not), that for "every idle word that man shall speak, he shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

But, beloved, if we would please our heavenly Father, being the children of the Highest; if we would be heirs according to the promise, and joint heirs with Christ, we must order our conversation aright. We ought so to speak and so to do as those who shall be judged by the perfect law of liberty. For the time hastens on when we must give an account to Him who stands ready to judge the quick and dead at his appearing and kingdom. God help us to have our conversation in heaven, from whence we look for our blessed Lord. Are we all ready to meet him? Can we say, He is our God, and we have waited for him? Will he say to us at that day, "Well done! good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord?" God grant that it may be so with us at that day, and that we may be accounted worthy to stand before the Son of man at his coming. N. L. QUIMBY.

Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks: the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times. And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined. And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate."

"Seventy sevens of years are determined for thy people, and thy holy city, to restrain the apostasy, to finish sin offering, to made atonement for iniquity. Therefore, write thou and perceive, from the going out of the word that Jerusalem be builded again, till to Christ the Duke, shall be seven weeks of years, and two and sixty weeks of years; and again the streets shall be builded and walls in anguish of times; and after two and sixty weeks of years, Christ shall be slain, and it shall not be his people that shall deny him."—Wiclif.

The following is Cranmer's version of the 25th, 26th, and 27th verses:—"Understand this then, and mark it well, that from the time it shall be concluded to go and repair Jerusalem again, unto Christ, [or the anointed,] Prince, there shall be seven weeks, and then shall the streets and walls be builded again, sixty-two weeks, but with hard, troublous times. After these sixty-two weeks shall Christ be slain, and they shall have no pleasure in him. Then shall there come a people with a prince and destroy the city and sanctuary, and his end shall come as a water flood; but the desolation shall continue till the end of the battle. He shall make a strong bond with many for the space of a week, and when the week is half gone, he shall put down the slain and meat offering. But go thou thy way till the end be: for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days."—Common Version.

"And from the time forth that the daily offering shall be put down, and the abominable desolation set up, there shall be 1290 days. And well is him that waiteth and cometh to the 1335 days. Go thou thy way now, till it be ended. Take thy rest, and bide thy lot till the days have an end."—Cranmer.

Blasphemers.

When we arrive near the end of the present dispensation, and approach the time of the coming of Christ, Paul informs us that men will be "blasphemers." From the connection, it appears that professors of religion will help fulfill the prophecy. When we look over nominal Christendom, we are pained to see the amount of blasphemy that prevails, and the indifference of the people in relation to its manifestation.

A blasphemer is "one who speaks of God, or the Holy Spirit, in impious, or irreverent terms." This is so common at the present day, we hardly need to stop to introduce proof of its prevalence. Says Robert Atkins, a distinguished minister of Liverpoool, England:—"Apostasy, apostasy, APOSTASY, is engraven on the very front of every church; and did they know it, and did they feel it, there might be hope; but, alas! they cry, 'We are rich, and increased in goods, and have need of nothing'; and that blasphemy is added to apostasy." How completely the foregoing description corresponds with the Bible account of "the last days." How like the times of Noah and Lot. But few seem to speak of God and his Spirit with any degree of reverence. It is said the Jews were accustomed to pause, in reading or speaking, before uttering the name of our Creator. Instead of reverencing his Holy Spirit, many deny its operations at the present day. If one happens to feel its influence, so as to cause him to shout aloud the praises of our Lord, he is told it is nothing but animal excitement; or, if the Spirit arouses the people to seek the Savior, producing a glorious revival of religion, we are gravely informed, by many professed christians, that it is only a "mesmeric influence" from the preacher. Thus the word and work of the Lord are blasphemed on every side, adding much to the perils of these last days.

Dear brethren in the ministry, let us contend earnestly "for the faith once delivered to the saints." Let us not be contented with a mere skeleton of religion,—a form,—but live and preach that which has in it the "power" of godliness; a christianity accompanied with the Holy Spirit to comfort, arouse, and strengthen; leading us to love our enemies, and live like our Savior. Let us do all we can to keep the children of the Lord from going into cold, dead formalism. Let us seek to be "filled with the Spirit," that we may be able to preach the word effectually. We must not expect our hearers to be more earnest and devotional than ourselves. May the Lord help us all to rise upon higher ground, and sound a faithful alarm to all the sleeping virgins. Let us be "ensamples to the flock" in every thing.—O.

Action of the Brain.

Modern developments in physiological science demonstrate that the brain is the organ of thought; or a machine for thinking; consequently, when the brain is injured, insanity is liable to follow; and when its action ceases, all thinking is at an end, till it acts again. The following facts, from the London (C. W.) News, illustrate this point:—

"Dr. Perquin, a French physician, has reported the case of a female, twenty-six years of age, who had lost by disease a large portion of her skull bone and dura mater, so that a corresponding portion of the brain was open to inspection. He says:—'When she was in a dreamless sleep her brain was motionless, and lay within the cranium. When her sleep was imperfect, and she was agitated by dreams, her brain moved and protruded without the cranium, forming cerebral hernia. In vivid dreams, reported as such by herself, the protusion was considerable; and when she was perfectly awake, especially if engaged in lively conversation, it was still greater. Nor did the protusion occur in jerks alternating with recessions, as if caused by the impulse of the arterial blood. It remained almost steady while conversation lasted."

If there is no thought in sound sleep, as claimed by Dr. John Mason Good, in his lectures before the Surry Institute, and the action of the brain is necessary to produce thought, then it will follow that the brain does not act in sound sleep, which point is proved by the foregoing facts. Query. Does the brain act more freely when the individual is in the sleep of death than when in the sleep of life? If the Bible taught that the dead are conscious, then it would contradict these facts, and true philosophy. But the holy Scriptures declare, "the dead know not any thing;" that "his thoughts perish" in the day "his breath goeth forth." This point is so plain to us, we wonder every one does not see it. Until they do, we think they cannot fully understand the plan of salvation, as laid down in the Bible. To us there is nothing more absurd than the doctrine that a part of a dead man is alive and thinking.—O.

The Roman Question.

The Roman question is assuming an important aspect. It is evident that the Italians are firmly resolved that the Pope shall yield up his temporal power; while he and the cardinals are equally determined to hold it; but it seems certain that the Pope will soon be compelled to bow to the popular voice, as that a dying miser cannot take his golden treasure with him, and use it when dead. The Papal civil power is evidently struck with inevitable death, with no hope of a resurrection to future glory and power, as in times past. MENE, MENE, TEKEL, UPHARSIN, is written upon the walls of the Vatican, and the modern Babylon must soon fall to rise no more.

Says a late writer:—

"The problem which at present is most difficult to solve, is the everlasting 'Roman Question.' This is not merely a military, but a political question. Were it simply a trial of arms between Sardinia and the little Papal kingdom, the Pope would soon be swept into the Tiber. But there is another party in the case, France—and not France alone, but all Catholic Europe. Whatever touches the Pope touches every Catholic nation. Hence the business of unsettling the Holy Father is full of delicacy and difficulty. Such a 'poor old body' has to be lifted out of his chair very gently. The King of Italy is very eager to help him, and his ministers and grand chamberlains stand ready to bow the feeble old man out of his premises with the greatest politeness. There is something sublime in the coolness with which this is proposed."

It is said, the Italian people will allow "no compromise;" but demand an unconditional surrender of temporal power on the part of the Pope. He is resolved not to yield an inch." Thus the matter stands. O.

A NEW THEORY.—In the Advent Herald of May 1st, 1862, the Editor remarks:—"We have often thought the moon may prove to be the great prison house of the lost from this planet. How that may be, eternity alone can reveal."—O.

My New Tract.

"The Second Advent at hand: or a summary of reasons for believing we may expect the speedy close of the present, and the ushering in of a new dispensation."

The manuscript of this tract is now in the hands of the publishing committee of the Christian Publication Society, who, we are informed, will put it to press shortly, when those who have already sent orders will receive prompt attention. Those who (without our solicitation) have sent us money for the tract, have our kindest thanks. We are most of all thankful to God that there are so many yet found among nominal Adventists who are awake to the subject of the Lord's coming. It is at most but a Tract—probably of twenty-four or thirty-two pages—and being written during fragmentary moments, and withal is of so summary a character—that it will doubtless fall far short of what might be reasonably desired.

But to my numerous friends among whom I have gone forth these twelve years and more proclaiming a crucified, risen, and soon coming Lord—extending from the Atlantic Ocean to beyond the Mississippi, and from the Canadas to the Southern States, (whose faces I shall no more see in the flesh,) I desire that you do me the favor to lay a package of these tracts on your tables as my standing testimony for the truth as it is in Christ. And though I cannot be carried by schism, and have no time to spend with "questions that gender strife," yet I desire to proclaim to all men, faith in Him who was "born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was dead and buried; the third day rose from the dead, and ascended into heaven; from thence he will come to judge the quick and the dead." The consummation of this faith is yet my consolation and hope of rejoicing. Dearly beloved brethren, let us pray God, that, in the dark hour of temptation, and in the day of judgment, our faith fail not. What is before us heaven only knows, but out of the darkness will shortly spring forth the dawn of an endless day. Let us then be faithful; let us be glad.

Orders for the Tract will hereafter be addressed to M. Grant, or H. L. Hastings, Boston.—M.

Biographical Sketches.—No. 7.

REV. WILLIAM MILLER.—Concluded.

Between the 16th and 26th of June 1842, he labored at Palmer, Mass., an account of which was published by a member of the Baptist Church in that place, in the Christian Reflector. The writer says:—"It is with gratitude to God that I am able to turn aside from the joyful scenes around me, to inform the friends in Zion what God hath wrought for us." After saying the Rev. William Miller had been invited to labor a little time with them, he continues: "The lectures were delivered in our meeting-house, which, however, would hold but a small part of the audience, it being estimated at five thousand; and notwithstanding prepossessions, prejudices, and the slanderous reports circulated about this man of God, the people gave heed to the word spoken, and seemed determined, to examine the Scriptures, to see if these things are so; and deep solemnity pervaded the vast assembly. The children of God were soon aroused to a sense of their duty; sinners were seen weeping, and heard to say, 'Pray for me!' The number increased, until one hundred, in an evening prayer-meeting, were seen to arise to be remembered in the prayers of the saints. Soon converts began to tell us what the Lord had done for them. Some Deists, some Universalists, and many of the thoughtless, of both middle aged and the youthful part of the community, have been brought to submit their hearts to God, and are now waiting for and hastening to the coming of the day of God. As to the character of the work, let me say, I have never seen a more thorough conviction of the total depravity and the utter helplessness of the sinner, and that, if saved, it must be by the sovereign grace of God, than has been manifest in all that have given a relation of their experience."

As another illustration of the effect of Mr. Miller's labors, we may cite attention to the following communication, that was published in the "Boston Investigator" (an infidel paper) of January, 1845:

"MR. EDITOR:—I was a warm supporter of the views of Abner Kneeland, attended his lectures and protracted dances, disbelieved in Divine Revelation and a future existence, and fully accorded with Mr. Kneeland's views of religion. Having read every work of note that I could obtain, and having heard many lectures opposed to God and the Bible, I considered myself prepared to overthrow the Christian faith, and feared no argument that could be brought from the Bible. With these feelings, I attended a full course of Mr. Miller's lectures. He gave his rules of interpretation, and pledged himself to prove his position. I approved of his rules,—to which I refer you,—and the result was, he established the fact that the Bible is what it purports to be—the Word of God—to my mind, beyond a doubt; and I have taken it as the man of my counsel. I notice your doubts of the truth of the statement in relation to hundreds of infidels being converted under the preaching of Mr. Miller. This may possibly be owing to your never having given Mr. Miller a candid and thorough hearing. He is a man mighty in the Scriptures, and has done terrible execution in the ranks of the 'King's enemies,' with the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God. I am personally acquainted with nearly one hundred, who held to similar views with Abner Kneeland, who were converted under the preaching of Mr. Miller; and we did not yield the point without a struggle, nor without due consideration. Each and every prop and refuge of infidelity and unbelief were taken away from us, and our sandy foundation was swept by the truth of the Almighty, as chaff is driven by the wind. Yet we parted with them much as a man parts with a diseased tooth. We tried to cure and keep it there, and when made to know that the root and foundation was rotten, it was painful to part with it, but we rejoiced and felt better after the operation, for there is a balm in Gilead—there is a Physician there.

Lansingburgh, N. Y., Jan., 1845."

His biographer* says, after a series of meetings held in the large hall of the Chinese Museum, Philadelphia:—"Probably more than a thousand persons arose to testify their faith in the truth of the advent near, and three or four hundred of the unconverted arose to request an interest in his prayers. Mr. Miller closed the services by a most feeling and appropriate prayer and benediction."

Mr. Miller first published his views through the "Vermont Telegraph," a Baptist paper. Shortly after he issued them in pamphlet form. Afterwards they were revised and published in several editions as Lectures on the Prophecies. A paper—"The Signs of the Times"—was devoted to the same views; and finally some fifteen others adopted and published his views. From the secular press there were various things published—statements as diverse as possible—concerning the man and his doctrines. But the secular press was not without its writers who were willing to deal fairly with him, notwithstanding the calumnies in circulation.

The "Countryman," after giving his views, said:—"The abstract of Mr. Miller's views, which we give on our fourth page, so far as we give it in this paper, is, and has been, according to what we have been able to ascertain, the professed belief of orthodox Christians, from the day of Christ's ascension into heaven until the present hour. Therefore they are not merely Mr. Miller's views, but the acknowledged views of the Christian Church, the received Bible doctrine; and if Bible doctrine, then they are the truth," etc.

The "Pittsburg (Pa.) Gazette" said:—"We do not concur with Mr. Miller in his interpretations of the prophecies; but we can see neither reason nor christianity in the unmerited reproach which is heaped upon him for propagating an honest opinion. And that he is honest we have no doubt. True, we think him in error, but believe he is honestly so. And suppose he does err in his views of prophecy, does that make him either a knave or a fool? Have not some of the greatest or best men who have lived since the days of the apostles erred in the same way? And who will say that all these, including Whitby, Bishop Newton, and others of equal celebrity, were monomaniacs, and driven by a pitiable or culpable frenzy to the adoption of their opinions? The truth is, as we apprehend, that many of those who are so indecorous and vituperative in their denunciations of Miller, are in fearful trepidation, lest the day being so near at hand, 'should overtake them unawares'; and hence, like cowardly boys in the dark, they make a great noise by way of keeping up their courage, and to frighten away the bugbears."

As an illustration of the manner in which he was esteemed in his own region, we have the following from a paper published in his own county—the "Sandy Hill Herald." "While we are not prepared to subscribe to the doctrine promulgated by this gentleman, we have been surprised at the means made use of by its opponents to put it down. Certainly all who have ever heard him lecture, or have read his works, must acknowledge that he is a sound reasoner, and, as such, is entitled to fair arguments from those who differ with him. Yet his opponents do not see fit to exert their reasoning powers, but content themselves by denouncing the old gentleman as a 'fanatic,' a 'liar,' 'deluded old fool,' 'speculator,' etc., etc. Mr. Miller is now, and has been for many years, a resident of this county, and as a citizen, a man, and a Christian, stands high in the estimation of all who know him; and we have been pained to hear the gray-headed, trembling old man denounced as a 'speculating knave,' etc., etc."

The "Lyon (Mass.) Record," after stating the prejudices entertained against "this good man," proceeds to say:—"No one can hear him five minutes without being convinced of his sincerity, and instructed by his reasoning and information. All acknowledge his lectures to be replete with useful and interesting matter. His knowledge of Scripture is very extensive and minute; that of the prophecies, especially, surprisingly familiar. His application of the prophecies to the great events which have taken place in the natural and moral world is such, generally, as to produce conviction of their truth, and gain the ready assent of his hearers. We have reason to believe that the preaching or lecturing of Mr. Miller has been productive of great and extensive good. Revivals have followed in his train. He has been heard with attention wherever he has been. . . . There is nothing very peculiar in the manner or appearance of Mr. Miller. Both are at least equal to the style and appearance of ministers in general. His gestures are easy and expressive, and his personal appearance every way decorous. His scripture explanations and illustrations are strikingly simple, natural, and forcible; and the great eagerness of the people to hear him has been manifested wherever he has preached."

The "Wesleyan Journal" (of Portland, Maine,) in giving some account of the man and his faith, adds:—"Mr. Miller is a great stickler for literal interpretations; never admitting the figurative, unless absolutely required to make correct sense, or meet the event which is intended to be pointed out. He doubtless believes, most unwaveringly, all he teaches to others. His lectures are interspersed with powerful admonitions to the wicked, and he handles Universalism with gloves of steel."

Although we have already extended our notice to a greater length than we at first intended, we should feel this sketch imperfect without the following description of his personal appearance, given by a friend during his visit in Philadelphia:—

"There is a kindness of soul, simplicity and power, peculiarly original, combined in his manner; and he is affable and attentive to all, without any affectation of superiority. He is of about medium stature, a little corpulent, and, in temperament a mixture of sanguine and nervous. His intellectual developments are unusually full, and we see in his head great benevolence and fulness, united with a lack of self-esteem. He is wanting in marvelousness, and is naturally sceptical. His countenance is full and round, while there is a peculiar expression in his blue eye of shrewdness and love. Although about sixty-two years of age, his hair is not gray, but of a light glossy auburn; his voice is full and distinct, and his pronunciation somewhat northern-antique. In his social relations he is gentle and affectionate, and insures the esteem of all with whom he mingles."

While laboring in Medford, Mass., (Feb. 1842,) "a friend"—says his biographer—"took him to a phrenologist in Boston, with whom he was himself acquainted, but who had no suspicion whose head he was about to examine. The phrenologist commenced by saying that the person under examination had a large, well-developed, and well-balanced head. While examining the moral and intellectual organs, he said to Mr. Miller's friend:

"'I tell you what it is, Mr. Milller could not easily make a convert of this man to his hair-brained theory. He has too much good sense.'

"Thus he proceeded, making comparisons between the head he was examining and the head of Mr. Miller, as he fancied it would be.

"'How I would like to examine Mr. Miller's head,' said he; 'I would give it one squeezing.'

"The phrenologist, knowing that the gentleman was a particular friend of Mr. Miller, spared no pains in going out of the way to make remarks upon him. Putting his hand on the organ of marvelousness, he said: 'There! I'll bet you anything that old Miller has got a bump on his head there as big as my fist'; at the same time doubling up his fist as an illustration.

"The others present laughed at the perfection of the joke, and he heartily joined them, supposing they were laughnig at his witticisms on Mr. Miller.

"'He laughed; 'twas well. The tale applied Soon made him laugh on t'other side.'

"He pronounced the head of the gentleman under examination the reverse, in every particular, of what he declared Mr. Miller's must be. When through, he made out his chart, and politely asked Mr. Miller his name.

"Mr. Miller said it was of no consequence about putting his name upon the chart, but the phrenologist insisted.

"'Very well,' said Mr. Miller, 'you may call it Miller, if you choose.'

"'Miller, Miller,' said he; 'what is your first name?'

"'They call me William Miller.'

"'What! the gentleman who is lecturing on the prophecies?'

"'Yes sir, the same.'

"At this the phrenologist settled back in his chair, the personation of astonishment and dismay, and spoke not a word while the company remained. His feelings may be imagined, more easily than described."

On the 5th of February (1844), Mr. Miller was making a tedious journey up Long Island Sound on board a steamer, when, "to while away the time," Mr. Fowler—the renowned phrenologist—gave a lecture, and afterward made several examinations blindfolded; while being a stranger to Mr. Miller, he said of him:—

"'This man has large benevolence. His object is to do his fellow-beings good. He has great firmness—is a modest man, open, frank, no hypocrite, good at figures, a man of great mental power, might make a noise in the world, has no personal enemies; if he has enemies, it is not because they know him, but on account of his opinions.'

"At the close of the examination his blindfold was removed, and he was introduced to Mr. Miller, to the no small amusement of the company."

Upon the passing of 1844, Mr. Miller was disappointed in not realizing "the cleansing of the sanctuary." But his mistake was frankly acknowledged, though he felt it was no reason why he should cease his expectations, or in any way be removed from his Christian faith.

In 1845, a small company of the Church of which he was a member called an ex-parte council, and passed resolutions with the intention of casting out Mr. Miller and a large majority of the church who were sympathizers with him in faith. And though—probably on account of his faith in the nearness of the advent—he did not see fit to make an appeal, yet this should not be laid to the charge of the Baptist Church at large, in whose confidence and fellowship Mr. Miller continued, with probably little exception, to the day of his death.

He departed this life, after a lingering illness, December 20th, 1849, in the 68th year of his age, strong in the faith he had enjoyed and preached in his life. Among his last expressions were—"Mighty to save!" "O, I long to be there!" "Victory! victory! shouting in death," etc.

For further particulars of the life and labors of this godly man, the reader is referred to his "Memoirs," by S. Bliss, to which we are chiefly indebted for the foregoing.—M.

☞ We do not desire to add to the calender of Saints' days, but we are happy to say to our friends that it was our privilege on the evening of the 19th to meet with the society and friends of the REV. J. V. HIMES, in observing the fifty-sixth anniversary of his birth-day. The gathering was at the vestry of his Chapel, Rev. A. Hale taking the lead in the exercises, in course of which he gave an address characterized by his usual clear style, and replete with interest. The friends of Bro. Himes will be glad to know that upon this occasion he was in excellent health and as full of indomitable courage as ever. We hope a more formal notice will be presented to our readers hereafter.—M.

HUMAN DESTINY. A Critique on Universalism. By C. F. Hudson. Boston and Cambridge: J. Munroe & Co. 12mo. pp. 147.

An elaborate but very condensed argument, carefully logical in form, for the doctrine of the final annihilation of the wicked, directed chiefly against the Universalists and Restorationists. It contains much matter of interest to those thinkers—more numerous than is commonly supposed—who from time to time consider this phase of the infinitely vast, weighty, and oppressive question of Hereafter.—From the Independent of April 3d.

Correspondence.

From Alex. McClure.

DEAR BRO.:—I am keeping this day by myself in my room to pray for poor sinners; and while I abstain from temporal food, I feast on hidden manna. Glory to God! When I think my Lord is coming soon, I rejoice; but oh! the lifeless and dead church—a guilty, godless world. O! if God would save some in this wicked place! For this I labor.

I hope my dear brethren and sisters who are looking and longing for home will see, and feel the need of more than form. Bear each other's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ. Some have been here who say power is in the form, and no power or Spirit separate from the word. I love the word, but my heavenly Father has given me his Holy Spirit, which causes me to love his word, crying, Abba, Father. This I know; and I know also by the light of truth there will be a resurrection both of the just and unjust. Many of my brethren and sisters, whose epistles I love to read, I shall not see this side of the day of God, but hope to meet you and them on Canaan's happy shore. I have been a constant believer in the doctrines connected with the Advent as taught in the Scriptures and reiterated through the Crisis, with the exception of the coming age, in which I believe with millenarians. I long for the perfect day. Then we shall know as we are known.

Meadville, Pa.

From A. S. McEwin.

Bro. Grant:—It seems there are some persons out of the Advent ranks who are thinking these things may be true after all. I was reminded of this while reading an Editorial in the American Baptist a few weeks since. In that the Editor says:—

"The more we reflect on the events passing around us, the more certain are we that this struggle, if not the commencement of the prophesied battle of Armageddon, is at least the commencement of a world's crisis."

Truly we are living in eventful times; but in the midst of all this sorrow and sin, it is comforting to think the Savior may soon come, even in our day, and put an end to all this strife. May the Lord help us to pray earnestly and understandingly—"Thy kingdom come."

Obituary Notices.

Died, in West Alton, N. H., April 8th, 1862, Mr. Ezekiel Flanders, aged ninety-four years and six months.

Grandfather (for such relation he was to the writer) was born in Amesbury, Mass., Oct. 10th, 1767. His father soon after moved with him to Alton, N. H., where he spent his early days. He remembered distinctly the memorable dark day of May 17th, 1780, being in his thirteenth year. He moved to West Alton in 1793, being one of the first settlers in this place. He experienced religion in 1801, and joined the Freewill Baptists, with which denomination he remained till his death. He has been a man of much prayer, and a constant reader of the Scriptures, and was able up to the day previous to his death to read without the aid of glasses. He retained his mental powers remarkably to the last. He retired on the evening of the 7th in his usual health. Some time past the middle of the night he was heard by the family engaged in prayer. When they arose in the morning he was sleeping the sleep of death, no more to awake till the heavens be no more; when we expect to meet him in the better country, that is an heavenly, where death can never enter.

The funeral services were held at the chapel, and an interesting discourse delivered by Eld. John Knowles, from Ps. 73. 25, 26, after which we laid him down to rest till the trump of God shall sound, and the dead be raised incorruptible. E. Flanders, Jr.

Died, in Earlville, Ill., March 13th, Bro. Davidson, aged sixty-two.

Also, April 2nd, his son Bascom, aged eighteen.

The father has been a consistent believer in the views held by us for a number of years. He formerly was connected with the Congregational church, but after hearing the truth in regard to the coming of Jesus, he embraced it, was baptized, united with the church, and was waiting for the Master's return when death came. He sleeps in Jesus. We expect to see him on the resurrection morning, robed in immortality.

His son, with the other youth of our land, went forth to fight for his country. It is supposed some milk he drank was poisoned. He was stricken down and returned home to die. He often called the brethren in to pray with him, and gave good evidence of his acceptance with God. He belonged to Colonel Dickey's 4th Illinois cavalry. When wars and tumults are over, we hope to meet him in the better land. May the Lord comfort the mourning heart.

Sermon by the writer, from Rev. 21: 4, assisted by Bro. Maley and Bro. Vsticks, the Congregational minister.

H. G. McCulloch.

Died, in Gilford, N. H., April 1st, 1862, Bro. Samuel Blaisdell, aged seventy-four years.

Bro. B. experienced religion some fifty years ago, and joined the Freewill Baptists, with whom he remained until 1852, when he became identified with the Adventists, and soon after, with a few others, established a meeting at our present house of worship at West Alton. Since, through all the changes and trials we as a people have passed, he has been firm and borne a living testimony. He has for many years believed in the doctrine of life only through Christ. He made no compromises with error, but boldly advocated and supported the truth. For a few months previous to his death he seemed more engaged than ever in the cause of Christ. He exhorted his brethren and sisters to faithfulness. Said he should meet with us but a few times more, and wanted his work done. He has done it faithfully. On a sick bed, and as he approached the Jordan of death, I have never seen one so lighted up with the glories of our Eden home. He longed for Him who is our life to appear, that he might appear with him in glory, to enjoy immortality and eternal life with the saints of God. He has left a companion, children, and a large circle of other relatives to mourn his loss. The church have lost one of its best members, and the community a much respected citizen.

The funeral services were attended by Eld. John Knowles, who preached a very appropriate and interesting discourse from 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8. We bespeak for our afflicted sister the prayers of the church, that she may be supported in this time of deep trial.

E. Flanders, Jr.

Fell asleep in Jesus, May 1st, 1862, Bro. Josiah Dodge, of Bradley, Me., aged sixty-six years, six months and five days.

Bro. Dodge died in hope that he should be quickened into life by the voice of the Son of God at his coming. He has left a large family and numerous friends to mourn his loss. Sister Dodge does not mourn as those who have no hope, for she believes Jesus died and rose again, and that them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. The funeral was attended by the writer. A discourse was preached from 2 Tim. 4: 7.

"One we fondly cherished sleepeth,
Rudely from our bosom torn;
Now the grave our treasure keepeth
Till the resurrection morn.

L. Wetherbee.

After an illness of thirteen months of suffering and wasting, fell on sleep at his residence in Suffield, May 8th, my brother, Judah Cooper, aged sixty-seven; of whom we have the "strong consolation" of believing and saying that he sleeps in Jesus.

The subject of this notice has long been known as a decided christian, and being an ardent lover of truth and righteousness, early received the Advent of the Lord with its associated doctrines; in the faith of which he fell asleep, expecting a future and eternal life at the coming of Christ. S. Cooper.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The Steamship Jura brings news from Liverpool May 1st, and Londonderry 2nd.

The opening of the great exhibition was a perfect success.

The Paris correspondent of the Independent Belge asserts that the project of intervention by France and England in America is confirmed in the most absolute manner. The South will be required to guarantee the emancipation of the slaves. The same authority says a secret treaty between France and Spain provides for the early abolition of slavery in Cuba.

At a large meeting on the cotton crisis, at Ashton, a resolution was carried, after considerable opposition, calling on the Government to recognize the Southern Confederacy.

This morning's papers are filled with accounts of the opening of the Exhibition yesterday.

The Times says the ceremonial was emphatically the grandest, best managed, and more imposing public pageant seen in this country for years. The building itself, for extent, convenience, elevation, beauty of form and charm of color, is described as far superior to that of Hyde Park. There are the same apparent labyrinths and spreading vistas of courts, each complete. The exhibition in itself is worth a day's study. Whatever there was in 1851 will be found ten fold in 1862. Besides what was in the old exhibition, there is the finest collection of English and foreign pictures ever got together in this metropolis.

Naples, May 1. Prince Napoleon is expected here on a visit to King Victor Emmanuel.

It is stated in official quarters that General Guyon has been recalled from Rome.

Paris, May 2. The Moniteur of this morning publishes a letter from Mexico commenting on the intolerable government of the Mexicans, and the probability that the French troops will not delay marching on the city of Mexico.

The Journal de Espirit Public of to-day says there is a question of sending Marshal Niel to Rome with Military and diplomatic powers. It is said that he will be charged to conciliate, if possible, the protection which France owes to the Holy See with the rights of the Italian nation.

The statement that the Spanish and French troops were about to march against Mexico has been favorably received here.

TWO DAYS LATER.

The Steamship Niagara has arrived with news from Liverpool to the 3d inst., and Queenstown to the 4th.

Graphic details are published of the opening ceremonies of the great exhibition, which passed off with perfect success. The number present was 33,000, all being season ticket holders.

The attendance at the exhibition on the second day, admission one guinea, was 32,596.

The Paris correspondent of the Independent Belge reiterates his statement relative to a contemplated intervention. He says the news which he sent respecting the project of an intervention by France and England for the re-establishment of peace in America, is confirmed in the most absolute manner, and I have reason to believe the project will very soon be made known officially to the public.

PRUSSIA.

A commission has been appointed to proceed to England to collect information relative to iron-plated ships. If sufficient knowledge is not attainable there, the commission will go to France and America.

ITALY.

Victor Emmanuel, in reply to an address presented to him at Naples on the 2nd, expressed gratitude for his reception, and said: "The public safety is not yet re-established, because Rome is the centre of conspiracies; but believe me when I say that as much as Italians wish to recover Rome, the French wish quite as much to terminate the occupation of it."

FRANCE.

It is stated that further reinforcements of French troops and war material are to be sent to Mexico.

It is believed by the Italians in Paris that Rome will soon be occupied by the Piedmontese troops.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

A letter in the New York Post gives the statement of a rebel deserter. He stated that the utmost consternation existed all over the Southern country at the prospect of the advance of Banks and McDowell; and now the evacuation of Yorktown had caused a stampede from Richmond also. He states that it is freely admitted all over the South, that the fight at Yorktown would decide the fate of the rebels, and that if defeated there, they would make the best terms possible.

The rebel officers, prisoners here, are very bitter toward those people in the North who, before the rebellion broke out, encouraged the South to believe that the North would be divided, and stated that they would be forever excluded from the South, if it was finally compelled to come back into the Union.

A copy of a letter found to-day in the quarters of the telegraph office, indicates the sentiment which all deserters say pervades the South, and which prisoners admit is freely talked of:

"Telegraph Office, April 30.

We are going to evacuate Yorktown in two weeks or have a big fight before two days; and if we get whipped we will all be back under the old United States again, but will never be as well situated as we were before." (Not signed.)

Augusta, Ga., May 7. The Mobile Tribune of the 4th inst., has dispatches from Jackson, Miss., of the 2d inst. The Delta of Thursday last says business in New Orleans was generally suspended. Most of the banks are closed, and the city everywhere presents a sad appearance. The post office remains open, guarded by marines. The telegraph offices are closed and railroad travel stopped. The mutiny at the fort was caused by the news that the city had surrendered. The Delta says 380 men mutinied and went off to the enemy from the fort.

Norfolk, May 12. The city is very quiet. Most of the stores are closed, but it is expected they will open in a day or two, except where the occupants have left with the rebel army. There is some excitement, but it is supposed that within a few days, when communication is fully opened with Northern ports confidence will be fully restored.

Prices are high. Candles are sixty cents a pound; brown wrapping paper envelopes fifty cents a package. Sugar twenty-nine cents a pound.

There is very little Union sentiment newly expressed. Our soldiers all over the city talk freely with the citizens, which must produce a good effect.

All the fortifications are occupied by Union troops. All the public property is in possession of the Federal authorities.

The policy of the rebel government appears to be to concentrate troops on Richmond. Some say that all the Gulf States will be abandoned before Virginia, and Richmond will be held to the very last. All insist that a desperate resistance will be made there, if nowhere else.

The Memphis Argus says the Confederate loss at Shiloh was 7000 killed and wounded. It confesses the rebel attempts with gunboats on the river a disgusting fizzle.

Cincinnati, May 13. The Memphis Avalanch of the 6th, says the telegraph news from Richmond is painfully significant. Gen. McClellan seems to have been preparing the same fate for Richmond that Butler and Porter got up for New Orleans. The same paper says of affairs in New Orleans, that Mayor Monroe and all the Aldermen had been arrested on refusing to take the oath, and imprisoned. Great distress prevails in the city. Food of all kinds was extremely scarce; and flour not to be had at any price.

New York, May 15. A Fortress Monroe letter of the 13th inst, says deserters are constantly coming in. They agree that the evacuation of Richmond is rapidly progressing, and the effort of the retreating rebels is merely to hold back Gen. McClellan to obtain time to remove all the stores and the government archives South.

New York, May 15. The Tribune's Washington's dispatch says the French Minister has received notice from the French Consul at Richmond that the rebels have formally apprised him of their intention to burn the French tobacco stored there, in case they should find it necessary to evacuate Richmond.

The World's Washington dispatch says Gov. Sprague states that our losses at Williamsburg in killed, wounded and missing will amount to about 2000, and that the rebel loss was not less.

Chicago, May 16. A special dispatch from Cairo to the Tribune says the steamer Gladiator, from Pittsburg, reports that there was a rumor that Beauregard had sent a flag of truce asking an armistice for ten days. Deserters corroborate the report, and the matter was under consideration by Gen. Halleck when the Gladiator left.

New York, May 16. The Tribune's Washington dispatch says that Marylanders state that a few days ago one thousand slaves, as if by a preconcerted movement, simultaneously left their happy home in Prince George's county, Md., and came to the district of Columbia, where they still are.

A dispatch from Fredericksburg says that a large iron foundry which was used for casting shot and shell and for rifling cannon for the rebels, was on Wednesday taken possession of by an officer of Gen. McDowell's staff. Yankee mechanics were immediately set to work, and are producing the best specimens of workmanship.

Washington, May 16. The Secretary of War has ordered the release of Col. W. F. Baldwin of Virginia, to be exchanged for Col. Corcoran.

Slavery abolished in Georgia, Florida and South Carolina.—We are indebted to Captain John Hemmingway, of the 8th Maine Regiment, who left Hilton Head on the 10th inst., for a copy of the important proclamation of Major General Hunter, abolishing slavery within the department of which he is the commander. It is as follows:

"Headquarters Dep't of the South,
Hilton Head, S. C., May 9, '62.

General Orders, No 11.

The three States of Georgia, Florida and South Carolina, comprising the Military Department of the South, having deliberately declared themselves no longer under the protection of the United States of America, and having taken up arms against said United States, it became a military necessity to declare Martial Law. This was accordingly done on the 25th day of April, 1862. Slavery and Martial Law in a free country are altogether incompatible; the persons in these three States, Georgia, Florida and South Carolina, heretofore held as slaves, are therefore declared forever free. David Hunter, [Official.] Major General Commanding.

[Special Dispatch to the Boston Journal.]

Washington, May 17. Gen. Hunter's proclamation is everywhere discussed. The Border State men denounce it, while prominent Republicans, headed by Secretary Chase, approve it. President Lincoln will not probably either endorse or condemn it, but leave it as a military necessity in the opinion of an officer entrusted with an important command.

General Saxon, the military Governor of South Carolina, is understood to be clothed with discretionary powers as to the employment of negroes in military service.

Two hundred contrabands have been set at work on Arlington estate to repair the damages caused by its military occupation, and to plant crops.

Washington, May 19. The President has issued a proclamation repudiating the alleged order of General Hunter as unauthorized and of no validity or effect, and reserving to himself alone the right to determine whether he can constitutionally, and should adopt such a policy, if the contingencies of the war eventually make it necessary.

Notices, &c.

To Brethren indebted for Tracts.

I have said nothing to you for a good while. I am now almost entirely out of tracts. I want to publish more—also books. I do not intend to get in debt, but pay as I go. I am hoping immediately to make important changes in my business, so as to furnish more books for less money than heretofore. Now all who owe for books will confer a favor by paying up what they owe if they can, or if they are unable to do that, let me know the fact. All the books I have sent you have cost me the money, and I wish to send out more when I can. Those who wish for books or tracts can send their orders as usual. They are free to the poor. Let us hear from you. Direct to H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass.

P. S. Persons indebted to the Crisis office for books, should send the pay to Bro. Grant as soon as they can conveniently. H. L. H.

Notice.—The Tract Fund.

Tracts of the old approved sorts are soon to be manufactured in large quantities for the Christian Publication Society. Churches or individuals who have contributed to the $500 Tract Fund, can have a portion of their donations returned to them in tracts, if they wish; and they can have the tracts printed with a notice of their place of worship on each one, at a small cost, (say 50 cts.), provided they wish for not less than five hundred copies of any one tract, and will send me immediate directions about it. The price of tracts to contributors will be about 1800 pages for $1.00.

As the $500 Fund is now made up, subscribers who have not paid will remit their subscriptions to Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., as soon as convenient. Persons still wishing to contribute can do likewise, for "yet there is room." H. L. Hastings, President.

Boston, April 21st, '62.

Annual Conference.

The Western New York General Association will hold their annual conference at Seneca Falls, N. Y., commencing on Thursday evening, June 5th, 1862. This is an important gathering, and all the brethren and sisters within the limits of the association, who possibly can, should endeavor to be present, and aid both by their counsel and means in advocating the cause of our Master. Let us have at least one delegate from every church within the association limits, or beyond, if such church should wish to be recognized among us. A general invitation is extended to all, both ministers and laymen. Come up to the "Feast of Love." By order of the committee of appointments.

F. Burr, Secretary.

Conference Notice.

The next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Conference will be held in Belgrade (Baptist meeting-house) commencing Thursday, June 12th at six o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. Brethren from abroad will call on Bro. David Rockwood (Rockwood's Corner.) We hope to see a full meeting, and the power of God in our midst to save sinners. Come, brethren and sisters. This is a new place. The hearts of the people are open to feed man and beast, and let us try to feed them with the word of life.

Per order, H. B. Sevey.
L. C. Wellcome, Scribe.

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

I find many have got the idea from Bro. Boutell's notice, a few weeks since, that the Wilbraham campmeeting was removed. This is a mistake. The meeting will commence as last year, the last week in August. I was on the ground last week, and the tent frames are all in good order, and the inhabitants are looking forward with more anxiety than ever for the time to arrive when they can hear something on the signs of the times. In due time you will see the appointment from the committee. Hiram Munger.

The Crisis for the Soldiers.

We will send a few copies of the Crisis free to soldiers in camp, if it is desired, and ordered by them, or by their friends. Any persons wishing to send the Crisis to their friends in the army, can have it sent for half price, or 50 cts. for six months, or $1.00 per year. Grove and Camp Meeting.

Good news to the happy souls who gathered last year at Tremont, Mass., for divine worship in the grove. There will be another grove and campmeeting in the vicinity of the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass., commencing Tuesday evening, June 24th, 1862, and continuing over the following Sunday. Eld. M. Grant, H. L. Hastings, if possible, and others will be present to preach the word. Many things promise to make this an interesting and profitable meeting. First, the blessing of God upon us last year. Those who were there will welcome us again, and bring others with them. Second, its location—easy of access to many churches. It is situated on the Fairhaven and Boston, R. R., at its junction with the Cape Cod R. R.; fare reduced on this road from Middleboro and New Bedford. We expect a good representation from New Bedford, Mattapoisett, Plymouth, Carver, Middleboro, Taunton, and perhaps from Boston. Third, its accommodations; a beautiful grove, in the midst of an orderly people; good board provided cheaper than by ourselves; lodging in private dwellings near by, or in tents, as chosen. Fourth, the cheering evidences that we are nearing our eternal home, cannot fail to awaken an unusual interest in every believing heart. Come then, one and all, prepare for a good meeting, pray much about it; come to labor for precious souls; come full of the blessing of Christ; come early; come to stay through the meeting; come, and may many kind friends in Tremont bless the day of our coming. In behalf of many brethren,

H. F. Carpenter.

For the Crisis.

Thy Kingdom Come!

I long for the kingdom, the home of the blest,
The hope of the christian, his long promised rest;
Where Jesus shall reign by our Father's command,
And peace be proclaimed throughout every land.

I long for the kingdom; how glorious, sublime,
To live in the age of beholding the time
When our long absent Lord shall in glory descend,
And give us a kingdom which never shall end!

I long for the kingdom, and henceforth to be
From thy bondage of death forever set free,
And swell the loud anthem of heavenly song,
The praises which only to Jesus belong.

I long for the kingdom; and hasten the prey,
To spoil the usurper, would speed the glad day
When Immanuel shall come, claim the meek for his own,
And the "least in his kingdom" to sit on his throne.*

I long for the kingdom; let the time fly apace
That brings the glad hour of beholding his face;
Through faith in his promise my mind sees the day,
And dwells on the glory that fades not away.

I long for the kingdom, and feel it is near;
The day is appointed for the King to appear;
His word is my chart that points out the glad hour
When every base kingdom must yield to his power.

I long for the kingdom, and its glories to wed,
When the Bridegroom his supper of love shall have spread,
The antitype feast with his Bride to partake,
And show her the wounds he received for her sake.

I long for the kingdom, dear Savior, and thee,
Our glorified Head thou forever shalt be;
Of thine own loving body oh! may I be found,
Transformed to thine image when the last trump shall sound.

P. E. Armstrong.

Osceola, Pa.

For the Crisis.

Power with God.

Reader, have you it? If not, who's in fault? On whom rests the blame, the responsibility? You will not presume to charge the Almighty with deficiency, or say he has not made ample provision for this power—the tongue of fire, the baptism pentecostal! Nor will you presume to say the Lord is not desirous for you to have this power, and that he has not made it both your duty and your privilege to be strong in the Lord and the power of his might,—to be filled with all the fulness of God, that you may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, length, depth and height, and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge. The word and the testimony are positive on this point of God's willingness to save to the uttermost. Line upon line and precept on precept are given confimatory of this fact. Furthermore, beloved reader, you are aware that without this power from on high you are living beneath your privilege, curtailing your usefulness and happiness. Not only so, but so long as you remain destitute of this prevailing, sanctifying grace, you are neglecting positive duty, living in open disobedience to the Most High. The command is, "Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." "Be filled with the Spirit." Duty is plain; clear as the sun, unmistakable. "Therefore to him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin."—James 4: 17. Moreover, you feel an aching void, your deficiency, your need; your inmost soul cries out; there is something wanting which you have not, and must have to meet God's requirements. Again, you desire this power with God, and are assured that without it it is utterly impossible to glorify him as you ought, in your body and in your spirit. And yet you remain in bondage from week to week, and from month to month, robbing God and depriving yourself of this choicest gift of Heaven. Multitudes on multitudes may go down to hell through your neglect and disobedience. God holds you responsible for the good you may do.

There is a cause for this lack of power. What is it? Are you keeping back no part of the price? neglecting no duty, in public or private? Is there no lack of confessing and forsaking sin, or of making restitution? Are you providing things honestly in the sight of all men? How is it with your pride, covetousness, self-will, your love of reputation, your time serving? Are these nailed to the cross? Have you come out entirely from the world, its follies, fashions, and pleasure seekings, and resolved in the strength, wisdom, and grace of God to perform every known duty, come life or come death? seeking the honor which cometh from God only? Are you covering up or winking at any sin in high places or in low, from a man-fearing, time-serving policy? Are you faithful in reproofs, not suffering sin to rest upon your neighbor? The Psalmist says: "I shall not be ashamed when I have respect unto all thy commandments." "I will wash my hands in innocency: so will I compass thine altar, O Lord, that I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving and tell of all thy wondrous works." Ps. 26: 6, 7. "I have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep thy word."

Where lies the difficulty, beloved reader? Is it not in the fact your consecration is incomplete? that the pruning knife has not been duly applied? Search and see. Have right hands been severed? right eyes plucked out? Have you searched every nook and corner of your heart as with the lighted candle of God's holy Spirit and word? Are you sure the fallow ground of your heart is broken up completely? that all is on the altar. Christ Jesus—reputation, pride, covetousness, time, talents, property, husbands and wives, fathers, mothers, parents and children, brothers and sisters, houses and lands, even life itself? Do you desire this unspeakable blessing above every earthly consideration? Have you counted all things loss save Jesus Christ? "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it: and whosoever will lose his life for my sake, shall find it."

Without this entire, unreserved, perpetual, persevering consecratedness, there is nothing done to purpose or acceptance. What avail good desires, resolutions, prayers, preachings, writings, expostulations, doing this or doing that, without this entire consecration, giving up all for God? without first laying all upon the altar Christ Jesus, "laying aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset us," meanwhile abstaining from all appearance of evil? Till this entire, unreserved consecration is heartily made—heartily, honestly, entirely, everlastingly, all is sounding brass or a tinkling cymbal. How is it possible for God to look complacently on any one, saint or sinner, professor or non-professor, minister or layman, without this entire consecratedness to the Lord—this presenting the "body a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is our reasonable service"?

The whole tenor of God's merciful dispensations goes on the principle or condition of this consecration. There is no divine acceptance, no solid peace, hope or comfort—no joy in the Holy Spirit—no smiling approbation of the Most High—no permanent success in our labors, in the cause of truth and salvation, save on the condition of this entire consecration, this giving up our wills to God's will. Reader, is not this correct theology, sound, scriptural, undeniable? God declares it, reiterates it on every page of inspiration. See Isaiah 1: 15–18; Rom. 12: 1, 2; 2 Cor. 6: 14–17. Till this entire, unreserved consecratedness is made in good faith, honestly, heartily, unreservedly and forever in the sight of Heaven, angels and men, there is no pardon, no forgiveness, no acceptance with God, no sweet, heavenly, glowing, joyful manifestations of the Most High. God cannot, will not bow the listening ear. The heavens are brass above us, the earth iron beneath! Heaven is shut—the pearly gates barred—so long as we cling to earth, hold on to lust, the pride of life—refuse to bow the knee, humbly, consecratedly, and give God the glory henceforth and forever.

When we have complied with God's reasonable, necessary, permanent, unalterable conditions—grounded entirely the arms of our rebellion—made a willing, hearty, unreserved sacrifice of all we possess for Jesus—brought all the tithes into the storehouse,—the windows of heaven are then opened wide, salvation streams! The Lord smiles graciously, gloriously! "Come now, let us reason together, saith the Lord." See Isaiah 1: 18.

"There is a path that leads to God,
All others go astray;
Narrow, but pleasant, is the road,
And christians love the way."

The Death Penalty.

"The wages of sin is death."—Rom. 6: 23.

What death? Not temporal death, for the sinless infant and the holy saint just as really die that death as the impenitent. Not spiritual death—a death in "trespasses and sins"—for that is the very thing that renders man deserving of punishment, instead of being the punishment itself. The penalty death is not visited upon the sinner in this life, nor at the close of this life. The execution of the penalty cannot precede the judgment. Said Christ, "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him [not in this life nor at death, but] in the last day." John 12: 48. Paul presents the fact that "it is appointed once to die, but after this the judgment." Heb. 9: 27. First, the penalty death cannot precede the judgment; and secondly, the judgment is "after" death, and "in the last day": therefore the penalty death must be visited upon the sinner "in the last day"; thus agreeing with Peter's opinion that God will "reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished" (2 Pet. 2: 9); consequently the penalty death is not inflicted upon the sinner either in this life, nor in temporal death, but beyond it, when "they that have done evil [shall come forth] to the resurrection of damnation." John 5: 29. The penalty death,—the death to be inflicted "in the last day,"—is denominated the "second death," in contradistinction to a preceding death. The "second death" must be the second infliction of a death of the same order of itself; otherwise it would be the first death of this kind, and the first death of that kind,—no second about it. The Bible mentions two kinds of death,—literal death, and spiritual death, a death in "trespasses and sins,"—and theologians mention a third kind of death, namely, a "death that never dies," by which they mean eternal torment. Hence, the "second death" must be the second infliction of one of these kinds of death. Let us examine the three kinds, beginning with the last one mentioned.

First. If the penalty death signifies eternal misery, then inasmuch as the penalty death is styled the "second death," it follows that it is the second eternal misery! Then when and where was the first eternal misery inflicted? for a "second" presupposes a first. This would prove two editions of eternal misery; and furthermore, as the second edition must succeed the first, if the first is endless in duration, it leaves no room for the second; if the first is not endless, then the second will not be. Here the endless misery system can neither back out, or go forward! Two editions of endless misery, the second not beginning till the first is over! and yet nobody can find the first, and if it could be found, it would last so long that it would never allow the second to begin!!!

Second. If the penalty death signifies a spiritual death, (a death in "trespasses and sins,") then inasmuch as the penalty death is styled the "second" death, there must be an end of the first death of this kind, before there can be a second infliction of it; and when the first death in "trespasses and sins" is ended, the man is free from sin, and is no longer a sinner; hence, will not be punished. God will not punish a man that is free from "trespasses and sins." He will not make them dead in "trespasses and sins" a second time, or make them sinners again, after they are liberated from a death in trespasses and sins.

Third. If the penalty death is literal death, then inasmuch as the penalty, death, is styled the "second death," it must be a second infliction of literal death upon the sinner. Saint and sinner alike die the first death, and are alike liberated from it; but over the saint "the second death hath no power," while the sinner must die the "second death." All are made to live again at the judgment day, to be judged: but saints will die no more, while sinners, then judged obnoxious to the wrath of God, will die the second death; and thenceforward "shall never see life," but abide beneath the irrevocable stroke of the penalty death.

Thoughts for Parents.

Bro. Grant:—I copy the following extract and send it for publication in the Crisis, because it more aptly speaks my mind on a particular phase of the subject of nonconformity to this world. It is from the writings of one who signs herself "an American mother," and I would that all mothers, and more especially christian mothers, would see the matter in the same light that she does. My feelings are constantly saddened in consequence of christian parents compromising with Satan because their "children must have congenial society." When shall we see a church that is free from the influence of worldly pride?

F. Burr.

"We find that almost every step in self-denial involves consequences which we had not foreseen, and perhaps leads us farther than we had anticipated. Since I have banished wine, I have found it best to relinquish the society of the very gay and very fashionable, and I have thus been forced to be more separate from the world. But shall I regret it? I am forbidden to be conformed to this world, and shall I not find in this circumstance an additional reason for persevering in a course which enables me the more entirely to obey a plain command?"

"'But,' you say, 'our children—they must mingle with the world; and I think that it is important that for their interest we cultivate the acquaintance of the genteel and fashionable.'"

"The world, which I have relinquished for myself, I may not choose for my children. My children have been dedicated to God. I would train them for his service. And if any friends we have whose characters are formed, whose habits are established, whose principles are settled, find it necessary to relinquish these associations because they retard our growth in grace, unhinge our minds, and deprive us of a relish for higher enjoyments,—can we hope that our children, with hearts unsanctified, characters unformed, and principles unsettled, will be converted to God, trained for his service, and fitted for usefulness in his kingdom, while we are seeking for them fashionable associates, and forming them to fashionable habits?"

"'But our children must have companions, and you know they do not naturally relish serious things.'"

"This is true; and therefore I would not superadd the habits acquired by this intercourse with the light and frivolous, to the natural distaste with which the human heart regards the solemn realities of eternity. I will make their home as pleasant as possible to my children. I will gather around my fireside the intelligent, the refined, the pious; those from whom they may derive benefit, both by conversation and example."

"'Yet,' you say, 'I think you will find that your children will require amusements, and they will desire to participate in the pleasures of their companions.'"

"I do not doubt it. And I desire too, that they may have enjoyments far superior to any which can be derived from fashionable amusements. I would wish to make home so pleasant to my children that they should feel that their highest earthly happiness was centered in it. I would try to strengthen the ties of nature, and make their happiness consist rather in the cultivation of the affections than in the gratification of the passions. And I cannot but think that were our children rightly educated, they would prefer the pleasures derived from the cultivation of the mind and heart, to those drawn from the gratification of vanity, pride, or the appetite. I cannot but feel that the child or youth, unsophisticated by artificial pleasure, would prefer the walk, the ride, the book, the pencil, or music, shared with those he loves, to the crowded ballroom, the corrupting theatre, or the fashionable party."

"Our children do require amusements, and they should have them; but they should have those which are safe, and, if possible, profitable. Those which, instead of inspiring a taste which may hereafter lead them into vice and dissipation, may strengthen right tendencies, and aid in the formation of habits of industry, reflection, and sobriety; and I would certainly feel it my duty to inquire into the habits of those with whom my children associate.

"I have known mothers who, while they were careful that their own friends should possess not only unblemished moral characters, but if possible a high tone of piety, have allowed their children freely to mingle with the most trifling and irreligious, and even with the vicious and dissipated. And I have looked upon such mothers with amazement. I have felt that they were infatuated, and feared that their prayers for their children were but mockery. They could not more surely or more ingeniously prevent their entering the paths of piety, than by thus linking them to vicious companions, whose direct influence would harden their hearts, poison their principles, and turn their steps into the road which leads to death."

God's Beautiful City.

BY D. T. TAYLOR.

Far, far away, amid realms of light,
Hid deep in the azure beyond our sight,
Stands a beautiful city so high and bright,—
Where is known no sorrow, nor death, nor night.
Beautiful city!
O blest abode! O home of God!
Whose streets by the feet of the sinless are trod.

They roam through the gardens of endless spring;
They crowd all thy portals on rushing wing;
While the echoing domes of the palace ring
With the hymns of the angels that shout and sing.
Beautiful city!
Hark! hark, again! the angelic strain,—
As gleams through the crystal that burnished train.

There the life-fires brighten, and burn, and roll
Over diamonds that sparkle, o'er sands of gold;
Where to breathe the sweet air yields a bliss untold,
And the dwellers immortal shall never grow old.
Beautiful city!
We pierce the skies with longing eyes,
And yearn to inherit the golden prize.

It is said that the King, in his power sublime,
When the last sands drop from the glass of Time,
And our world shall be robed in her Eden prime,
Will bring down that city to gladden earth's clime.
Beautiful city!
Bright capitol where saints will dwell,
And reign on the throne with Immanuel.

As jewels flash on the brow of a queen,—
As the jasper and ruby in crowns are seen,—
God's city, wrapped in its silver sheen,
Will be set like a gem in the new earth's green.
Beautiful city!
City of flowers and peaceful bowers!
Come down and illumine this dark world of ours!

I have heard in that city they wait for me;
That its gates stand open wide and free;
That the ransomed the king in his beauty may see,
And live in his presence eternally.
Beautiful city!
In royal state blest mansions wait,
And beckon us on through the pearly gate.

I shall go where the summers will always bloom;
I shall walk no more amid trial and gloom;
I shall bid farewell to the withering tomb;
I shall deck my brow with the conqueror's plume.
Beautiful city!
Let us enter in, a crown to win!
Our words but half tell of the glory within.

Correspondence.

From T. W. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—I feel that a brief report of the progress of truth in this section may be interesting to some of your readers. The church now numbers thirty-two members, which is an increase of eight since Feb. 23d, as published in the Crisis of Apr. 23d. One of this number, and the latest addition, was a Baptist preacher of decided ability; in fact he was the ablest man that denomination had in this part of the State. After "contending for the faith once delivered to the saints" for over a year among that people, and receiving no sympathy or encouragement, but rather coldness and even persecution, he has at last determined to come out from among them, and identify himself with a people who can appreciate his efforts, and will encourage him in his attempts to restore the "ancient landmarks." I am happy to say that he is a firm believer in the "second personal coming of the Messiah," and he feels that these are the last days, and is determined to sound the alarm. As far as I have ascertained by conversation, he does not believe in the doctrine of inherent immortality, and he holds to the idea of the destruction of the ungodly. I believe that by patient investigation of the word of God, he will soon embrace all the truths advocated by the Crisis. Bro. G., I cannot see how a different result can attend an unprejudiced searching of the sacred oracles. I firmly believe that the doctrine of immortal-soul-ism, deathless spirits, eternal misery, etc., etc., is fast losing ground in this section. I do not know of one minister in the "Christian Church" who preaches the above doctrines.

I formed the acquaintance, about a week ago, of a good brother, hailing from Michigan, named Alpha Tubbs. He seems to have been neglecting the talent that God has given him of preaching "the word," and in consequence he feels burdened and condemned. He was connected with the Methodists, but they would not tolerate his preaching, as he is a firm believer in the Advent doctrine. He therefore left them, and I believe has since been unconnected with any people. He seemed overjoyed when he discovered that I entertained the same views as he on the propositions so ably advocated by the Crisis. When talking over his past negligence in duty because of coldness and indifference on the part of his brethren, and of the consequent loss of opportunity of doing good, etc., he seemed melted down and wept like a child, but the vow once neglected again renewed, brought a conscious and evident peace; and now, with the experience of the past as a teacher, I trust that he will be found faithful unto death. I believe he will be able to accomplish much good. He feels desirous of making the "coming of Christ," "sleep of the dead," "destruction of the wicked," etc., prominent subjects of preaching. Of course I could make no objection to this, except that there is danger of making some of these truths a hobby; and hobby-riding is not at all times beneficial to the cause.

There are some men in every religious party whose minds seem to be incapable of grasping but one truth or proposition of the many that go to make up the Christian system; and upon this one string they will saw until it becomes a settled idea with them that in that one sentiment is concentrated all truth, and with desperate energy they pull and tug at it as if the salvation of men depended on a clear demonstration of its excellency. In fact, most all of the religious parties of the day are built upon one or two particular ideas, and it can easily be discovered where a party man belongs by the zeal in which he defends some one or two points of religious belief. The Advent people are not altogether free from this fault, by any means. A doctrine of the greatest importance to the salvation of men, viz., "the personal advent of the Lord Jesus Christ," and reign on the earth (regenerated), is laid on the shelf, and often passed unnoticed, while other truths of far less importance or value are given an undue prominence. I say less important, because the salvation of man does not positively depend on the correct understanding of them. While it seems to me that it is hardly probable that an individual can be saved if he rejects the truth of Christ's second coming, I see no such danger if he should not embrace the idea of destruction. It may seem to be a strong position to take that a man's salvation may be affected by the rejection of the truth of Christ's personal advent; but I am not without sufficient scriptural support in this matter, as I may show at an early day.

My brethren in the ministry, suffer a word of exhortation from a young brother. Let us "preach the word" and declare all the "counsel of God." There is so much error in the world, that it needs constant watching lest we suffer it to overcome us. Men love darkness rather than light, but if even so, let us be lights in the world, yea, living epistles, known and read of all men. Yours contending for the faith.

Vandalia, Ill., May 9th, '62.

From W. Wendell.

Bro. Grant:—Since I began to proclaim publicly my faith in the second advent of Christ, life only through Christ, etc., I have been accused of being a Spiritualist! notwithstanding I am earnestly contending for the exact reverse of that diabolical delusion. A few days since, a worthy brother of the Free-will Baptist church gave me a paper which he said contained an article on the "Intermediate State," which he desired me to read. I put the paper in my pocket, and on arriving home found it to be the "Morning Star," published at Dover, N. H., and the article referred to an Editorial which I shall consider, until convinced differently, as reflecting the sentiment of that denomination. I make the following extract from said article, which will place the accusation of Spiritualism where it properly belongs:—

"In many instances, the Bible assures us the angels have communicated important messages to men; and the text, 'Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?' (Heb. 1: 14), with other scriptural allusions, has given quite a wide-spread opinion that the sainted dead are permitted to minister, in some way that human minds cannot explain, to the dear ones which at death had been bereaved of their earthly help. God can, and unquestionably does, surround his people, in the trials of the earthly pilgrimage, with heavenly influences, not palpable to mortal sight; and if he is pleased to add to the promised presence of Christ, and the operation of the Holy Spirit, and the precepts of revelation, the ministrations of unseen angels and departed saints,—why surely this were a most grateful and pleasing sentiment."

Why wonder that Spiritualism grows? Why wonder that its blighting hand is making such ravages among christians? And why wonder that ministers of the gospel have been drawn aside from their holy calling by the malaria of its poisonous breath? While the professed christian church utter and teach such sentiments as the above, Spiritualism will flourish like the green bay-tree. And while they exert themselves to refute the Bible doctrine that "the dead know not anything," they give meat and drink, aid and comfort, to the most dangerous and deadly enemy that Christianity has ever had or ever will have to contend with. May God deliver us from any connection with this monster iniquity.

☞ Dwell much in Gethsemane; dwell much at Golgotha; for nothing is so powerful to work a lively faith and a joyful hope as an attentive consideration of thy Lord's unutterable merits. Nothing has so great a tendency to wean thee from an undue attachment to a vain world, as the habitual remembrance of his extreme agonies.

Religion.—Religion is love to God and man, not to ourselves. The only way to save our souls is to strive to benefit the souls and bodies of our neighbors. Even the purest faith without beneficent works is dead, for every thing vital dies that is not used.

Young Friends:—There are many of you whom we shall not probably see in this life, and the only means of communication we shall have will be in writing. It would be gratifying for us to know that we are united in sentiment, in action, and also at the same time; and I wish to propose a concert for prayer; and though we may be many miles apart, we can all be united at the same time in devotion. I would propose Wednesday and Sunday evenings, between the hours of six and seven P. M., as the time when we shall pray in concert. And let the burden of our prayer be, that we, and as many others as we can get to go with us, may meet in the kingdom of God.

The Warning.

"Mother, may sissy and I go after blackberries?"

"Where can you find them?"

"Oh, there's lots of 'em down in the railroad woods."

"I'm afraid to have you go there, Johnny; you might be on the track and be run over."

"Mother, I'll promise not to cross the track till after the morning train has passed, and then it will be quite safe; for, you know, there isn't another train before dinner time."

"Very well; you may go. Mind and take good care of sissy."

In high glee the children started, carrying a basket that would have held a great many more berries than they were likely to pick. They soon reached a small patch of bushes, and Johnny showed sissy where she could gather the berries without scratching her fingers or catching her hair in the briers, while he pushed bravely into the very midst where the thorns and fruit grew thickest. In half an hour they had all that were worth gathering, and moved on to look for more. They reached the railroad track, and Johnny, mindful of his promise, wandered along the side, carrying the basket on one arm, while he led sissy by the hand.

"There ain't any more berries," said the little girl, fretfully.

"Yes, there are, pet—plenty, over there," pointing to the other side of the road. "Wait till the big cars go past, and then we'll go over and get them."

Sissy's face brightened at the promise. They walked slowly on until they turned a sharp curve in the road.

"Oh, what shall I do!" exclaimed Johnny, suddenly. "There's a tree across the track! The cars will be broken to pieces, and all the people killed. We must run and meet them. Oh, sissy, see how fast you can run now!"

In his excitement Johnny did not think of leaving the basket, but hurried along over the rough ground, dragging sissy by one hand, with the heavy basket in the other. They clambered over the fallen tree. Here the path became still worse. Large stones lay on the embankment, which was very steep and seamed by the recent rains. Sissy began to fret. "Bubby, you run as fast! I'se tired!"

Johnny's heart was beating very rapidly. He knew the terrible danger that threatened the train; but he dared not leave the little girl and run on by himself.

"Oh, sissy, don't cry yet!" he said, imploringly, adding aloud, "O dear heavenly Father, help us to stop the cars!" . . .

In the meantime we will visit the cars which Johnny is so anxiously expecting. A long train it is. Three hundred people stowed away in it.

How little they dream of danger! There sits an old gentleman who has been reading aloud, from his morning paper, the account of a terrible railroad accident on another line.

"Ah, well!" he says, as he folds the sheet, "these things are always the result of carelessness. Engineers, conductors, or somebody, is always to blame for them. Now, the reason I like this road is because I know it to be carefully managed. The great point is safety. To be sure, they don't run as fast as some others; but it's safe; yes, sir, safe."

Ah, old gentleman, if you could look ahead two miles, to where that tree lies across the track just beyond a sharp turn, so that the engineer can't see it until too late to stop, you wouldn't lean back so comfortably for your nap.

Behind the old gentlemen sits a pale woman, who has been listening to his tale. "Safe," she repeats to herself. "Yes; safe because we are in God's hands,—not for any other reason." And, as she presses her baby to her bosom, she whispers, softly, "O God, protect us, and may we all reach our homes in safety!"

On flies the train. What is that object moving along so close to the track, far down the road? It may be a cow. The shrill whistle shrieks out a warning. They are shouting and waving a hat.

"Only their fun," says the engineer, coolly.

"But it looks very earnest. There may be something in it, after all," he thinks, and slackens the speed of the train.

It was well he did. Another moment takes them round the bend and full in sight of the threatening danger.

"Stop the train! down brakes!" shouts the engineer. For a moment all is haste and terror. Then the cars stop,—the locomotive actually touching the fallen tree; and the passengers pour out to see from what they have escaped. The perspiration breaks out on the old gentleman's face, as he looks at the tree and says, hoarsely, "Those children have saved our lives!"

But the pale mother's eyes fill with tears, as she murmurs, "Father, I thank thee for hearing my prayer!"—M. Mec.—Sunday School Banner.

The Hen and Chickens.—A hen and her chickens were in the mown meadow, catching grasshoppers, which they seemed to regard as very good eating. The chickens were scattered around in search of their game, when the old hen made a peculiar noise very unlike her usual call. All the chickens ran to her and got under her wings, except one. He had been chasing a grasshopper, and was too far off to get to his mother in time to receive the shelter of her wings, so a hawk seized him and bore him away. The soul may wander in the way of sin so far from God that it can never return and receive salvation.—Ibid.

☞ The Crisis is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially, the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and the final destruction of the wicked.

For the Crisis.

Communion.

Jesus, Shepherd of my soul,
Savior, blest Redeemer, Friend,
Weak and worthless as I am,
Let my prayer to thee ascend.

O, I need thee, precious One!
Need thy gracious care each hour;
I am weak and full of sin,—
Manifest to thee my power.

Oft my thoughts to earth return,
And refuse to follow thee;
Oft I murmur at thy will,—
Jesus, Jesus, pardon me!

Savior, bless and make me good,
Pardon all my misspent years;
Father, own me as thy child,
When the King of kings appears.

Covetousness.

"And he said unto them, take heed, and beware of covetousness."—LUKE 12: 15.

Covetousness consists in an eager desire to accumulate the riches of this world; and begets a "longing after the things of others." It leads men into unjust and wicked pursuits after wealth,—vitiates the moral appetite,—and draws all the aspirations of the mind down to the corruptible, decaying things of earth. Hence we should "beware of covetousness."

1st. Because "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth," but in faith in Jesus Christ, and in obedience to his commandments; as it is written, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." "Verily, verily, I say unto you, He that believeth on me, hath everlasting life." And in respect to obedience, thus:—"Verily, verily, I say unto you, If a man keep my sayings, he shall never see death." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life," etc. QUES. To what extent are the commandments of Christ to be kept? ANS. "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you of your brethren, like unto me; him shall ye hear in all things, whatsoever he shall say unto you. And it shall come to pass, that every soul which will not hear the words of that prophet, shall be destroyed from among the people." The prophet here alluded to is a no less personage than the Lord Jesus Christ; and is to be believed in every doctrine he has taught, and obeyed in every precept he has given.

2nd. We should beware of covetousness, because covetousness is idolatry. See Col. 3: 5; Eph. 5: 5. The covetous man is an idolater, because he places that delight, that hope, that love, and that trust in the riches of this world, and bestows on them that adoration which he owes to God. And no "covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ and of God."

3d. We should beware of covetousness, because a covetous man cannot obey the commands of Christ. The covetous man grudges to give of his meat to the hungry; he grudges to give of his drink to the thirsty; he grudges to supply the destitute with raiment; he grudges to administer to the necessities of the sick, and those who are in distress; and he grudges to use hospitality towards strangers, as if he were afraid he should entertain an angel literally. But the time approaches when the Master will say to him, "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these (my brethren), ye did it not to me. And these (covetous) shall go away into everlasting punishment." "But if a man be just, and do that which is lawful and right, . . . and hath not oppressed any, but hath restored to the debtor his pledge (i. e., if the debtor is poor, and not able to redeem his pledge), hath spoiled none by violence (not even to collect a debt by violence, or force, if the debtor is poor), hath given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment; he that hath not given forth upon usury, neither hath taken any increase, . . . hath walked in my statutes, and hath kept my judgments, to deal truly; HE IS JUST, he shall surely live, saith the Lord God!" It will avail the covetous man nothing in the day of judgment, to plead (as some do now), "None need to have been poor,—all had the same opportunities to acquire wealth which I enjoyed,"—for this assertion is not true. God has endowed men with different gifts in this, as well as in all other respects. And I affirm, that the Creator just as much designed that some men should be poor as to temporal things, as that men should exist subsequently to Adam's fall. "The Lord maketh poor, and maketh rich." But we will waive further remarks on this point for the present, and pass to notice the care the Lord has for his poor.

That the Lord has a peculiar care for the poor of his people, is clearly manifest in both the Old and New Covenants. We will cite from each a few of the many examples they contain, relative to this subject. In the law of the Old Covenant, we read: "But in the seventh year thou shalt let it (the land) rest and lie still, that the poor of thy people may eat," (See Ex. 23; 9–11). "And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harvest; and thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard: thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger: I am the Lord your God."—Lev. 19: 9, 10. "If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thy heart nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother; but thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him; and thou shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth."

"O, lend him, eh?" says the covetous man; "I am as ready to lend to the poor, as to the rich, if he can give me ample security for the pay." But, "and if the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep WITH HIS PLEDGE (security); in any case, (whether you get your pay or not) thou shalt deliver him the pledge again when the sun goeth down." But there seems to be something said about giving, as well as lending to the poor; thus—"Beware that there be not a thought in thy wicked heart, saying, the seventh year, the year of release is at hand; and thine eye be evil against thy poor brother, and thou givest him nought; and he cry unto the Lord against thee, and it be sin unto thee. Thou shalt surely give him, and thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him: because that for this thing the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all thy works, and in all that thou puttest thine hand unto. For the poor shall never cease out of the land: therefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor and to the needy in thy land." (See Deut. 15: 7–11.

"But," says the covetous man, "you quote from the law of Moses! That law is not binding now; it has been dead for more than eighteen hundred years!" It is true that Christ abolished the law of Moses; he slew every part of it—Decalogue and all,—and nailed it to his cross. But why was the law of Moses slain? Because it was "faulty"—destitute of that life-giving element which is contained in the law of Christ. The Old Covenant was taken out of the way, that a better covenant—one established on "better promises," might obtain. But if any part of the Old Covenant is incorporated into the New, that part thus incorporated is just as obligatory now, as when the Mosaic law was in force. But is this item of the Old Testament under consideration contained in the New? We will let the Covenant itself answer. Christ says to his church, "Take heed that ye do not your alms to be seen of men, . . . but when thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." This injunction of the Savior is equivalent to an absolute command to give alms; and alms consist in gratuitous donations to the poor. If those donations do sometimes pass through the hands of some benevolent society, they are intended, in some way, for the benefit of the poor.

But again. Christ says to his church, "Give to him that asketh of thee, and from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away." But "lend, hoping for nothing again." Again, "Sell that ye have, and give alms." QUES. To whom shall we give alms? ANS. "Sell that ye have and give to the poor." "Ye have the poor always with you, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good." If there yet remains any doubt that this item of the law of Moses is not contained in the law of Christ, we will arrange them side by side, that the truth may the more readily appear.

LAW OF MOSES.	LAW OF CHRIST.
"Thou shalt surely give him, (the poor) and thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him."	"Give to him that asketh of thee. "Sell that ye have, and give to the poor."
"And thou shalt surely lend him (the poor) sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth." "And if the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge; in any case thou shalt deliver him the pledge again when the sun goeth down."	"And from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away." "And lend, hoping for nothing again."
"For the poor shall never cease out of the land: therefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in thy land."	"For the poor ye have always with you, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good."

Among other precepts given by the apostle, Rom. 12, is this:—"Distributing to the necessities of saints." See also 2 Cor. 8: 13, 14,—"For I mean not that other men be eased, and ye burdened: but by an equality, that now at this time your abundance may be a supply for their want, that their abundance also may be a supply for your want; that there may be equality: as it is written, He that had gathered much had nothing over; and he that had gathered little had no lack."

As in the distribution of the manna among the children of Israel equality was observed, so also should it be in regard to the distribution of the comforts of life among the children of God in this dispensation. The apostle evidently alludes to that, as typical of this. In gathering the manna, some gathered more than they needed—others not as much. But when it was measured out, it was equally distributed among them. The Israelites were to leave none of their manna till the next morning; yet some of them, who were probably somewhat given to covetousness, and who distrusted the promises of God, kept of their manna over night; but it proved useless to them—"it bred worms, and stank." And just so useless will the riches of this world prove to those who have heaped them together, and kept them through this night of moral darkness and disobedience to the requirements of the gospel, when they awake in the morning of the great day of judgment, to give an account of their stewardship. "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof"; and he requires his people to distribute equally among themselves the necessary comforts of life; i. e., that the actual wants of all may be comfortably supplied. But this is not to induce idleness in any; "for if any will not work (as health and circumstances permit), neither shall he eat." Every one is to be diligent in that business to which he is called. If one is called to till the ground, let him be diligent. If another is called to disseminate the great truths of the gospel, let him be diligent. But if he whom God has called to preach the gospel finds some leisure from that employment, let him follow the example of Paul, whose own hands, at such times, ministered to his own necessities. But let him not turn the preaching of the gospel of God into a professional vocation to get money.

But again. In 2 Cor. 9: 7–12, the apostle says:—"Every man, according as he hath purposed in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth the cheerful giver. And God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work: (as it is written, He hath dispersed abroad; he hath given to the poor: his righteousness remaineth forever, . . . being enriched in every thing to all bountifulness, which causeth through us thanksgiving to God. For the administration of this service not only supplieth the want of the saints, but is abundant also by many thanksgivings to God." R. ROBBINS.

(To be concluded.)

For the Crisis

Can it be So?

Does not the good man's heart of tenderness recoil at the thought of the horrid dogma of unending torment in a lake of fire and brimstone, where the miserable victim will forever curse the hated name of his all-powerful foe, the God of love? Is it impious to believe that God "will not contend forever," nor "be always wroth" (Isa. 57: 16) with finite beings, the creatures of his power and the objects of his love? Is not such a theory a fearful accusation against divine goodness?—a theory that requires us to believe that "God is good, and his tender mercies are over all his works," and yet that he will torture with remorseless vengeance the largest number of his creatures, not allowing them to repent, not suffering them to reform, nor yet to die. Is this the proof of God's "excellent loving kindness?" And those who doubt this theory, are branded with the opprobious term "infidel" by flippant talkers who style themselves "orthodox," sound in the faith. SAURIN, a celebrated divine, who taught this doctrine, thus expresses his agonized feelings like a candid, thoughtful, feeling man:—

"I sink! I sink under the awful weight of my subject; and I declare, when I see my friends, my relations, the people of my charge, this whole congregation; when I think that I, that you, that we are all threatened with these torments; when I see, in the lukewarmness of my devotions, in the languor of my love, in the levity of my resolutions and designs, the least evidence, though it be presumptive only, of my future misery, yet I find in the thought a mortal poison, which diffuseth itself into every period of my life, rendering society irksome, nourishment insipid, pleasure disgustful, and life itself a cruel bitter. I cease to wonder that the fear of hell hath made some mad, and others melancholy."

Surely this is a doctrine that favors, or would induce asceticism, if believed; and we may well query, who really believes it? Do those bigoted sectarians, who fulminate their anathemas against those who do not? Let me introduce another competent witness to the propriety of doubting. MOSES STUART, the late distinguished professor of Andover, widely known and highly esteemed as a scholar and a christian, says:—

"There are minds of a very serious cast, and prone to reasoning and inquiry, that have in some way come into such a state, that doubt on the subject of endless punishment (meaning torment) cannot without the greatest difficulty be removed from them. They commence their doubts, it is probable, with some a priori reasoning on this subject. 'God is good.' 'His tender mercies are over all the works of his hands. He has no pleasure in the death of the sinner. He has power to prevent it. He knew before he created man, and made him a free agent, that he would sin. In certain prospect of his endless misery, therefore, his benevolence would have prevented the bringing him into existence. No father can bear to see his own children miserable without end, not even when they have been ungrateful and rebellious, and God, our heavenly Father, loves us better than an earthly parent does or can love his children.' 'Besides, our sins are temporary and finite; for they are committed by temporary and finite beings, and in a world filled with enticements both from without and from within. It is perfectly easy for Omnipotence to limit, yea, to prevent, any mischief which sin can do; so that the endless punishment of the wicked is unnecessary, in order to maintain the divine government, and keep it upon a solid basis. Above all, a punishment without end, for the sins of a few days or hours, is a proportion of misery incompatible with justice as well as mercy. And how can this be any longer necessary, when Christ has made atonement for sin, and brought in everlasting redemption from its penalty? The social sympathies, too, of some men are often deeply concerned with the formation of their religious opinions. They have lost a near and dear friend and relative by death, one who never made any profession of religion, or gave good reason to suppose that his mind was particularly occupied with it. What will they think of his case? Can they believe that one so dear to them has become eternally wretched, an outcast forever from God? Can they endure the thought that they are never to see or associate with him any more? Can heaven itself be a place of happiness for them, while they are conscious that a husband or wife, a son or a daughter, a brother or a sister, is plunged into a lake of fire, from which there is no escape? 'It is impossible,' they aver, 'to overcome such sympathies as these. It would be unnatural and even monstrous to suppress them.' They are, therefore, as they view the case, constrained to doubt whether the miseries of a future world can be endless. If there are any whose breasts are strangers to such difficulties as these, they are to be congratulated on having made attainments almost beyond the reach of humanity in the present world; or else to be pitied for ignorance, or the want of a sympathy which seems to be among the first elements of our social nature with the great mass of thinking christians, I am sure such thoughts as these must, unhappily for them, be acquaintances too familiar. That they agitate our breasts as the storms do the mighty deep, will be testified by every man of a tender heart, and who has a deep concern in the present and future welfare of those whom he loves."

Let me add yet another testimony from REV. ALBERT BARNES. He says:—

"That the immortal mind should be allowed to jeopard its infinite welfare, and that trifles should be allowed to draw it away from God, and virtue, and heaven. That any should forever linger on in hopeless despair, and rolling amidst infinite torments, without the possibility of alleviation, and without end." "I have never seen a particle of light thrown on these subjects that has given a moment's ease to my tortured mind; nor have I an explanation to offer, or a thought to suggest, which would be of relief to you. I trust other men, as they profess to do, understand this better than I do, and that they have not the anguish of spirit which I have; but I confess, when I look on a world of sinners and sufferers; upon death-beds and grave-yards; upon the world of woe, filled with hosts to suffer forever; when I see my friends, my parents, my family, my people, my fellow-citizens; when I look upon a whole race, all involved in this sin and danger; and when I see the great mass of them wholly unconcerned, and when I feel that God only can save them, and yet he does not do it, I am struck dumb. It is all dark, dark, dark to my soul, and I cannot disguise it."

Again he says: "These and kindred difficulties meet the mind when we think on this great subject; and they meet us when we endeavor to urge our fellow sinners to be reconciled to God, and put confidence in him. On this ground they hesitate. These are real, not imaginary difficulties. They are probably felt by every mind that ever reflected on this subject; and they are unexplained, unmitigated, unremoved. I confess, for one, that I feel them, and feel them more sensibly and powerfully the more I look at them, and the longer I live. I do not understand these facts, and I make no advances towards understanding them. . . . I have read to some extent what wise and good men have written. I have looked at their theories and explanations. I have endeavored to weigh their arguments, for my whole soul pants for light and relief on these questions. But I get neither; and in the distress and anguish of my own spirit, I confess I see no light whatever. I see not one ray to disclose to me the reason why sin came into the world; why the earth is strewed with the dying and the dead, and why men must suffer to all eternity." (See Barnes' Practical Sermons, p. 123–125.)

Certainly, those who think and feel, can but be "tortured" and feel "distress and anguish of spirit" who believe such a theory. Oh! to think of the wild wail of sorrow that will come forth from the lost who agonize in ceaseless pain. All of God's attributes forbid such a belief.

Cheer Thee!

O cheer thee, weary pilgrim,
The night is wearing on;
These dark and toilsome hours
Are soon forever gone.
The watchmen now are sounding—
"The dawn is just at hand!"
Lift! lift your heads, ye faithful,
Ye weary, waiting band.

We've passed the foretold landmarks,
We've gained contention's vale;
Earth's mighty thrones now tremble,
Men's hearts begin to fail.
Rejoice, then, wayworn pilgrim,
Let hope your bosom thrill,
The star that guides us onward
Grows brighter, brighter still.

Each trial-hour but brings us
One nearer to the morn,
When, darkling cares all over,
Bright crowns our heads adorn:
When tears and sighs are ended,
Forgotten every pain,
Soon, soon the angel reapers
Will gather in the grain.

Then cheer thee, christian pilgrim,
Let songs of praise ascend
To God our Heavenly Father,
And Christ our Savior-Friend;
Redemption's hour is nearing,
Soon He will bid you come,
To share eternal glory,
And dwell with Christ at home.

Let your Light shine.

Says Christ, "Ye are the light of the world. . . . Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."—Matt. 5: 14, 16. Says David, "Thy word is a lamp to my feet and a light to my path."—Ps. 119: 105. A lamp to give light must be trimmed and filled up with oil daily; then it will give a bright and shining light. A lamp laid by for a long time without using will, when lighted, flicker faintly for a moment and then go out. A person who starts to serve God, receives a little light from the lamp (God's word), and then tries to live on this light without receiving fresh supplies of oil (the Spirit of God) daily, soon finds himself in darkness because he has quenched the Spirit (oil). A Christian cannot live on the light he received when he first started to serve God. Any attempt to do it will be unavailing. He must let that light shine, and take the Bible (lamp) daily and seek for new light, and fresh supplies of oil (God's Spirit); and as the well-trimmed lamp supplied with fresh oil dispels the gloom and darkness around, so he will exert an influence around him that will tell for God and his gospel, and thus receive new light from the lamp daily. How many sigh for more light,—wish they could enjoy themselves better,—when they do not let what they have already received shine. God is willing to give light to all who seek for it; but if they will not send out the rays of what they already have, how could they enjoy more? A laboring man cannot live without bread daily; neither can the christian live without bread and oil daily from the Word of God, sanctified through the Spirit. The lamp laid aside, the oil neglected, darkness follows, and how great that darkness! "Awake! thou that sleepest, and Christ shall give thee light."

Are there any whose pathway is covered with clouds of darkness; who feel to say, My leanness, my leanness? See if the lamp has been neglected and the oil out. The word will do no good without it is accompanied by the Spirit; but if the word is truly a lamp to our feet and a light to our path, sanctified to us by the Spirit of God, then we shall have a light that will shine, and the truth will make us free.

The morning of the resurrection is near. Our glorious Deliverer will very soon appear. The nations are preparing war; the mighty men are being waked up, for the day of the Lord is near, it hasteth greatly. Heaven's artillery will soon usher in the battle of the great day of God Almighty. We want in that day a safe hiding-place. Search the Scriptures; ask for the Spirit of the living God, and it will reveal to us the importance of faith in present truth. "Behold he cometh!" The rays of this light from the word of God he wants us to reflect upon all around us. Those who do this are letting their light shine, their lamp is trimmed and burning. Those whose lamps are gone out say, He delayeth his coming; all things continue as they were from the beginning. They are afraid to let this light shine, for it is not popular; it brings persecution along with it; and numbers of professing christians are ready to cry, "Heresy," "Fanaticism," and thus try to obscure the light of those who would let their light shine. But this scene is soon to change. A kingdom of glory is but a little in the distance. One King will reign over it, even the Lord our God. An immortal company will reign with him. Little innocent children, brought from the land of the enemy, the faithful fathers and mothers, brothers and sisters, patriarchs and prophets, all redeemed from death, will be there. They will be an innumerable company, but not one will have a persecuting spirit. No ridicule will be heaped upon the believer in God's word there. Jesus is the resurrection and the life; and they live because he lives—live forever. Another company will join them,—the living, when Christ comes; those who are found giving "meat in due season," letting their light shine. God help us to believe and obey. Those who have their lamps trimmed and burning will go in to the Kingdom of God. May we all be ready. Amen.

An Exhortation.

"What shall I do then with Jesus, which is called Christ?"—Matt. 27: 22.

My object in writing these few lines is that every reader may ask this all-important question—What shall I do with Jesus? not what shall my brother, or sister, or some wicked neighbor do with Jesus, but what shall I do? Some poor wandering soul may say, I will do nothing with Jesus, for him, or against him. But stop and think. "He that is not with me is against me." "He that gathereth not with me, scattereth abroad." You must either accept or reject him. He stands with outstretched arms, calling with the loving voice of a Savior,—"Turn ye, oh! turn ye, for why will ye die?" Jesus has died on the cross to purchase free salvation, and now comes to your door and offers it to you without money and without price. Sinner, reject not the Savior's loving voice and go down to death without a hope of reigning forever with him; but lay hold on eternal life, and when you are done with the cares and business of this world, you may lean your head on Jesus' breast, and breathe your life out sweetly there. Let not the young say religion was not designed for them; when God says, "Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, and the years draw nigh when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." Dear youth, embrace the Savior and do all you can to lead sinners to the fold of Christ. God will give you grace to help in every time of need. He will strengthen you and keep you from sin, if you put your trust in him. And you have the blessed assurance that everything shall work for good to them that love the Lord. God grant that these few lines may be of some good in leading some poor wandering one home to God. Amen.

Is Heaven on Fire?

In a recent number of the Morning Star, I notice an article headed, "DOES THE SOUL SLEEP BETWEEN DEATH AND THE RESURRECTION?"—in which the question is propounded, "What made the apostle Paul 'desire to depart and be with Christ,' but the animating hope that at the death of his body his soul would immediately enter heaven?" Here he takes the soul directly to heaven at death. But immediately after, in referring to the resurrection, the writer remarks,—"The grave will not only give up the body in an immortal state, but hades, or the invisible world, will give up the soul." Thus we learn in the first place, that the saint's soul goes to heaven at death, and in the second place, that it is called from hades at the resurrection. Hence it appears that the soul either retrogrades after the death of the body, or else heaven and hades are synonymous. If the former, what pleasure in going to heaven simply to back down into hades? I had rather take the lower seat first, and afterwards be invited to a higher one. But if heaven and hades are identical, and if the case of the "rich man" is a literal relation of fact, must not heaven be on fire? For, remember, the rich man went to hades (that is to heaven, if hades and heaven are identical,) and was there "tormented" in "flames." Is that the kind of place that saints go to at death, or come from at the resurrection? Or has our friend ignorantly murdered his own theory, in trying to fight a sentiment that he is not acquainted with?

For the Crisis.

The Unfailing Support.

"They that trust in the Lord shall be as Mount Zion, which cannot be removed, but abideth forever."—Ps. 125: 1.

Yes, here is "terra firma;" here is something substantial—a rock which you may rest your full weight upon. Ah! sooner would the mountains forsake their base, and the "everlasting hills be removed,"—yea, sooner would the solid earth herself reel from her orbit, and become the blind victim of chance, than would the Eternal Jehovah betray the confidence of those who trust in him. Even the feeblest saint who puts his trust in Israel's God, is far more secure than are the Rothschilds with their millions, or kings upon their thrones. They, with all their renown and treasure, will be but food for the devouring flames in the great burning day; while he will then be found to be the heir apparent to all the wealth of the universe. Angels, and devils, and men will yield him their admiration.

But it is more especially at the present time, here in this "vale of tears," that this and kindred texts have their application. Says the beloved apostle, "Now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be," &c. Now we are to TRUST; then faith will give place to sight. Here, in the battle-field, we are to experience the power of all conquering faith. It is this childlike, loving confidence in our heavenly Father, the Spirit of God in us, that gives us an earnest of future glory. Then, let trials come;

"Great spoils we shall win
From death, hell and sin,
'Midst outward afflictions, to feel Christ within."

If we are in Christ, and Christ in us, we have nothing to fear. He will order all things for us in the very best possible manner. If Christ—who is "stronger than the strong man armed"—be in us, the great Arch-foe of God and man can no more harm us, by all the trials, afflictions, doubts and fears with which he delights to afflict God's children, than he could harm the eternal Son of God himself.

My dear brother, or sister, are you tried, and afflicted, and tempest-tossed, and earth-sick, and disconsolate? Then sink into the "Everlasting Arms." There is peace, and rest, and joy—yes, even JOY in the midst of all your sorrows. Paul and Silas could sing, and praise God, though surrounded by prison-walls; and so also may you "glory in tribulation," though in the hottest furnace of affliction, in the midst of the deepest trials. You are now fast ripening up for glory—fast adding to your treasure in heaven. Oh, trust in a faithful God! Lean upon the arm of a loving, kind heavenly Father. These trials are the work of an enemy. True, the Lord permits them, but it is because you need them. Yes, rest assured, you will never, while trusting in God, be left to suffer a tithe, or a hair's breadth, beyond what is absolutely needed. O, will you not trust in such a friend—an Almighty Friend as this? Would not a dutiful child confide in a wise, affectionate earthly parent, though he often used the rod? Away, then, with your unbelief! No longer grieve the heart of One who is kinder than the kindest of earthly parents by distrusting him.

Is the tongue of slander let loose, and are false and malicious reports industriously circulated against you? Fear not, but trust in God. In due time he will bring all around right, and if innocent, your character will be completely cleared up. He who has the hearts of all men in his hands, is at the helm. He will see, that your best interests are in no wise jeoparded, but that this severe discipline shall work for your good. Are you poor, despised, friendless? He who owns the entire universe, with all the wealth it contains, to whom "the nations are as a drop in the bucket, and who taketh up the isles as a very little thing," has adopted you as his "son," and styles himself your "Father." Say not you are without friends; all earthly friends are but as "the small dust of the balance," when compared to such a friend as this. And he is devoted to your interests. Anything whatever that concerns you, is the object of his care. Do not say "my little affairs—at least many of them—are too minute, too trivial, to have his attention." It is unbelief that whispers this in your ear. "The very hairs of your head are all numbered."

Are you sick and suffering? Ah! you are the object of God's special care; for Jesus once suffered—suffered far more intensely too than any mortal ever was called to do. And he accomplished a greater work, and will be more "highly exalted" than any mere man. So [illegible] the more you suffer patiently, maintaining through it all the quiet, uncomplaining spirit of Christ, the greater will be your eternal reward in the kingdom of God.

Report of the Conference at North Adams, Mass.

Met according to adjournment May 8th. Preaching in the evening by Bro. S. S. Brewer, from 2 Pet. 1: 5–12. A good practical sermon. Friday, at 8 o'clock A. M., met for business. An investigation of the character of preachers was brought up. After an investigation of charges preferred against Chauncey W. Baker, the following resolution was presented: Resolved, That we as a body consider C. W. Baker unworthy of our confidence and christian fellowship. Passed unanimously. The following preamble and resolution was presented: Whereas, the conference meeting at Bristol, Conn., Feb. 9th, were requested by some outside the conference to investigate the case of Geo. A. Barker, committee were appointed to investigate the case, who report him guilty of charges made against him. Therefore, Resolved, that the report of the committee be accepted, and that we as a conference consider said Geo. A. Barker unworthy of christian fellowship. Passed unanimously.

The preachers made the following report of their labors. Bro. Brazee said he had preached in Cheshire, Plainville, Westfield Farms, Bancroft, Wells' Forge, etc. In Westfield and Wells' Forge especially he thought there was an interest. Was determined to do all he could for the Lord. Bro. Teeple said he had done what he could, and were it not for a fixed principle in the heart to serve God, should be discouraged sometimes. His trust was in the Lord. Bro. Munn said he had felt like going into new places, and had seen quite an interest to hear even in these short evenings. School-house full at De Forrest Corners. Had preached at Danbury, Hattertown, and Bridgeport. At Hattertown thought there was an interest; also in Bridgeport he thought the brethren were coming up. Felt like laboring in new places. Bro. Bellows said he had been in several places in Conn. and Mass. Had some good, some discouraging times. Felt that the Lord was working with those that will let him. At Griswoldville found the brethren in a good state. Bro. Babcock said he had no evil report to bring. Had endeavored to preach the gospel as he understood it. Had preached at Tolland. Some were getting converted to God. Had preached at South Windsor, Bristol, Plymouth Hollow, and other places. He was ready to labor all he could in the vineyard of the Lord. Bro. Gardner said he had labored only in Pawling. Had studied to know the word so as to be able to preach, and was determined to do what he could. Bro. Fox said he came to North Adams over a year ago, calculating to stay two or three weeks. Found them in a divided and distracted state. The Lord opened the way for him to move there. Had met some stern duties; but labored in the fear of the Lord, trying to keep uppermost the principle of vital heart-work. On the whole he thought the cause in North Adams was prospering. Bro. Brewer said he went from last conference to Plymouth Hollow. Had some good meetings. Went from there to Watertown. Although in an inauspicious time, had heard that those present were interested and liked to hear. The last evening quite a good congregation; thought it might result in good. Been to Springfield. There were some good old-fashioned pilgrims there, and it did his soul good to meet with them. Had endeavored to do good, and not hurt, in all his labors. Bro. Starks said, while listening to the reports of the preachers, his heart was stirred, and the things that called us out had called him out. He said the church was firm and steadfast at Plainfield Pond, and believed the Master was soon coming. He was determined to walk in the narrow way that leads unto everlasting life. Said he had order in his family on the farm, and could not succeed without order; and he saw order in the Bible for the church. Felt that he was with us in gospel order, and if he could help the cause of God by joining us he would be glad to do so.

Received a letter from the church at Bristol, Conn., stating that the conference held with them February 9th resulted in good to them and some that came in to hear. They felt the need of more zeal, and it was evident they were on the rise. Bro. Grant had been there. Preached some eight evenings. Had done the church good, and also many that came in. Some were under conviction for sin and want pardon. They maintain two weekly prayer meetings, which are good. The Lord blesses them, and they expect to fight the battle through, and to conquer through Christ. They then write—"We say what we mean, and mean what we say. Let this be the motto."

The times were so hard the church at Plymouth Hollow, Conn., did not send a delegate, but sent word that they were with us in our work in the gospel, and were determined to struggle on to the end of the race. Bro. Fox and Stark joined the conference. Preaching in the evening by Bro. Munn, from 1 Pet. 1: 3–6.

Saturday morning, half past ten, preaching by Bro. Teeple from 2 Tim. 4: 7. At 2 o'clock P. M., Bro. Starks preached from 2 Cor. 3: 18. In the evening Bro. Bellows preached from Rev. 15: 2. After the sermon Bro. Brewer made some very appropriate remarks. Sunday morning, at 9 A. M., met in love-feast. A goodly number gave in their testimony. Broke bread in token of christian fellowship. At half past ten Bro. Munn preached from Jer. 14: 8. In the afternoon Bro. Brewer preached from Heb. 1: 1. His discourse was very instructive, showing the literal fulfillment of prophecy in the past, and that the prophecy concerning the judgment must be as literally fulfilled. At 7 1-2 P. M., Bro. Brewer preached a very interesting discourse on the seven vials. The meeting closed up with intense interest. Seven arose for prayers, and several others manifested deep conviction.

I think the conference was one of the best meetings I ever attended. Love was very prominent among the preachers, and union reigned. Not a discordant note was heard. I expect to hear that under the blessing of God our conference at North Adams will prove of lasting benefit to the church there as well as to others.

GEO. L. TEEPLE, Sec. of Con.

Is Death a Friend or an Enemy?

The first general judgment was executed upon the wicked inhabitants of the old world by water—they perished. But that first death did not destroy all evil. The mortal or Adamic race were perpetuated through Noah and his family, and death still reigned and does yet reign over all who have fallen under its power; but the second death, or, in other words, the second general executive judgment, will not only destroy all the wicked who are then living, but death itself and hell (hades) will be cast into the lake of fire, and this second death will put an end to all evil; "the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

"Death (says the hymn) is the gate to endless joy." According to this theory, the gate to endless joy is to be cast into the lake of fire; consequently those who believe in death as a friend, who is to introduce them to endless joy, have but a poor prospect when viewed in the light of Scripture.

If we had no better hope than that, we might well pray, "Save me from my friend." Our ground of hope is not in (friend) death, but in Jesus, who has personally triumphed over death by his resurrection, and he has promised to give his people a complete and everlasting victory over death. "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written (Hosea 13, 14), . . . O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" The Septuagint of Osee 13: 14 is,—"Where is thy penalty, O death? O hades, where is thy sting?"

Glorious Prospect.

My soul is joyful in view of the bright prospect which is just ahead. Glory be to God! Not far distant, I can view by faith the hills of Zion, clad in immortal beauty; the sacramental host of God's elect, seated among the flowers of Eden; the city, whose street is of pure gold; the river of the water of life, clear as crystal, and in the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, is the tree of life, which bears twelve manner of fruits, and yields the same every month. Alleluia! for the Lord God and the Lamb are the light of the city.

Dear brethren, my longing heart is there. My wings are already plumed for glory. Gladly would I drop this mortal clothing and put on immortality, and with all the redeemed throng step on to Zion's heights. But I must wait till my Redeemer shall come, traveling in the greatness of His strength. O Lord, give me patience to wait, courage to endure hardness as a good soldier of the Prince of peace, and strength to labor in his vineyard, till he come. And then, with all the sanctified, I shall be gathered into the kingdom of God, never more to part. What! never more to part? No. no. Glory to God! Yours on the march for glory. Amen. R. V. LYON.

Treatise on Matt. 24th and 24th.*

BRO. WELLCOME:—Your Treatise on Matt. 24th and 25th is before me. It is quite a help to me on the signs of Jesus' coming, and the history of the darkening of the sun and moon, falling of the stars, and smiting of evil servants. When I saw your book, I said, This is the very thing I want. So I bought one of Bro. Ingham. I would rather give a dollar than not have the book. I carry it wherever I go. May God bless you in publishing this little work. I wish it was in the hands of all those who disbelieve in the signs past.

Meetings in Concord, N. H.

Sunday, Apr. 27th, we commenced meetings in the pleasant meeting-house at the corner of Center and Green streets, in Concord, and continued them until May 4th. The Lord was pleased to give us a signal blessing during these meetings, and restore to many the joys of his salvation. We have seldom seen a deeper work in the hearts of the people than during these meetings. Many have made rapid progress in the conquest of their evil propensities, because they set about the work in earnest; consequently have met with approbation from the Lord, resulting in great peace and joy. Whenever we will "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit," then we can sing, "All is well." The work here looks like getting ready for "the marriage supper of the Lamb." Nothing short of holiness of heart can prepare us for that blessed scene. If we have "hatred, variance," or "strife" in our hearts, we are assured that we "shall not inherit the kingdom." Let us remember the word of the Lord is "for ever . . . settled in heaven." We must comply with the conditions of salvation, or we shall not be saved. Several here seem to be fully convinced of this fact, and have acted accordingly. Roots of bitterness have been destroyed by the sweet influences of heavenly love, produced by the Holy Spirit; hard hearts have been made soft, the careless sinner has become a humble follower of Jesus, and is rejoicing in his love and the blessed hope of the gospel.

Four were buried with Christ in baptism, and came forth rejoicing in a risen Savior. Our love-feast, Sunday morning, May 4th, was a heavenly season. In fifty minutes, forty-five spoke of their love for Jesus, and their determination to endure to the end. It was a time of refreshing to Zion's pilgrims, and will be remembered with pleasure by those who partook of its joys. In the morning about seventy gathered around the sacramental table, and enjoyed a heavenly communion together.

During our meetings, we were assisted by Brn. T. M. Preble, J. Couch, C. S. Emerson, N. Glidden, A. Simpson and B. Locke, who are trying to arouse a wicked world and sleeping church to prepare for the great day of the Lord. Our congregations were large and attentive. In the afternoon and evening of the last day, many who came were unable to get into the house, which was most densely crowded. The prospect for Concord is encouraging.

While in C., we met Bro. Jonas Merriam, the first Editor of the Crisis, with whom we had a very agreeable interview. As usual, he and his companion are rejoicing in the Lord, and waiting for his speedy return to set up his kingdom. Bro. Merriam's eyes are still too weak to endure with comfort a strong artificial light, and on this account was unable to be at our evening meetings.

We had a very pleasant interview with Bro. and Sr. Couch. He is one of the faithful watchmen of these last days, who is sounding an alarm to the careless, and giving glad tidings to those who love the appearing of Jesus. It is a source of great comfort to feel assured that we are near the time when all the saints can meet to part no more; and meet too where sin will be for ever unknown. O Lord, let the glad day speedily come.—O.

Inquiries.

BRN. GRANT AND MORGAN:—I should like to have the following questions answered. Is there proof in the saying of Christ, "A spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have," that beings exist who are immaterial, or etherial, as the Spiritualists say the soul of man is, having a resemblance to the human form, but shadows only?

Is not the term spirit or soul used in Scripture in some places to designate something else than "breath"—viz, 1 Thess. 5: 23; Matt. 26: 41?

What is the true idea contained in 2 Cor. 12: 1–5, and 2 Cor. 4: 16? A. C. J.

To the first inquiry, we should answer in the negative. Angels are called spirits, and one angel "a spirit;" but angels are personal, tangible, material beings. Lot entertained those who visited him, and they ate at his house. Another sat on the stone at the sepulchre where Jesus was laid, and conversed with the women. John "fell down to worship before the feet of the angel" who was sent by Jesus to give instruction relative to the future history of our world. These, and many other passages, show that a spirit, when spoken of as a being, is a material person, with body and parts; and in no case refers to something that leaves man at death.

The declaration quoted from our Savior, in Luke 24: 39, simply proves that "a spirit," or angel, is not made of dust as we are. It will be remembered that Christ "took not on him the seed of Abraham;" hence, he could say, "a spirit," or angel, "hath not flesh and blood as ye see me have."

To the second inquiry, we answer yes, very frequently; but spirit and soul are not used interchangeably in the Bible. The words rendered soul in the Old and New Testaments occur eight hundred and fifty-seven times, but are not rendered spirit once. The words translated spirit occur in both Testaments seven hundred and eighty-three times and are not rendered spirit once.

Spirit and soul are sometimes used to denote a state of mind, or feeling, but never to represent a conscious entity that leaves man at death.

In answer to the third inquiry, we would say, we understand that Paul had a vision of the new heavens and earth; the account of it reads as follows:

"It is not expedient for me doubtless to glory. I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord. I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, whether in the body I cannot tell, or whether out of the body I cannot tell; God knoweth: such a one caught up to the third heaven. And I knew such a man, whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth: How that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. Of such a one will I glory: yet of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities."

The expression, "he was caught up," would be more properly rendered caught away, as shown by critics. Wakefield renders it, "carried away." Thompson, suddenly conveyed." Wiclif, "ravished into paradise." Rheims, "rapt into paradise."

By "third heaven," we understand the new heaven in connection with the new earth, which John also saw, and described in Rev. 21st and 22nd chapters. We read of "the world that then was, being overflowed with water perished;" and of "the heavens and the earth which are now," which is the second; and then Peter says, "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth." This will be the third, or the one seen by Paul and John, in which is to be paradise, as shown in Rev. 2: 7, and 22: 2,—"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." "In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life." These two passages, taken in connection, show first, that "the tree of life . . . "is in the midst of the paradise of God;" and secondly, that "the tree of life" is in the new heavens and earth, associated with the city of the great King; consequently, third heavens, and paradise which Paul saw were the same as seen by John.

When Paul saw the vision, it appears he did not know whether he was carried bodily, or only mentally, as when we see friends in our dreams. While dreaming, we cannot tell whether we are actually present with what we see, or whether it be only a mental picture corresponding in some respects with a mental sight produced by the imagination, when we are awake; as when we think how a city, a friend, or any other object appears, which is absent from us. In some cases the prophet is carried bodily to see and describe certain things; and in others, only mentally. The following are examples of the first: "And he put forth the form of a hand, and took me by a lock of mine head; and the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem, to the door of the inner gate that looketh toward the north."—Ezk. 8: 3. "Afterwards the spirit took me up, and brought me in a vision by the Spirit of God into Chaldea, to them of the captivity." Ezek. 11: 24.

We see no evidence in 2 Cor. 12: 1–5, that Paul left himself and went to paradise; but, suppose such an absurd event were possible for a living man, it would be no proof that a dead man could do it.

We now come to the fourth inquiry, relating to 2 Cor. 4: 16. The verse reads as follows:—"For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." By the "outward man," we understand the physical constitution; and by the "inward," the mental powers and affections. It will be observed that the word man, after "inward," is a word added by the translators; there being nothing in the Greek to correspond with it.

It often happens that christians are exhausted with physical labor, while at the same time their love for God "is renewed day by day." Others while wasting away by disease, are strengthed daily in their christian affection, and sanctification, being more and more weaned from this world, and conformed to Christ. It is a common experience in the lives of those who preach the gospel, when worn down with earnest labor, to feel an increase of the christian grace.

We see no proof in this passage of one man inside of another. We read of the "old man," the "new man," the "outward man," the "inward man," the "hidden man," "wretched man," "vain man," &c., but these are not so many different men; but may be the varied conditions of the same man.—O.

☞ Bro. L. Reimer wishes us to say that his fourth tract, entitled "The future fate of the ungodly," will be out in about two or three weeks.—O.

☞ We should always live in expectation of the Lord Jesus in the clouds, with oil in our lamps, ready for his coming.

An Interesting Sight.

While in Concord, N. H., we had the privilege of visiting with Sr. Lindsey, from Atchinson, Kansas, who witnessed, with many others, the remarkable writing in the heavens, Aug. 11th, 1855. It was seen at 11 o'clock in the evening, and read as follows:—"LORD—JESUS—CHRIST—KINGDOM." One word was given at a time, with a considerable interval between. They were written with fire, resembling chain lightning; or like words made by fireworks in the night. It is said this writing was seen also in Missouri and Wisconsin.

Sr. Lindsey was a Congregationalist who had heard nothing on the immediate coming of Christ; but this writing convinced her the event is near. She now expresses herself as needing patience to wait till Jesus shall appear. Thus the Lord is waking up his children to the great truth, that our King is coming soon. The Lord instructs the prophet Joel to say:—"I will show wonders in the heavens . . . . before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come."—O.

Lottie Sleeps.

We have just heard the sad intelligence that Sister Lottie, the young, accomplished, and amiable bride of Bro. Judson Austin, and daughter of Eld. J. Parry, Sandy Hill, N. Y., has fallen "asleep in Jesus." She died May 21st, with a calm trust in the Savior. She was a lovely christian. May the Lord bind up the broken hearts of the loved ones left to mourn her loss. Our sympathies gush out for the fond husband, a kind father and mother, and affectionate sisters. Thank the Lord for the hope of the resurrection of the dead, and that the hour is near when Fannie and Lottie, now sleeping side by side in the grave, will awake and sing, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

"Fly swifter round ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."—O.

BRO. NEWTON will please accept our thanks for his excellent articles for the Crisis.

We wish to say again to our readers, that Bro. D. F. Newton, of New York, formerly Editor of the Golden Rule, a most excellent monthly, is now the corresponding Editor of the Earnest Christian, a valuable monthly, published at Buffalo and New York, by Benjamin T. Roberts, who is the Editor. Price one dollar a year, in advance, single copies ten cents. Each number contains thirty-two octavo pages. We think it is decidedly the best monthly with which we are acquainted. It stands out in bold relief against the sins of the age, urging men to live holy lives if they expect to be saved.—O.

CORRECTION.—In Sr. A. C. Judson's excellent lines on the "Sabbath Twilight," in the Crisis May 14th, for "gloomy" sunset, in the sixth line from the close, read glowing sunset.

The Unity of Italy.

Upon this point the Catholic of May 3d has the following:—M.

"The uncertainty which has so long hung over Italian affairs appears to be becoming greater every day. The austere and inflexible Ricasoli has been obliged to yield to the more pliant Ratazzi. The former endeavored to restrain Mazzini and his faction by directing against them the power of government; the latter hopes to attain the same end by apparently acting with them, and in reality leading and controlling them. With this view, Garibaldi has been summoned from Caprera, and has been requested to appear in behalf of the King before the Democratic societies. Ratazzi's experiment is a very dangerous one, and if Louis Napoleon or Austria do not interfere, Mazzini will surely gain the ascendant.

The attitude of Piedmont to the Holy See remains the same. The hypocritical and crafty respect of Cavour, the cold and supercilious tone of Ricasoli, as well as the demagogical and insulting attitude of Ratazzi, are but different means used to obtain the same end—to despoil the Pope, and make Rome the capital of the kingdom of Italy. For the present, the ministry bids the Italians wait. The French government has given new assurances, in public and in private, that it will continue to leave its troops at Rome, even in the case of the death of the Holy Father; and, as long as it maintains this determination, Victor Emanuel will have to tarry in some other city of Italy."

The same article concludes with the following:—

"Italy will have yet to pass through many trials before she can attain to that peace and tranquility without which no nation can be great or happy."

Book Notices.

A NEW TRACT.—"The Silence of the Scriptures respecting the Immortality of the SOUL, of the RACE, or of the LOST." By C. F. Hudson. 12mo., 24 pp. 5 cts. single, $8 per 100.

I have just had the privilege of reading the proof sheets of this somewhat elaborate argument on an important point in the great argument concerning immortality. If the soul is immortal, why does not the Bible say so? We need to know it,—it is one of the grandest facts in our universe,—why then is it left unmentioned in blank silence, in all the revelation of God?

The author, we believe, regards this as his best tract, and I think his readers will agree with him. It is packed full, as usual, of thought and fact, but the style is rather more popular, and better adapted to common readers. Perhaps this is owing to its being written on the run, in the great "out doors," at the west; instead of amid the musty parchments, dusty tomes and crypt-like walls of some old library, full of those dead men's treasures, which our Professor likes to dig for full as well as ever a money lover liked to dig for hidden pots of gold. Thanks for the new tract, and thanks to God for the man who writes such tracts. Send orders for it, about June 1st, to this office, or to H. L. HASTINGS.

"THRILLING AND INSTRUCTIVE DEVELOPMENTS among the Roman Catholic clergy, by M. B. Czechowski, edited by J. F. Cotton. 12mo., pp. 286.

A neat and elegantly printed volume, containing an interesting account of the experience of one who was in Europe a Catholic priest, and giving a faint view of the rottenness and abominations which are concealed in the great Romish "whited sepulchre." The author's account of his adventures and sufferings is as interesting a story as is often met with, and contains useful information. H. L. H.

Elder Himes' Birth-day.

On Monday evening, May 19th, the friends of Elder Himes met him in the vestry of the Hudson St. church, to congratulate him on reaching the age of fifty-six years. The services were introduced by Elder A. Hale, with the reading of a portion of the 90th Psalm, and singing the hymn:

Come let us anew, etc.

Elder Morgan offered prayer, when the following resolutions were presented by the President of the society, Elder A. Hale:—

Whereas God in his wisdom has ordained that every man who comes into this world shall have a father, and a mother, and a birth-day—Therefore resolved, that we recognize these several arrangements as divine, universal, and permanent institutions.

Whereas it is generally admitted that as a man's birth-day gives him the first start in the world, so the recurrence of his birth-day is a good time to start anew.

Therefore, Resolved, 1, That we hail with gratitude and sympathy the recurrence of the fifty-sixth anniversary of the birth of our Pastor, brother and old friend, Eld. Joshua V. Himes, which finds him still on the wing with undimmed eye and unabated force, alive and true to the good cause. Resolved, 2, That as we have no doubt that he is all ready to start anew, we gladly tender to him the assurance of our fullest confidence, our warmest sympathy, and our aid to the utmost of our ability.

The motion to adopt being seconded, Elder Hale followed with remarks suggested by the occasion, and the history of the cause which had led so many to an acquaintance with Elder Himes. Elder Morgan then gave full play to a genial and very pleasant range of sentiment, fully endorsing the resolutions. Bro. Apollonio, who was for a long time in the Herald office, and also the "Cry" office in New York, followed Bro. Morgan with a hearty expression of agreement in the sentiments of the resolutions. Others expressed the same good will towards Bro. H. and the cause, when on account of the lateness of the hour the vote was called for, and the resolutions were adopted by a rising and unanimous vote.

Eld. Himes returned his thanks for the manifestations of good will towards himself and the cause, pledging his remaining time and strength to the good work till the end, which he expects shortly to witness.

On motion of Bro. Apollonio, it was voted that a record of the occasion be prepared by Eld. Hale for publication in the Adv. Herald and World's Crisis. After singing the "Shining Shore," Elder Himes gave the benediction, when the friends retired, in good time and mood for sweet rest and pleasant dreams.

Signed A. HALE.

For the Crisis.

Our Work not finished.

I have a few thoughts to present to the lovers of Christ and his kingdom, which I wish them to read, consider, pray over, and consult with the Lord whether they be right thoughts. To lead men to Christ, as a Savior of sinners, is one thing, and a great thing: to instruct them thoroughly in the faith and hope of the gospel, and see them established in it, is quite another thing, and often requires much more wisdom, care and patient labor. It takes many years to turn the mind of a Pagan nation from their idols to Christ. It must be done by close, constant, persevering and patient toil. The same is true in the case of nations enlightened by christianity, and still led by superstition, and vain traditions, and false views of the atonement, and the final results of the gospel scheme, and false hopes in regard to the future LIFE and ABODE of the people of God. Some of those to whom I now speak have experienced the truth of this. The experience of all time shows the same fact. There are many instrumentalities in the gospel field, each working out some part of the great labor of the gospel. The instruments are imperfect; all do not go to the same depth of knowledge, and look at truth from the same standpoint; and the laborers are often found striving against each other. Let all obtain a teachable spirit, work and let others work in the gospel, and more good would follow. When we are sure from God's word that we have found some of the work done in error, do all we can to correct it and set it right. Never quarrel with those who are building on Christ—the foundation; but do all you can to make them "sound in the faith."

It is known to us that large portions of the Christian church at this day are under strange and vain superstitions, entertaining a faith subversive of "the gospel of the kingdom," cherishing hopes without foundation in truth, ignorant of the nature and character of God's kingdom, and the true gospel hope. Sermons, papers, books and tracts by millions, filled with assertions without proof, arguments without logic, and logic on false premises, are constantly coming forth among us, to teach the church and world of the rising generation on religious faith and hope. These contain many good things, valuable things, not to be despised; but they lack something still more valuable. Can we correct all that is error and set all right by the aid God will give us? No. But we can do much towards it, and what we can do we certainly ought to do. This, and this only is acceptable with Christ, to do what we can. I wish to call your attention to what God has caused to be done in this matter in our day.

Thirty years ago Christendom was asleep on the great questions of the second coming of Christ, the time of triumphant victory of the church, the restitution of the earth, and future reign of Christ, etc. Some wrote on them, some preached on them; but the masses of the people knew nothing, comparatively, of these mighty truths which moved the early church and the reformers to energetic action. Within thirty years Christendom has been aroused by the same vital life-giving truths, in a more distinct form since the unsealing of prophecy relating to these things. AROUSED, I say, for but few are yet fully awakened and turned to this subject. But something has been done. And how was it done? Thousands and tens of thousands of christian professors have had their faith and hope corrected by the word of God, and thus prepared to labor with more energy, wisdom, and grace for the salvation of others. Multitudes of sinners have been brought to Christ. Many faithful ones have died in the Lord, in hope of a speedy resurrection to eternal life. Many still live to advance the cause of truth. Mistakes have been made, errors have been taught, some have made shipwreck of their faith. These things are common to all good causes,—the fruits of human weakness.

The time of our Lord's return is not the only item to be revived. The nature of his return, and of his work when he does return, is to be more fully spread abroad. How has this work been carried on? God has raised up "faithful men," who have "not counted their lives dear unto them selves," to face the world and preach the truth; to write it, publish it, and circulate it. In the beginning of the Second Advent movement, men who loved the truth gave fives, tens, hundreds, and even thousands of dollars to send these truths abroad by preachers, books, papers and tracts. Some have continued to do so, and are not weary in well doing. But some of it has been wasted. Yes; well. What important work was ever done by man without waste? Who does business to advantage who risks nothing, and acts for nothing except what he knows will profit? Some seem to think but little has been done; some know but little about it. Open your eyes, stir up your thoughts. Thousands are to-day rejoicing in the blessed hope, distinguished as a peculiar sect. Then there are many thousands more in other churches, who are in the faith, brought there by the proclamation of the Advent nigh, in preaching or writing. Many hundred ministers have become "obedient to the faith," and many others are learning it as fast as they can get rid of their rubbish. God has called many new ones into the work also. We need wisdom, patience, and meekness, to instruct men. Can we expect all professors to be brought to the faith? No; multitudes will perish in error: but let us keep at the work. God will see to that. We know not how much God may accomplish by us. Let us work, "if by all means we may save some."

There is not any thing equal to truth to convert sinners to Christ. Some of us have just begun in this good work. Perhaps millions, or thousands may yet hear and obey the gospel. Who that has spent hundreds or thousands of dollars does not rejoice that he has been enabled by God's grace to do so much for Christ? May our works abound more and more in Christ's cause. I. C. ☞ A heathen in India, whose business was making paper fans, was tearing up, for the purpose, a copy of Matthew's Gospel, which he had obtained from the missionaries. While doing this, his eye fell on the verse, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." He was so struck with these words, that he was led to become an humble inquirer for the truth; and the missionary who reports the case trusts that God has begun a good work in him, and that he will yet preach Christ to his benighted brethren.—Tract Journal.

Report of the Conference at North Adams, Mass.

Met according to adjournment May 8th. Preaching in the evening by Bro. S. S. Brewer, from 2 Pet. 1: 5–12. A good practical sermon. Friday, at 8 o'clock A. M., met for business. An investigation of the character of preachers was brought up. After an investigation of charges preferred against Chauncey W. Baker, the following resolution was presented: Resolved, That we as a body consider C. W. Baker unworthy of our confidence and christian fellowship. Passed unanimously. The following preamble and resolution was presented: Whereas, the conference meeting at Bristol, Conn., Feb. 9th, were requested by some outside the conference to investigate the case of Geo. A. Barker, committee were appointed to investigate the case, who report him guilty of charges made against him. Therefore, Resolved, that the report of the committee be accepted, and that we as a conference consider said Geo. A. Barker unworthy of christian fellowship. Passed unanimously.

The preachers made the following report of their labors. Bro. Brazee said he had preached in Cheshire, Plainville, Westfield Farms, Bancroft, Wells' Forge, etc. In Westfield and Wells' Forge especially he thought there was an interest. Was determined to do all he could for the Lord. Bro. Teeple said he had done what he could, and were it not for a fixed principle in the heart to serve God, should be discouraged sometimes. His trust was in the Lord. Bro. Munn said he had felt like going into new places, and had seen quite an interest to hear even in these short evenings. School-house full at De Forrest Corners. Had preached at Danbury, Hattertown, and Bridgeport. At Hattertown thought there was an interest; also in Bridgeport he thought the brethren were coming up. Felt like laboring in new places. Bro. Bellows said he had been in several places in Conn. and Mass. Had some good, some discouraging times. Felt that the Lord was working with those that will let him. At Griswoldville found the brethren in a good state. Bro. Babcock said he had no evil report to bring. Had endeavored to preach the gospel as he understood it. Had preached at Tolland. Some were getting converted to God. Had preached at South Windsor, Bristol, Plymouth Hollow, and other places. He was ready to labor all he could in the vineyard of the Lord. Bro. Gardner said he had labored only in Pawling. Had studied to know the word so as to be able to preach, and was determined to do what he could. Bro. Fox said he came to North Adams over a year ago, calculating to stay two or three weeks. Found them in a divided and distracted state. The Lord opened the way for him to move there. Had met some stern duties; but labored in the fear of the Lord, trying to keep uppermost the principle of vital heart-work. On the whole he thought the cause in North Adams was prospering. Bro. Brower said he went from last conference to Plymouth Hollow. Had some good meetings. Went from there to Watertown. Although in an inauspicious time, had heard that those present were interested and liked to hear. The last evening quite a good congregation; thought it might result in good. Been to Springfield. There were some good old-fashioned pilgrims there, and it did his soul good to meet with them. Had endeavored to do good, and not hurt, in all his labors. Bro. Starks said, while listening to the reports of the preachers, his heart was stirred, and the things that called us out had called him out. He said the church was firm and steadfast at Plainfield Pond, and believed the Master was soon coming. He was determined to walk in the narrow way that leads unto everlasting life. Said he had order in his family on the farm, and could not succeed without order; and he saw order in the Bible for the church. Felt that he was with us in gospel order, and if he could help the cause of God by joining us he would be glad to do so.

Received a letter from the church at Bristol, Conn., stating that the conference held with them February 9th resulted in good to them and some that came in to hear. They felt the need of more zeal, and it was evident they were on the rise. Bro. Grant had been there. Preached some eight evenings. Had done the church good, and also many that came in. Some were under conviction for sin and want pardon. They maintain two weekly prayer meetings, which are good. The Lord blesses them; and they expect to fight the battle through, and to conquer through Christ. They then write—"We say what we mean, and mean what we say. Let this be the [illegible]

The times were so hard the church at Plymouth Hollow, Conn., did not send a delegate, but sent word that they were with us in our work in the gospel, and were determined to struggle on to the end of the race. Bro. Fox and Stark joined the conference. Preaching in the evening by Bro. Munn, from 1 Pet. 1: 3–6.

Saturday morning, half past ten, preaching by Bro. Teeple from 2 Tim. 4: 7. At 2 o'clock P. M., Bro. Starks preached from 2 Cor. 3: 18. In the evening Bro. Bellows preached from Rev. 15: 2. After the sermon Bro. Brower made some very appropriate remarks. Sunday morning, at 9 A. M., met in love-feast. A goodly number gave in their testimony. Broke bread in token of christian fellowship. At half past ten Bro. Munn preached from Jer. 14: 8. In the afternoon Bro. Brewer preached from Heb. 1: 1. His discourse was very instructive, showing the literal fulfillment of prophecy in the past, and that the prophecy concerning the judgment must be as literally fulfilled. At 7 1-2 P. M., Bro. Brewer preached a very interesting discourse on the seven vials. The meeting closed up with intense interest. Seven arose for prayers, and several others manifested deep conviction.

I think the conference was one of the best meetings I ever attended. Love was very prominent among the preachers, and union reigned. Not a discordant note was heard. I expect to hear that under the blessing of God our conference at North Adams will prove of lasting benefit to the church there as well as to others.

Geo. L. Teeple, Sec. of Con.

Is Death a Friend or an Enemy?

The first general judgment was executed upon the wicked inhabitants of the old world by water—they perished. But that first death did not destroy all evil. The mortal or Adamic race were perpetuated through Noah and his family, and death still reigned and does yet reign over all who have fallen under its power; but the second death, or, in other words, the second general executive judgment, will not only destroy all the wicked who are then living, but death itself and hell (hades) will be cast into the lake of fire, and this second death will put an end to all evil; "the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

"Death (says the hymn) is the gate to endless joy." According to this theory, the gate to endless joy is to be cast into the lake of fire; consequently those who believe in death as a friend, who is to introduce them to endless joy, have but a poor prospect when viewed in the light of Scripture.

If we had no better hope than that, we might well pray, "Save me from my friend." Our ground of hope is not in (friend) death, but in Jesus, who has personally triumphed over death by his resurrection, and he has promised to give his people a complete and everlasting victory over death. "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written (Hosea 13, 14), . . . O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" The Septuagint of Osee 13: 14 is,—"Where is thy penalty, O death? O hades, where is thy sting?"

Glorious Prospect.

My soul is joyful in view of the bright prospect which is just ahead. Glory be to God! Not far distant, I can view by faith the hills of Zion, clad in immortal beauty; the sacramental host of God's elect, seated among the flowers of Eden; the city, whose street is of pure gold; the river of the water of life, clear as crystal, and in the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, is the tree of life, which bears twelve manner of fruits, and yields the same every month. Alleluia! for the Lord God and the Lamb are the light of the city.

Dear brethren, my longing heart is there. My wings are already plumed for glory. Gladly would I drop this mortal clothing and put on immortality, and with all the redeemed throng step on to Zion's heights. But I must wait till my Redeemer shall come, traveling in the greatness of His strength. O Lord, give me patience to wait, courage to endure hardness as a good soldier of the Prince of peace, and strength to labor in his vineyard, till he come. And then, with all the sanctified, I shall be gathered into the kingdom of God, never more to part. What! never more to part? No, no. Glory to God! Yours on the march for glory. Amen. R. V. Lyon.

Treatise on Matt. 24th and 24th.*

Bro. Wellcome:—Your Treatise on Matt. 24th and 25th is before me. It is quite a help to me on the signs of Jesus' coming, and the history of the darkening of the sun and moon, falling of the stars, and smiting of evil servants. When I saw your book, I said, This is the very thing I want. So I bought one of Bro. Ingham. I would rather give a dollar than not have the book. I carry it wherever I go. May God bless you in publishing this little work. I wish it was in the hands of all those who disbelieve in the signs past.

Meetings in Concord, N. H.

Sunday, Apr. 27th, we commenced meetings in the pleasant meeting-house at the corner of Center and Green streets, in Concord, and continued them until May 4th. The Lord was pleased to give us a signal blessing during these meetings, and restore to many the joys of his salvation. We have seldom seen a deeper work in the hearts of the people than during these meetings. Many have made rapid progress in the conquest of their evil propensities, because they set about the work in earnest; consequently have met with approbation from the Lord, resulting in great peace and joy. Whenever we will "cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit," then we can sing, "All is well." The work here looks like getting ready for "the marriage supper of the Lamb." Nothing short of holiness of heart can prepare us for that blessed scene. If we have "hatred, variance," or "strife" in our hearts, we are assured that we "shall not inherit the kingdom." Let us remember the word of the Lord is "for ever . . . settled in heaven." We must comply with the conditions of salvation, or we shall not be saved. Several here seem to be fully convinced of this fact, and have acted accordingly. Roots of bitterness have been destroyed by the sweet influences of heavenly love, produced by the Holy Spirit; hard hearts have been made soft, the careless sinner has become a humble follower of Jesus, and is rejoicing in his love and the blessed hope of the gospel.

Four were buried with Christ in baptism, and came forth rejoicing in a risen Savior. Our love-feast, Sunday morning, May 4th, was a heavenly season. In fifty minutes, forty-five spoke of their love for Jesus, and their determination to endure to the end. It was a time of refreshing to Zion's pilgrims, and will be remembered with pleasure by those who partook of its joys. In the morning about seventy gathered around the sacramental table, and enjoyed a heavenly communion together.

During our meetings, we were assisted by Brn. T. M. Preble, J. Couch, C. S. Emerson, N. Glidden, A. Simpson and B. Locke, who are trying to arouse a wicked world and sleeping church to prepare for the great day of the Lord. Our congregations were large and attentive. In the afternoon and evening of the last day, many who came were unable to get into the house, which was most densely crowded. The prospect for Concord is encouraging.

While in C., we met Bro. Jonas Merriam, the first Editor of the Crisis, with whom we had a very agreeable interview. As usual, he and his companion are rejoicing in the Lord, and waiting for his speedy return to set up his kingdom. Bro. Merriam's eyes are still too weak to endure with comfort a strong artificial light, and on this account was unable to be at our evening meetings.

We had a very pleasant interview with Bro. and Sr. Couch. He is one of the faithful watchmen of these last days, who is sounding an alarm to the careless, and giving glad tidings to those who love the appearing of Jesus. It is a source of great comfort to feel assured that we are near the time when all the saints can meet to part no more; and meet too where sin will be for ever unknown. O Lord, let the glad day speedily come.—o.

Inquiries.

Brn. Grant and Morgan:—I should like to have the following questions answered. Is there proof in the saying of Christ, "A spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have," that beings exist who are immaterial, or etherial, as the Spiritualists say the soul of man is, having a resemblance to the human form, but shadows only?

Is not the term spirit or soul used in Scripture in some places to designate something else than "breath"—viz, 1 Thess. 5: 23; Matt. 26: 41?

What is the true idea contained in 2 Cor. 12: 1–5, and 2 Cor. 4: 16? A. C. J.

To the first inquiry, we should answer in the negative. Angels are called spirits, and one angel "a spirit;" but angels are personal, tangible, material beings. Lot entertained those who visited him, and they ate at his house. Another sat on the stone at the sepulchre where Jesus was laid, and conversed with the women. John "fell down to worship before the feet of the angel" who was sent by Jesus to give instruction relative to the future history of our world. These, and many other passages, show that a spirit, when spoken of as a being, is a material person, with body and parts; and in no case refers to something that leaves man at death.

The declaration quoted from our Savior, in Luke 24: 39, simply proves that "a spirit," or angel, is not made of dust as we are. It will be remembered that Christ "took not on him the seed of Abraham;" hence, he could say, "a spirit," or angel, "hath not flesh and blood as ye see me have."

To the second inquiry, we answer yes, very frequently; but spirit and soul are not used interchangeably in the Bible. The words rendered soul in the Old and New Testaments occur eight hundred and fifty-seven times, but are not rendered spirit once. The words translated spirit occur in both Testaments seven hundred and eighty-three times and are not rendered spirit once.

Spirit and soul are sometimes used to denote a state of mind, or feeling, but never to represent a conscious entity that leaves man at death.

In answer to the third inquiry, we would say, we understand that Paul had a vision of the new heavens and earth; the account of it reads as follows:

"It is not expedient for me doubtless to glory. I will come to visions and revelations of the Lord. I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, whether in the body I cannot tell, or whether out of the body I cannot tell; God knoweth: such a one caught up to the third heaven. And I knew such a man, whether in the body, or out of the body, I cannot tell; God knoweth: How that he was caught up into paradise, and heard unspeakable words, which it is not lawful for a man to utter. Of such a one will I glory: yet of myself I will not glory, but in mine infirmities."

The expression, "he was caught up," would be more properly rendered caught away, as shown by critics. Wakefield renders it, "carried away." Thompson, suddenly conveyed." Wiclif, "ravished into paradise." Rheims, "rapt into paradise."

By "third heaven," we understand the new heaven in connection with the new earth, which John also saw, and described in Rev. 21st and 22nd chapters. We read of "the world that then was, being overflowed with water perished;" and of "the heavens and the earth which are now," which is the second; and then Peter says, "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth." This will be the third, or the one seen by Paul and John, in which is to be paradise, as shown in Rev. 2: 7, and 22: 2,—"To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God." "In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life." These two passages, taken in connection, show first, that "the tree of life . . . "is in the midst of the paradise of God;" and secondly, that "the tree of life" is in the new heavens and earth, associated with the city of the great King; consequently, third heavens, and paradise which Paul saw were the same as seen by John.

When Paul saw the vision, it appears he did not know whether he was carried bodily, or only mentally, as when we see friends in our dreams. While dreaming, we cannot tell whether we are actually present with what we see, or whether it be only a mental picture corresponding in some respects with a mental sight produced by the imagination, when we are awake; as when we think how a city, a friend, or any other object appears, which is absent from us. In some cases the prophet is carried bodily to see and describe certain things; and in others, only mentally. The following are examples of the first: "And he put forth the form of a hand, and took me by a lock of mine head; and the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem, to the door of the inner gate that looketh toward the north."—Ezk. 8: 3. "Afterwards the spirit took me up, and brought me in a vision by the Spirit of God into Chaldea, to them of the captivity." Ezek. 11: 24.

We see no evidence in 2 Cor. 12: 1–5, that Paul left himself and went to paradise; but, suppose such an absurd event were possible for a living man, it would be no proof that a dead man could do it.

We now come to the fourth inquiry, relating to 2 Cor. 4: 16. The verse reads as follows:—"For which cause we faint not; but though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day." By the "outward man," we understand the physical constitution; and by the "inward," the mental powers and affections. It will be observed that the word man, after "inward," is a word added by the translators; there being nothing in the Greek to correspond with it.

It often happens that christians are exhausted with physical labor, while at the same time their love for God "is renewed day by day." Others while wasting away by disease, are strengthed daily in their christian affection, and sanctification, being more and more weaned from this world, and conformed to Christ. It is a common experience in the lives of those who preach the gospel, when worn down with earnest labor, to feel an increase of the christian grace.

We see no proof in this passage of one man inside of another. We read of the "old man," the "new man," the "outward man," the "inward man," the "hidden man," "wretched man," "vain man," &c., but these are not so many different men; but may be the varied conditions of the same man.—o.

☞ Bro. L. Reimer wishes us to say that his fourth tract, entitled "The future fate of the ungodly," will be out in about two or three weeks.—o.

☞ We should always live in expectation of the Lord Jesus in the clouds, with all in our lamps, ready for his coming.

An Interesting Sight.

While in Concord, N. H., we had the privilege of visiting with Sr. Lindsey, from Atchinson, Kansas, who witnessed, with many others, the remarkable writing in the heavens, Aug. 11th, 1855. It was seen at 11 o'clock in the evening, and read as follows:—"Lord—Jesus—Christ—kingdom." One word was given at a time, with a considerable interval between. They were written with fire, resembling chain lightning; or like words made by fireworks in the night. It is said this writing was seen also in Missouri and Wisconsin.

Sr. Lindsey was a Congregationalist who had heard nothing on the immediate coming of Christ; but this writing convinced her the event is near. She now expresses herself as needing patience to wait till Jesus shall appear. Thus the Lord is waking up his children to the great truth, that our King is coming soon. The Lord instructs the prophet Joel to say:—"I will show wonders in the heavens . . . . before the great and the terrible day of the Lord come."—o.

Lottie Sleeps.

We have just heard the sad intelligence that Sister Lottie, the young, accomplished, and amiable bride of Bro. Judson Austin, and daughter of Eld. J. Parry, Sandy Hill, N. Y., has fallen "asleep in Jesus." She died May 21st, with a calm trust in the Savior. She was a lovely christian. May the Lord bind up the broken hearts of the loved ones left to mourn her loss. Our sympathies gush out for the fond husband, a kind father and mother, and affectionate sisters. Thank the Lord for the hope of the resurrection of the dead, and that the hour is near when Fannie and Lottie, now sleeping side by side in the grave, will awake and sing, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

"Fly swifter round ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."—o.

Bro. Newton will please accept our thanks for his excellent articles for the Crisis.

We wish to say again to our readers, that Bro. D. F. Newton, of New York, formerly Editor of the Golden Rule, a most excellent monthly, is now the corresponding Editor of the Earnest Christian, a valuable monthly, published at Buffalo and New York, by Benjamin T. Roberts, who is the Editor. Price one dollar a year, in advance, single copies ten cents. Each number contains thirty-two octavo pages. We think it is decidedly the best monthly with which we are acquainted. It stands out in bold relief against the sins of the age, urging men to live holy lives if they expect to be saved.—o.

Correction.—In Sr. A. C. Judson's excellent lines on the "Sabbath Twilight," in the Crisis May 14th, for "gloomy" sunset, in the sixth line from the close, read glowing sunset.

The Unity of Italy.

Upon this point the Catholic of May 3d has the following:—m.

"The uncertainty which has so long hung over Italian affairs appears to be becoming greater every day. The austere and inflexible Ricasoli has been obliged to yield to the more pliant Ratazzi. The former endeavored to restrain Mazzini and his faction by directing against them the power of government; the latter hopes to attain the same end by apparently acting with them, and in reality leading and controlling them. With this view, Garibaldi has been summoned from Caprera, and has been requested to appear in behalf of the King before the Democratic societies. Ratazzi's experiment is a very dangerous one, and if Louis Napoleon or Austria do not interfere, Mazzini will surely gain the ascendant.

The attitude of Piedmont to the Holy See remains the same. The hypocritical and crafty respect of Cavour, the cold and supercilious tone of Ricasoli, as well as the demagogical and insulting attitude of Ratazzi, are but different means used to obtain the same end—to despoil the Pope, and make Rome the capital of the kingdom of Italy. For the present, the ministry bids the Italians wait. The French government has given new assurances, in public and in private, that it will continue to leave its troops at Rome, even in the case of the death of the Holy Father; and, as long as it maintains this determination, Victor Emanuel will have to tarry in some other city of Italy."

The same article concludes with the following:—

"Italy will have yet to pass through many trials before she can attain to that peace and tranquility without which no nation can be great or happy."

Book Notices.

A New Tract.—"The Silence of the Scriptures respecting the Immortality of the Soul, of the Race, or of the Lost." By C. F. Hudson. 12mo., 24 pp. 6 cts. single, $3 per 100.

I have just had the privilege of reading the proof sheets of this somewhat elaborate argument on an important point in the great argument concerning immortality. If the soul is immortal, why does not the Bible say so? We need to know it,—it is one of the grandest facts in our universe,—why then is it left unmentioned in blank silence, in all the revelation of God?

The author, we believe, regards this as his best tract, and I think his readers will agree with him. It is packed full, as usual, of thought and fact, but the style is rather more popular, and better adapted to common readers. Perhaps this is owing to its being written on the run, in the great "out doors," at the west; instead of amid the musty parchments, dusty tomes and crypt-like walls of some old library, full of those dead men's treasures, which our Professor likes to dig for full as well as ever a money lover liked to dig for hidden pots of gold. Thanks for the new tract, and thanks to God for the man who writes such tracts. Send orders for it, about June 1st, to this office, or to H. L. Hastings.

Elder Himes' Birth-day.

On Monday evening, May 19th, the friends of Elder Himes met him in the vestry of the Hudson St. church, to congratulate him on reaching the age of fifty-six years. The services were introduced by Elder A. Hale, with the reading of a portion of the 90th Psalm, and singing the hymn:

Come let us anew, etc.

Elder Morgan offered prayer, when the following resolutions were presented by the President of the society, Elder A. Hale:—

Whereas God in his wisdom has ordained that every man who comes into this world shall have a father, and a mother, and a birth-day—Therefore resolved, that we recognize these several arrangements as divine, universal, and permanent institutions.

Whereas it is generally admitted that as a man's birth-day gives him the first start in the world, so the recurrence of his birth-day is a good time to start anew.

Therefore, Resolved, 1, That we hail with gratitude and sympathy the recurrence of the fifty-sixth anniversary of the birth of our Pastor, brother and old friend, Eld. Joshua V. Himes, which finds him still on the wing with undimmed eye and unabated force, alive and true to the good cause. Resolved, 2, That as we have no doubt that he is all ready to start anew, we gladly tender to him the assurance of our fullest confidence, our warmest sympathy, and our aid to the utmost of our ability.

The motion to adopt being seconded, Elder Hale followed with remarks suggested by the occasion, and the history of the cause which had led so many to an acquaintance with Elder Himes. Elder Morgan then gave full play to a genial and very pleasant range of sentiment, fully endorsing the resolutions. Bro. Apollonio, who was for a long time in the Herald office, and also the "Cry" office in New York, followed Bro. Morgan with a hearty expression of agreement in the sentiments of the resolutions. Others expressed the same good will towards Bro. H. and the cause, when on account of the lateness of the hour the vote was called for, and the resolutions were adopted by a rising and unanimous vote.

Eld. Himes returned his thanks for the manifestations of good will towards himself and the cause, pledging his remaining time and strength to the good work till the end, which he expects shortly to witness.

On motion of Bro. Apollonio, it was voted that a record of the occasion be prepared by Eld. Hale for publication in the Adv. Herald and World's Crisis. After singing the "Shining Shore," Elder Himes gave the benediction, when the friends retired, in good time and mood for sweet rest and pleasant dreams.

Signed A. Hale.

For the Crisis.

Our Work not finished.

I have a few thoughts to present to the lovers of Christ and his kingdom, which I wish them to read, consider, pray over, and consult with the Lord whether they be right thoughts. To lead men to Christ, as a Savior of sinners, is one thing, and a great thing: to instruct them thoroughly in the faith and hope of the gospel, and see them established in it, is quite another thing, and often requires much more wisdom, care and patient labor. It takes many years to turn the mind of a Pagan nation from their idols to Christ. It must be done by close, constant, persevering and patient toil. The same is true in the case of nations enlightened by christianity, and still led by superstition, and vain traditions, and false views of the atonement, and the final results of the gospel scheme, and false hopes in regard to the future life and abode of the people of God. Some of those to whom I now speak have experienced the truth of this. The experience of all time shows the same fact. There are many instrumentalities in the gospel field, each working out some part of the great labor of the gospel. The instruments are imperfect; all do not go to the same depth of knowledge, and look at truth from the same standpoint; and the laborers are often found striving against each other. Let all obtain a teachable spirit, work and let others work in the gospel, and more good would follow. Where we see more from God's word that we have found some of the work done in error, do all we can to correct it and set it right. Never quarrel with those who are building on Christ—the foundation; but do all you can to make them "sound in the faith."

It is known to us that large portions of the Christian church at this day are under strange and vain superstitions, entertaining a faith subversive of "the gospel of the kingdom," cherishing hopes without foundation in truth, ignorant of the nature and character of God's kingdom, and the true gospel hope. Sermons, papers, books and tracts by millions, filled with assertions without proof, arguments without logic, and logic on false premises, are constantly coming forth among us, to teach the church and world of the rising generation on religious faith and hope. These contain many good things, valuable things, not to be despised; but they lack something still more valuable. Can we correct all that is error and set all right by the aid God will give us? No. But we can do much towards it, and what we can do we certainly ought to do. This, and this only is acceptable with Christ, to do what we can. I wish to call your attention to what God has caused to be done in this matter in our day.

Thirty years ago Christendom was asleep on the great questions of the second coming of Christ, the time of triumphant victory of the church, the restitution of the earth, and future reign of Christ, etc. Some wrote on them, some preached on them; but the masses of the people knew nothing, comparatively, of these mighty truths which moved the early church and the reformers to energetic action. Within thirty years Christendom has been aroused by the same vital life-giving truths, in a more distinct form since the unsealing of prophecy relating to these things. Aroused, I say, for but few are yet fully awakened and turned to this subject. But something has been done. And how was it done? Thousands and tens of thousands of christian professors have had their faith and hope corrected by the word of God, and thus prepared to labor with more energy, wisdom, and grace for the salvation of others. Multitudes of sinners have been brought to Christ. Many faithful ones have died in the Lord, in hope of a speedy resurrection to eternal life. Many still live to advance the cause of truth. Mistakes have been made, errors have been taught, some have made shipwreck of their faith. These things are common to all good causes,—the fruits of human weakness.

The time of our Lord's return is not the only item to be revived. The nature of his return, and of his work when he does return, is to be more fully spread abroad. How has this work been carried on? God has raised up "faithful men," who have "not counted their lives dear unto themselves," to face the world and preach the truth; to write it, publish it, and circulate it. In the beginning of the Second Advent movement, men who loved the truth gave fives, tens, hundreds, and even thousands of dollars to send these truths abroad by preachers, books, papers and tracts. Some have continued to do so, and are not weary in well doing. But some of it has been wasted. Yes; well. What important work was ever done by man without waste? Who does business to advantage who risks nothing, and acts for nothing except what he knows will profit? Some seem to think but little has been done; some know but little about it. Open your eyes, stir up your thoughts. Thousands are to-day rejoicing in the blessed hope, distinguished as a peculiar sect. Then there are many thousands more in other churches, who are in the faith, brought there by the proclamation of the Advent nigh, in preaching or writing. Many hundred ministers have become "obedient to the faith," and many others are learning it as fast as they can get rid of their rubbish. God has called many new ones into the work also. We need wisdom, patience, and meekness, to instruct men. Can we expect all professors to be brought to the faith? No; multitudes will perish in error: but let us keep at the work. God will see to that. We know not how much God may accomplish by us. Let us work, "if by all means we may save some."

There is not any thing equal to truth to convert sinners to Christ. Some of us have just begun in this good work. Perhaps millions, or thousands may yet hear and obey the gospel. Who that has spent hundreds or thousands of dollars does not rejoice that he has been enabled by God's grace to do so much for Christ? May our works abound more and more in Christ's cause. I. C. Wellcome.

☞ A heathen in India, whose business was making paper fans, was tearing up, for the purpose, a copy of Matthew's Gospel, which he had obtained from the missionaries. While doing this, his eye fell on the verse, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." He was so struck with those words, that he was led to become an humble inquirer for the truth; and the missionary who reports the case trusts that God has begun a good work in him, and that he will yet preach Christ to his benighted brethren.—Tract Journal.

Salt as Anthelmintic.—It is now less than a week since our attention was called to the case of a child, the son of a vegetarian, who eschews salt—strangely enough regarding its influence as little if anything less than that of an active poison. We were told the child had little appetite except at times; food distressed the stomach, &c., with other symptoms, which clearly pointed out what we pronounced a case of worms. (Ascarides.) We respectfully suggest to the reader to put our statement and the following from the Scientific American together, and then draw their own conclusions.—H.

"Animals that are permitted to roam in the salt marshes are generally the most healthy, as they consume a large amount of saline material. The antiseptic property of salt is too well known and appreciated by most husbandmen, and the farmer might as well think of entirely dispensing with food as to fail in seasoning food with salt. No animal can long exist without salt; in the stomach it operates favorably, and has a healthy action on the liver, it also prevents the food from running into fermentation, and is death on intestinal parasites."

Edwin Burnham expects to commence efforts in one of the churches in the city of St. Johns, N. B., on the third Sunday in June. If the friends in the Provinces wish to correspond with him while there, they can address him in care of S. F. Mathews.

Correspondence.

From C. P. Churchill.

Dearly Beloved:—I am yet in a world of death, but striving for the kingdom of God. Were it not for the sweet prospect of soon coming redemption, my breaking heart would despair. But very soon the opening heavens will be lit up with the glory of the descending Redeemer. Then those loved ones that now sleep in the dust of the earth will awake and sing, spring to immortal life beyond the grave.

Then in the new creation, beyond the dismal tomb,
We'll meet our friends and loved ones, robed in immortal bloom,
Beyond this world of dying, death's cold, dark chilling flood,
Yes, we shall meet in glory, in the paradise of God.

O yes, we shall meet again; not as when we parted, in tears and groans, and bitter wailing, but with songs and everlasting joy, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. As we last gazed on those lovely countenances they were changed. The crimson glow of health had given way to a death-like palor. Those once beautiful eyes were sealed up in the dreamless repose of death. The grasp of that friendly hand—how weak! The last good by—how faint! As we take a last long look at that dear face, breathe a last good by, oh! what heart-rending agony is ours. But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, for the hope set before us in the blessed gospel. Master Jesus has the keys of death and the grave, and lives to die no more. Ere long he will open death's prison doors, throw down his mighty bars, and bring his loved ones, all beautiful with immortality—eternal life—all lovely beyond conception with the image and glory of God, from the land of the enemy. Glory to God! we shall meet again, but O how changed! In the grasp of that friendly hand shall be immortal friendship. That dear face, once pale in death, now blooms with immortal loveliness. We shall meet the fond gaze of those love-lit eyes, once dim in death, glittering not with sorrow's tears, but with the mild radiance of undying youth. That sweet voice now hushed, shall gush from immortal lungs in strains of matchless sweetness, shall mingle in that mighty, triumphant song of victory, Alleluia! the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!

Dear brethren and sisters, pray for me, that God would preserve me blameless unto his heavenly kingdom.

Washburn, Aroostook, Me.

From Eld. Wm. Sweet.

Bro. Grant:—I left home about the 1st of Feb. Preached at Pekin three times, and left there to hold a series of meetings in Canton, six miles north of Hesper, Iowa, near Bro. Nichols', where I preached twice to full houses of attentive hearers, but am sorry to say I had to leave there so soon. The E. P. Methodists had appointed a protracted meeting, to be continued some days. At Hesper, found our much esteemed Sr. McKee was dead. Bro. Ross' family had been sick, and others not able to attend meetings, so I preached once, and left for Howard Co., Iowa, some thirty miles. Found Eld. Philips' settlement, some four miles north of the centre. He is an able christian preacher, with a church of some thirty members, all quite friendly to our views. Went to Bro. Pilcher's, near Riceville, Michel Co. He is a good Brother; lives all alone as to church privileges. His house is a home for preachers. From there I went to Floyd, where I preached in all some eight times; had good meetings; but the great trouble was, the E. P. Methodists had been holding a series of meetings, day and night, for some five weeks; they stirred up all the opposition they could, and kept up opposite meetings all the time I was there; at the same time there fell some fifteen inches of snow, which blew into large drifts, making the roads impassable; so I left the brethren, praying God to bless them, and reached home the 12th of March, thinking I had done but little good.

Obituary Notice.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Southbridge, Mass., April 1st, 1862, my beloved wife, Mary E. Brackett, aged thirty-two years, daughter of William and Matilda McKinstry. Her disease was scrofula.

We were buried in baptism Nov., 1849, by Eld. Charles McReading; since that time it has always been her joy and delight to meet with the children of God, and to join in testimony and song with those that love the Lord. In her loss I feel that I have been deprived of my best earthly friend. Whenever the world went hard with me, she was always ready with words of cheer and encouragement; but her cheerful voice is hushed in death, and we are left to mourn, but not as those "that have no hope." By the grace of God she could say, "Yes, though I walk through the valley and shadow of death, I will fear no evil; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." And glory to God, they were her comfort and support when all things earthly failed.

A few days before her death she broke out singing these beautiful lines—

"What's this that steals, that steals upon my frame?
Is it death? Is it death?
That soon will quench, will quench this vital flame,
Is it death? Is it death?"

As the family, including her aged parents, stood by her bedside, she exhorted us to prove faithful. Said she, "I expect to sleep quietly in the grave until the resurrection, and then we shall all go into the kingdom together." At another time she sung those familiar words which we had often sung together—

"Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly dove,
With all thy quickening powers," etc.

Her funeral was attended in the Methodist Church. Bro. David Pratt spoke to the friends from 1 Cor. 15th chapter. He was assisted in the services by Eld. N. B. George. The blessed hope of the resurrection was brought to view.

George Brackett.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamship Scotia brings news from Liverpool to the 10th inst., and from Queenstown to the 11th.

The Independence Belge asserts that the object of Lavallette's recent visit to London was to induce England to consent to common intervention in America, and England agreed, on condition that the Roman question was first settled. The French Government gave ear to this, and it has led to a conference relative to intervention.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Herald says it is beyond question that a re-organization of the South is seriously contemplated by the French government.

Rumors of the approaching solution of the Roman question are becoming more and more general.

It is reported that the Papal Government are prepared for a sudden departure.

The ex-King of Naples has left Rome. His destination is unknown.

A Paris correspondent says, in explanation of the present attitude of France: "If the truth must be told, the decided ill will of a large and powerful party in France toward the Union cause dates from the admission of the Orleans Princes into the Federal service."

LATER.

By the arrival of the Kangaroo, and the Hibernian, we have news from Liverpool to the 14th inst., and Queenstown to the 15th.

The Times says that the capture of New Orleans is a hard blow to the South and a great triumph for the North and is another proof that the North can do the Confederates more harm than the Confederates can do them.

It is reported that there has been a military conspiracy in St. Petersburg in favor of Poland.

French political news is unimportant.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Attack on Gen. Banks.

Washington, May 25. Dispatches received by the War department state that General Banks was attacked at Winchester this morning, and has fallen back towards Martinsburg and Harper's Ferry. The enemy are reported to be in large force, and many reports state that the rebel force has left Richmond and moved North to take the offensive.

A dispatch received to-night states that Gen. Banks has made good his retreat across the Potomac at Williamsport. Gen. Rufus Saxton is in command at Harper's Ferry.

The city is intensely excited by the intelligence, and mere rumors increase the excitement.

The enemy under Generals Ewell and Johnson with a superior force gave battle to Gen. Banks this morning at daylight at Winchester.

Gen. Banks fought them six hours and then retired in the direction of Martinsburg, with what loss is not known.

Gen. Banks' Official Report

Headquarters, Martinsburg,
May 25—2-40, P. M.

To Hon. E. M. Stanton.—The rebels attacked us this morning at daybreak in great force. Their force was estimated at 15,000, consisting of Ewell's and Jackson's divisions. The fire of the pickets began with the light and followed by the artillery until the lines were fully under fire on both sides.

The left wing stood firmly, holding its ground well, and the right did the same, when two regiments broke their lines under the fire of the enemy. The right wing fell back, and we were ordered to withdraw, and the troops passed through the town in considerable confusion. They were quickly re-formed on the other side and continued their march in good order to Martinsburg, a distance of twenty-two miles. Our trains are in advance and will cross the river in safety. Our entire force engaged was less than 4000, consisting of Donnelly's brigades with two regiments of cavalry under Gen. Hatch and two batteries of artillery. Our loss was considerable, as was that of the enemy, but cannot now be stated. We were reinforced by the 15th Maine regiment, which did good service, and a regiment of cavalry. A prisoner captured this afternoon says the rebel force in our rear is to be strengthened, and that their purpose is to enter Maryland at two points, Harper's Ferry and Williamsport. He confirms all we have heard in regard to the rebel force here. We all passed the Potomac safe—men, trains and all. I think of making a march of 35 miles.

N. P. Banks,
Major General Commanding.

Washington, May 25. The President takes military possession of all the railroads in the United States, by virtue of the authority vested by an act of Congress, from after this date until further orders, and directs that the respective railroad companies, their officers and servants, shall hold themselves in readiness for the transportation of troops and munitions of war as may be ordered by the military authorities to the exclusion of all other business.

By order of the Secretary of War.

M. C. Meigs, Quartermaster General.

New York, May 26. The Herald's Washington despatch says prompt efforts have been made to reinforce Gen. Banks, and it is supposed that by to-day Gen. Miles will have reinforced Banks with a considerable force.

The World says the immense rebel armies which made their appearance so suddenly in Western Virginia, give color to a rumor from a Kentucky paper, that it is the intention of the rebel leaders to withdraw from the coast and invade Northern States, if possible, in two columns. One by way of Pennsylvania under Gen. Joe Johnson, and another under Gen. Lee marching from Cumberland Gap to Louisville, and if possible, crossing the Ohio to Cincinnati.

We have no fears but a few days will turn the tide of victory in the right direction.

Cincinnati, May 24. Col. Heth with 3000 rebels attacked our forces under Col. Crook yesterday, at Lewisburg. After a severe fight the rebels were completely routed. Our loss was ten killed, 40 wounded and 8 missing. The rebel loss was much greater. We captured four cannon, 200 stand of arms, 100 prisoners, a Lieutenant Colonel, one Major, several Captains and Lieutenants.

Fortress Monroe, May 24. It is reported that Gen. Burnside has taken Raleigh.

The Ellen Terry arrived from Newbern this afternoon. She reports that the American flag was raised in Raleigh some three or four days ago by the citizens.

The Volunteer Militia Called Out.

The general and special orders issued this morning by His Excellency the Governor and Commander-in-Chief are startling in their nature, as well as in regard to their object. It will be seen that all the available Volunteer Militia force of the Commonwealth is called out instanter, without the interruption of the customary military forms. No doubt Governor Andrew will be justified in his declaration that "Massachusetts will repeat the patriotism, enthusiasm and glory of April '61."

A Proclamation.

By the Gov. and Commander in-Chief.

Men of Massachusetts—The wily and barbarous horde of traitors to the People, to the Government, to our Country and to Liberty menace again the national capital. They have attacked and routed Major General Banks—are advancing on Harper's Ferry—and are marching on Washington.

The President calls on Massachusetts to rise once more for its rescue and defense. The whole active militia will be summoned by a general order issued from the office of the Adjutant General to report on Boston Common to-morrow.

They will march to relieve and avenge their brethren and friends, to oppose with fiery zeal and courageous patriotism the progress of the foe.

May God encourage their hearts and strengthen their arms, and may he inspire the Government and all the people.

Given at headquarters in Boston, at eleven o'clock of this Sunday evening, May 25th, A. D., 1862. John A. Andrew.

Washington, May 26. The following is the latest dispatch received at the War Department from General Banks:—

Williamsport, May 26.

Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, Sec. of War.

We believe that our whole force, trains and all, will cross in safety. The men are in fine spirits, and crossing in order.

The labor of last night was fearful. The enemy followed us last night on our march, but has not made his appearance this morning.

The news of your movements South has unquestionably caused them to look out for their safety.

Your dispatch was read to the troops this morning amid the heartiest cheers.

N. P. Banks, Major Gen. Commanding.

Washington, May 26. The excitement of yesterday has subsided, and all seem convinced that if Gen. Banks is properly reinforced, he will not only be able to check any advance of the enemy, but to drive them back.

The dispatches received by Gov. Andrew last night from the Secretary of War, show that the Government is aware that no important military movement was necessary to preserve the Federal Capital.

The first dispatch stated that Gen. Banks had been defeated, and the enemy were marching in full force on Harper's Ferry.

The second dispatch stated that reliable information had been received from various sources that the enemy were also marching on Washington in great numbers, and the Governor was ordered to forward without delay all the troops that could be raised, with militia and volunteers.

At two o'clock, two dispatches were received from Gen. Banks, one dated at Martinsburg, and the other between Martinsburg and Williamsport, in which he said that he had saved his baggage train and most of his command, and should without doubt cross the river in safety.

New York, May 26. Special dispatches from Washington state that it is rumored that Jackson is retreating more rapidly than he advanced.

A balloon reconnoissance from Gen. McClellan's headquarters, disclosed the fact that the rebels were evacuating Richmond.

ITEMS.

☞ The state of Europe is thus described by the paragrapher of the Boston Post:—

"Hungry workmen, in procession, parade the streets of Liverpool and Paris, in the French Legislative body, a serious quarrel is springing up with the Emperor, which may ere long lead to another coup, at Rome, all was alarm, under an apprehension of a 'popular demonstration,' in consequence of which the French garrison had been placed under arms, Corso closed, and the Papal troops confined to the barracks. In Greece, a rebellion is in full blast, and in Turkey, its next door neighbor, the Turks and Christians have just been having a free fight, resulting in the sacrifice, some reports say, of a thousand lives. With troubles thus all round in the old world—we do not know that even with rebellion on our hands, the United States is not, after all, about the quietest place on earth for a Peace-Society man to dwell in."

Renunciation of Spiritualism.—Rev. O. D. Miller of Nashua, N. H., who says he has been a spiritualist medium for nearly eleven years, writes to the Christian Freeman of the 31st ult., that seeing no prospect of good resulting from spiritualism, and that it has been the source of a great deal of suffering and harm to him, he has thought it his duty to renounce it, and hopes others may profit by his sad experience. Further, he enters his solemn protest against it, as fraught with much evil to the community.

French Naval Conference.—A conference of naval officers is reported to have met recently in Paris at the house of a vice-admiral, to consider the great question raised by the Merrimac and Monitor encounter, and they are understood to have resolved unanimously that France can build as many Monitors in a month as she has arsenals, and that in a year she could fit out a fleet equal to any that the utmost efforts of England could oppose to her.—London News, C. W.

Distress in Manchester.—According to the returns of the chief constable of Manchester, England, made up to Tuesday, April 8th, upwards of eight thousand workmen are totally out of employment in that city alone, while nearly double that number are on short time.

The Empress.—Of late the Empress does not join in the Ministerial deliberations. The reason generally given is, that she was blamed for everything that appeared like a favor extended to the Pope, and this unconsciously, and perhaps undeservedly, makes many bitter enemies.—Paris Letter.

☞ Recent excavations in Rome have disclosed the magnificent entrance to the palace of the Cæsars, called the Olives Palatium. It is the same width as the ordinary Roman roads, and like the Appian Way, is paved with huge blocks of stone.

To Brethren indebted for Tracts.

I have said nothing to you for a good while. I am now almost entirely out of tracts. I want to publish more—also books. I do not intend to get in debt, but pay as I go. I am hoping immediately to make important changes in my business, so as to furnish more books for less money than heretofore. Now all who owe for books will confer a favor by paying up what they owe if they can, or if they are unable to do that, let me know the fact. All the books I have sent you have cost me the money, and I wish to send out more when I can. Those who wish for books or tracts can send their orders as usual. They are free to the poor. Let us hear from you. Direct to H. L. Hastings, Boston, Mass.

P. S. Persons indebted to the Crisis office for books, should send the pay to Bro. Grant as soon as they can conveniently. H. L. H.

Notice.—The Tract Fund.

Tracts of the old approved sorts are soon to be manufactured in large quantities for the Christian Publication Society. Churches or individuals who have contributed to the $500 Tract Fund, can have a portion of their donations returned to them in tracts, if they wish; and they can have the tracts printed with a notice of their place of worship on each one, at a small cost, (say 50 cts.), provided they wish for not less than five hundred copies of any one tract, and will send me immediate directions about it. The price of tracts to contributors will be about 1800 pages for $1.00.

As the $500 Fund is now made up, subscribers who have not paid will remit their subscriptions to Miles Grant, Boston, Mass., as soon as convenient. Persons still wishing to contribute can do likewise, for "yet there is room." H. L. Hastings, President.

Notice.

For the brethren at Machias Port, Me.

I have found a Brother that will come and stay a few weeks in that vicinity, in July, if the brethren wish him. They must notify him soon, so that he can make arrangements to go when some one comes to Boston that will take him on board. Direct to J. W. White, Portsmouth, N. H. This is the man you want. Hiram Munger.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference meeting in Buchanan, Mich., to commence on the evening of the 20th of June, and continue over the following Sabbath. We hope to see a general gathering of our scattered friends at this meeting. Let us make this meeting a subject of prayer, that much good be accomplished. Bro. Israel Dammon is expected to be present.

D. R. & M. S. Mansfield.

Grove and Camp Meeting.

Good news to the happy souls who gathered last year at Tremont, Mass., for divine worship in the grove. There will be another grove and campmeeting in the vicinity of the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass., commencing Tuesday evening, June 24th, 1862, and continuing over the following Sunday. Eld. M. Grant, H. L. Hastings, if possible, and others will be present to preach the word. Many things promise to make this an interesting and profitable meeting. First, the blessing of God upon us last year. Those who were there will welcome us again, and bring others with them. Second its location—easy of access to many churches. It is situated on the Fairhaven and Boston, R. R., at its junction with the Cape Cod R. R., fare reduced on this road from Middleboro and New Bedford. We expect a good representation from New Bedford, Mattapoisett, Plymouth, Carver, Middleboro, Taunton, and perhaps from Boston. Third, its accommodations, a beautiful grove, in the midst of an orderly people; good board provided cheaper than by ourselves, lodging in private dwellings near by, or in tents, as chosen. Fourth, the cheering evidences that we are nearing our eternal home, cannot fail to awaken an unusual interest in every believing heart. Come then, one and all, prepare for a good meeting, pray much about it, come to labor for precious souls, come full of the blessing of Christ, come early, come to stay through the meeting, come, and may many kind friends in Tremont bless the day of our coming. In behalf of many brethren,

H. F. Carpenter.

Annual Conference.

The Western New York General Association will hold their annual conference at Seneca Falls, N. Y., commencing on Thursday evening, June 5th, 1862. This is an important gathering, and all the brethren and sisters within the limits of the association, who possibly can, should endeavor to be present, and aid both by their counsel and means in advocating the cause of our Master. Let us have at least one delegate from every church within the association limits, or beyond, if such church should wish to be recognized among us. A general invitation is extended to all, both ministers and laymen. Come up to the "Feast of Love." By order of the committee of appointments.

E. Burr, Secretary.

Conference Notice.

The next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Conference will be held in Belgrade (Baptist meeting-house) commencing Thursday, June 12th, at six o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. Brethren from abroad will call on Bro. David Rockwood (Rockwood's Corner.) We hope to see a full meeting, and the power of God in our midst to save sinners. Come, brethren and sisters. This is a new place. The hearts of the people are open to feed man and beast, and let us try to feed them with the word of life.

Per order, H. B. Sevey.
I. C. Welcome, Scribe.

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

I find many have got the idea from Bro. Boutell's notice, a few weeks since, that the Wilbraham campmeeting was removed. This is a mistake. The meeting will commence as last year, the last week in August. I was on the ground last week, and the tent frames are all in good order, and the inhabitants are looking forward with more anxiety than ever for the time to arrive when they can hear something on the signs of the times. In due time you will see the appointment from the committee. Hiram Munger.

SALT AN ANTHELMINTIC.—It is now less than a week since our attention was called to the case of a child, the son of a vegetarian, who eschews salt—strangely enough regarding its influence as little if anything less than that of an active poison. We were told the child had little appetite except at times; food distressed the stomach, &c., with other symptoms, which clearly pointed out what we pronounced a case of worms. (Ascarides.) We respectfully suggest to the reader to put our statement and the following from the Scientific American together, and then draw their own conclusions.—M.

"Animals that are permitted to roam in the salt marshes are generally the most healthy, as they consume a large amount of saline material. The antiseptic property of salt is too well known and appreciated by most husbandmen, and the farmer might as well think of entirely dispensing with food as to fail in seasoning food with salt. No animal can long exist without salt; in the stomach it operates favorably, and has a healthy action on the liver, it also prevents the food from running into fermentation, and is death on intestinal parasites."

Notice.

Edwin Burnham expects to commence efforts in one of the churches in the city of St. Johns, N. B., on the third Sunday in June. If the friends in the Provinces wish to correspond with him while there, they can address him in care of S. F. Mathews.

EDWIN BURNHAM.

Correspondence.

From C. F. Churchill.

DEARLY BELOVED:—I am yet in a world of death, but striving for the kingdom of God. Were it not for the sweet prospect of soon coming redemption, my breaking heart would despair. But very soon the opening heavens will be lit up with the glory of the descending Redeemer. Then those loved ones that now sleep in the dust of the earth will awake and sing, spring to immortal life beyond the grave.

Then in the new creation, beyond the dismal tomb,
We'll meet our friends and loved ones, robed in immortal bloom;
Beyond this world of dying, death's cold, dark chilling flood,
Yes, we shall meet in glory, in the paradise of God.

O yes, we shall meet again; not as when we parted, in tears and groans, and bitter wailing, but with songs and everlasting joy, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. As we last gazed on those lovely countenances they were changed. The crimson glow of health had given way to a death-like palor. Those once beautiful eyes were sealed up in the dreamless repose of death. The grasp of that friendly hand—how weak! The last good by—how faint! As we take a last long look at that dear face, breathe a last good by, oh! what heart-rending agony is ours. But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ, for the hope set before us in the blessed gospel. Master Jesus has the keys of death and the grave, and lives to die no more. Ere long he will open death's prison doors, throw down his mighty bars, and bring his loved ones, all beautiful with immortality—eternal life—all lovely beyond conception with the image and glory of God, from the land of the enemy. Glory to God! we shall meet again, but O how changed! In the grasp of that friendly hand shall be immortal friendship. That dear face, once pale in death, now blooms with immortal loveliness. We shall meet the fond gaze of those love-lit eyes, once dim in death, glittering not with sorrow's tears, but with the mild radiance of undying youth. That sweet voice now hushed, shall gush from immortal lungs in strains of matchless sweetness, shall mingle in that mighty, triumphant song of victory, Alleluia! the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!

Dear brethren and sisters, pray for me, that God would preserve me blameless unto his heavenly kingdom.

Washburn, Aroostook, Me.

From Eld. Wm. Sweet.

BRO. GRANT:—I left home about the 1st of Feb. Preached at Pekin three times, and left there to hold a series of meetings in Canton, six miles north of Hesper, Iowa, near Bro. Nichols', where I preached twice to full houses of attentive hearers, but am sorry to say I had to leave there so soon. The E. P. Methodists had appointed a protracted meeting, to be continued some days. At Hesper, found our much esteemed Sr. McKee was dead. Bro. Ross' family had been sick, and others not able to attend meetings, so I preached once, and left for Howard Co., Iowa, some thirty miles. Found Eld. Philips' settlement, some four miles north of the centre. He is an able christian preacher, with a church of some thirty members, all quite friendly to our views. Went to Bro. Pilcher's, near Riceville, Michel Co. He is a good Brother; lives all alone as to church privileges. His house is a home for preachers. From there I went to Floyd, where I preached in all some eight times; had good meetings; but the great trouble was, the E. P. Methodists had been holding a series of meetings, day and night, for some five weeks; they stirred up all the opposition they could, and kept up opposite meetings all the time I was there; at the same time there fell some fifteen inches of snow, which blew into large drifts, making the roads impassable; so I left the brethren, praying God to bless them, and reached home the 12th of March, thinking I had done but little good.

Utica, Minn., March 31st.

Obituary Notice.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Southbridge, Mass., April 1st, 1862, my beloved wife, MARY E. BRACKETT, aged thirty-two years, daughter of William and Matilda McKinstry. Her disease was scrofula.

We were buried in baptism Nov., 1849, by Eld. Charles McReading; since that time it has always been her joy and delight to meet with the children of God, and to join in testimony and song with those that love the Lord. In her loss I feel that I have been deprived of my best earthly friend. Whenever the world went hard with me, she was always ready with words of cheer and encouragement; but her cheerful voice is hushed in death, and we are left to mourn, but not as those "that have no hope." By the grace of God she could say, "Yea, though I walk through the valley and shadow of death, I will fear no evil; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." And glory to God, they were her comfort and support when all things earthly failed.

A few days before her death she broke out singing these beautiful lines—

"What's this that steals, that steals upon my frame?
Is it death? Is it death?
That soon will quench, will quench this vital flame,
Is it death? Is it death?"

As the family, including her aged parents, stood by her bedside, she exhorted us to prove faithful. Said she, "I expect to sleep quietly in the grave until the resurrection, and then we shall all go into the kingdom together." At another time she sung those familiar words which we had often sung together—

"Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly dove,
With all thy quickening powers," etc.

Her funeral was attended in the Methodist Church. Bro. David Pratt spoke to the friends from 1 Cor. 15th chapter. He was assisted in the services by Eld. N. B George. The blessed hope of the resurrection was brought to view.

GEORGE BRACKETT.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamship Scotia brings news from Liverpool to the 10th inst., and from Queenstown to the 11th.

The Independence Belge asserts that the object of Lavallette's recent visit to London was to induce England to consent to common intervention in America, and England agreed, on condition that the Roman question was first settled. The French Government gave ear to this, and it has led to a conference relative to intervention.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Herald says it is beyond question that a re-organization of the South is seriously contemplated by the French government.

Rumors of the approaching solution of the Roman question are becoming more and more general.

It is reported that the Papal Government are prepared for a sudden departure.

The ex-King of Naples has left Rome. His destination is unknown.

A Paris correspondent says, in explanation of the present attitude of France: "If the truth must be told, the decided ill will of a large and powerful party in France toward the Union cause dates from the admission of the Orleans Princes into the Federal service."

LATER.

By the arrival of the Kangaroo, and the Hibernian, we have news from Liverpool to the 14th inst., and Queenstown to the 15th.

The Times says that the capture of New Orleans is a hard blow to the South and a great triumph for the North and is another proof that the North can do the Confederates more harm than the Confederates can do them.

It is reported that there has been a military conspiracy in St. Petersburg in favor of Poland.

French political news is unimportant.

DOMESTIC NEWS.

Attack on Gen. Banks.

Washington, May 25. Dispatches received by the War department state that General Banks was attacked at Winchester this morning, and has fallen back towards Martinsburg and Harper's Ferry. The enemy are reported to be in large force, and many reports state that the rebel force has left Richmond and moved North to take the offensive.

A dispatch received to-night states that Gen. Banks has made good his retreat across the Potomac at Williamsport. Gen. Rufus Saxton is in command at Harper's Ferry.

The city is intensely excited by the intelligence, and mere rumors increase the excitement.

The enemy under Generals Ewell and Johnson with a superior force gave battle to Gen. Banks this morning at daylight at Winchester.

Gen. Banks fought them six hours and then retired in the direction of Martinsburg, with what loss is not known.

GEN. BANKS' OFFICIAL REPORT.

Headquarters, Martinsburg,
May 25—2-40, P. M.

To Hon. E. M. Stanton.—The rebels attacked us this morning at daybreak in great force. Their force was estimated at 15,000, consisting of Ewell's and Jackson's divisions. The fire of the pickets began with the light and followed by the artillery until the lines were fully under fire on both sides.

The left wing stood firmly, holding its ground well, and the right did the same, when two regiments broke their lines under the fire of the enemy. The right wing fell back, and we were ordered to withdraw, and the troops passed through the town in considerable confusion. They were quickly re-formed on the other side and continued their march in good order to Martinsburg, a distance of twenty-two miles. Our trains are in advance and will cross the river in safety. Our entire force engaged was less than 4000, consisting of Donnelly's brigades with two regiments of cavalry under Gen. Hatch and two batteries of artillery. Our loss was considerable, as was that of the enemy, but cannot now be stated. We were reinforced by the 15th Maine regiment, which did good service, and a regiment of cavalry. A prisoner captured this afternoon says the rebel force in our rear is to be strengthened, and that their purpose is to enter Maryland at two points, Harper's Ferry and Williamsport. He confirms all we have heard in regard to the rebel force here. We all passed the Potomac safe—men, trains and all. I think of making a march of 35 miles.

N. P. BANKS,
Major General Commanding.

Washington, May 25. The President takes military possession of all the railroads in the United States, by virtue of the authority vested by an act of Congress, from after this date until further orders, and directs that the respective railroad companies, their officers and servants, shall hold themselves in readiness for the transportation of troops and munitions of war as may be ordered by the military authorities to the exclusion of all other business.

By order of the Secretary of War.
M. C. MEIGS, Quartermaster General.

New York, May 26. The Herald's Washington despatch says prompt efforts have been made to reinforce Gen. Banks, and it is supposed that by to-day Gen. Miles will have reinforced Banks with a considerable force.

The World says the immense rebel armies which made their appearance so suddenly in Western Virginia, give color to a rumor from a Kentucky paper, that it is the intention of the rebel leaders to withdraw from the coast and invade Northern States, if possible, in two columns. One by way of Pennsylvania under Gen. Joe Johnson, and another under Gen. Lee marching from Cumberland Gap to Louisville, and if possible, crossing the Ohio to Cincinnati.

We have no fears but a few days will turn the tide of victory in the right direction.

Cincinnati, May 24. Col. Heth with 3000 rebels attacked our forces under Col. Crook yesterday, at Lewisburg. After a severe fight the rebels were completely routed. Our loss was ten killed, 40 wounded and 8 missing. The rebel loss was much greater. We captured four cannon, 200 stand of arms, 100 prisoners, a Lieutenant Colonel, one Major, several Captains and Lieutenants.

Fortress Monroe, May 24. It is reported that Gen. Burnside has taken Raleigh.

The Ellen Terry arrived from Newbern this afternoon. She reports that the American flag was raised in Raleigh some three or four days ago by the citizens.

The Volunteer Militia Called Out.

The general and special orders issued this morning by His Excellency the Governor and Commander-in-Chief are startling in their nature, as well as in regard to their object. It will be seen that all the available Volunteer Militia force of the Commonwealth is called out instanter, without the interruption of the customary military forms. No doubt Governor Andrew will be justified in his declaration that "Massachusetts will repeat the patriotism, enthusiasm and glory of April '61."

A PROCLAMATION.

By the Gov. and Commander in-Chief.

MEN OF MASSACHUSETTS—The wily and barbarous horde of traitors to the People, to the Government, to our Country and to Liberty menace again the national capital. They have attacked and routed Major General Banks—are advancing on Harper's Ferry—and are marching on Washington.

The President calls on Massachusetts to rise once more for its rescue and defense. The whole active militia will be summoned by a general order issued from the office of the Adjutant General to report on Boston Common to-morrow.

They will march to relieve and avenge their brethren and friends, to oppose with fiery zeal and courageous patriotism the progress of the foe.

May God encourage their hearts and strengthen their arms, and may he inspire the Government and all the people.

Given at headquarters in Boston, at eleven o'clock of this Sunday evening, May 25th, A. D., 1862.

JOHN A. ANDREW.

Washington, May 26. The following is the latest dispatch received at the War Department from General Banks.—

WILLIAMSPORT, May 26.

Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, Sec. of War.

We believe that our whole force, trains and all, will cross in safety. The men are in fine spirits, and crossing in order.

The labor of last night was fearful. The enemy followed us last night on our march, but has not made his appearance this morning.

The news of your movements South has unquestionably caused them to look out for their safety.

Your dispatch was read to the troops this morning amid the heartiest cheers.

N. P. BANKS, Major Gen. Commanding.

Washington, May 26. The excitement of yesterday has subsided, and all seem convinced that if Gen. Banks is properly reinforced, he will not only be able to check any advance of the enemy, but to drive them back.

The dispatches received by Gov. Andrew last night from the Secretary of War, show that the Government is aware that an important military movement was necessary to preserve the Federal Capital.

The first dispatch stated that Gen. Banks had been defeated, and the enemy were marching in full force on Harper's Ferry.

The second dispatch stated that reliable information had been received from various sources that the enemy were also marching on Washington in great numbers, and the Governor was ordered to forward without delay all the troops that could be raised, with militia and volunteers.

At two o'clock, two dispatches were received from Gen. Banks, one dated at Martinsburg, and the other between Martinsburg and Williamsport, in which he said that he had saved his baggage train and most of his command, and should without doubt cross the river in safety.

New York, May 26. Special dispatches from Washington state that it is rumored that Jackson is retreating more rapidly than he advanced.

A balloon reconnoissance from Gen. McClellan's headquarters, disclosed the fact that the rebels were evacuating Richmond.

ITEMS.

☞ The state of Europe is thus described by the paragrapher of the Boston Post —

"Hungry workmen, in procession, parade the streets of Liverpool and Paris, in the French Legislative body, a serious quarrel is springing up with the Emperor, which may ere long lead to another coup; at Rome, all was alarm, under an apprehension of a 'popular demonstration,' in consequence of which the French garrison had been placed under arms, Corso closed, and the Papal troops confined to the barracks. In Greece, a rebellion is in full blast, and in Turkey, its next door neighbor, the Turks and Christians have just been having a free fight, resulting in the sacrifice, some reports say, of a thousand lives. With troubles thus all round in the old world—we do not know that even with rebellion on our hands, the United States is not, after all, about the quietest place on earth for a Peace-Society man to dwell in."

RENUNCIATION OF SPIRITUALISM.—Rev. O. D. Miller of Nashua, N. H., who says he has been a spiritualist medium for nearly eleven years, writes to the Christian Freeman of the 31st ult., that seeing no prospect of good resulting from spiritualism, and that it has been the source of a great deal of suffering and harm to him, he has thought it his duty to renounce it, and hopes others may profit by his sad experience. Further, he enters his solemn protest against it, as fraught with much evil to the community.

FRENCH NAVAL CONFERENCE.—A conference of naval officers is reported to have met recently in Paris at the house of a vice-admiral, to consider the great question raised by the Merrimac and Monitor encounter, and they are understood to have resolved unanimously that France can build as many Monitors in a month as she has arsenals, and that in a year she could fit out a fleet equal to any that the utmost efforts of England could oppose to her.—London News, C. W.

DISTRESS IN MANCHESTER.—According to the returns of the chief constable of Manchester, England, made up to Tuesday, April 8th, upwards of eight thousand workmen are totally out of employment in that city alone, while nearly double that number are on short time.

THE EMPRESS.—Of late the Empress does not join in the Ministerial deliberations. The reason generally given is, that she was blamed for everything that appeared like a favor extended to the Pope, and this unconsciously, and perhaps undeservedly, makes many bitter enemies.—Paris Letter.

☞ Recent excavations in Rome have disclosed the magnificent entrance to the palace of the Cæsars, called the Clivus Palatinus. It is the same width as the ordinary Roman roads, and like the Appian Way, is paved with huge blocks of stone.

To Brethren indebted for Tracts.

I have said nothing to you for a good while. I am now almost entirely out of tracts. I want to publish more—also books. I do not intend to get in debt, but pay as I go. I am hoping immediately to make important changes in my business, so as to furnish more books for less money than heretofore. Now all who owe for books will confer a favor by paying up what they owe if they CAN, or if they are unable to do that, let me know the fact. All the books I have sent you have cost me the money, and I wish to send out more when I can. Those who wish for books or tracts can send their orders as usual. They are FREE to the poor. Let us hear from you. Direct to H. L. HASTINGS, Boston, Mass.

P. S. Persons indebted to the Crisis office for books, should send the pay to Bro. Grant as soon as they can conveniently. H. L. H.

Notice.—The Tract Fund.

Tracts of the old approved sorts are soon to be manufactured in large quantities for the Christian Publication Society. Churches or individuals who have contributed to the $500 Tract Fund, can have a portion of their donations returned to them in tracts, if they wish; and they can have the tracts printed with a notice of their place of worship on each one, at a small cost, (say 50 cts.), provided they wish for not less than five hundred copies of any one tract, and will send me immediate directions about it. The price of tracts to contributors will be about 1800 pages for $1 00.

As the $500 Fund is now made up, subscribers who have not paid will remit their subscriptions to MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass., as soon as convenient. Persons still wishing to contribute can do likewise, for "yet there is room." H. L. HASTINGS, President.

Notice.

For the brethren at Machias Port, Me.

I have found a Brother that will come and stay a few weeks in that vicinity, in July, if the brethren wish him. They must notify him soon, so that he can make arrangements to go when some one comes to Boston that will take him on board. Direct to J. W. White, Portsmouth, N. H. This is the man you want.

HIRAM MUNGER.

Notice.

The Lord willing, there will be a conference meeting in Buchanan, Mich., to commence on the evening of the 20th of June, and continue over the following Sabbath. We hope to see a general gathering of our scattered friends at this meeting. Let us make this meeting a subject of prayer, that much good be accomplished. Bro. Israel Dammon is expected to be present.

D. R. & M. S. MANSFIELD.

Grove and Camp Meeting.

Good news to the happy souls who gathered last year at Tremont, Mass., for divine worship in the grove. There will be another grove and campmeeting in the vicinity of the Tremont Depot, West Wareham, Mass., commencing Tuesday evening, June 24th, 1862, and continuing over the following Sunday. Eld. M. Grant, H. L. Hastings, if possible, and others will be present to preach the word. Many things promise to make this an interesting and profitable meeting. First, the blessing of God upon us last year. Those who were there will welcome us again, and bring others with them. Second, its location—easy of access to many churches. It is situated on the Fairhaven and Boston, R. R., at its junction with the Cape Cod R. R.; fare reduced on this road from Middleboro and New Bedford. We expect a good representation from New Bedford, Mattapoisett, Plymouth, Carver, Middleboro, Taunton, and perhaps from Boston. Third, its accommodations, a beautiful grove, in the midst of an orderly people; good board provided cheaper than by ourselves, lodging in private dwellings near by, or in tents, as chosen. Fourth, the cheering evidences that we are nearing our eternal home, cannot fail to awaken an unusual interest in every believing heart. Come then, one and all, prepare for a good meeting, pray much about it, come to labor for precious souls, come full of the blessing of Christ, come early, come to stay through the meeting; come, and may many kind friends in Tremont bless the day of our coming. In behalf of many brethren,

H. P. CARPENTER.

Annual Conference.

The Western New York General Association will hold their annual conference at Seneca Falls, N. Y., commencing on Thursday evening, June 5th, 1862. This is an important gathering, and all the brethren and sisters within the limits of the association, who possibly can, should endeavor to be present, and aid both by their counsel and means in advocating the cause of our Master. Let us have at least one delegate from every church within the association limits, or beyond, if such church should wish to be recognized among us. A general invitation is extended to all, both ministers and laymen. Come up to the "Feast of Love." By order of the committee of appointments.

E. BURR, Secretary.

Conference Notice.

The next session of the Maine Central Quarterly Conference will be held in Belgrade (Baptist meeting-house) commencing Thursday, June 12th, at six o'clock, P. M., and continue over the Sabbath. Brethren from abroad will call on Bro. David Rockwood (Rockwood's Corner.) We hope to see a full meeting, and the power of God in our midst to save sinners. Come, brethren and sisters. This is a new place. The hearts of the people are open to feed man and beast, and let us try to feed them with the word of life.

Per order, H. B. SEVEY.
I. C. WELLCOME, Scribe.

Wilbraham Campmeeting.

I find many have got the idea from Bro. Boutell's notice, a few weeks since, that the Wilbraham campmeeting was removed. This is a mistake. The meeting will commence as last year, the last week in August. I was on the ground last week, and the tent frames are all in good order, and the inhabitants are looking forward with more anxiety than ever for the time to arrive when they can hear something on the signs of the times. In due time you will see the appointment from the committee.

H. L. HASTINGS.

For the Crisis.

The World to Come.

By faith I see a glorious land,
Where wars and strife shall ever cease,
The home of all the blood-washed band—
There Jesus reigns, the Prince of peace.

A world of joy, a world of bliss,
Whose glories are forever new;
Oh! I compare that world with this,—
Here all things fade like morning dew.

No mourner stands beside the tomb,
To weep for loved ones sleeping there;
Dispelled is every shade of gloom,
Banished is every toil and care.

The vail now o'er all nations cast,
Forever then removed shall be,
And death, of enemies the last,
Be swallowed up in victory.

I'm trav'ling to that blissful land,
Through rugged wilds I'll press my way;
While guided by a Savior's hand,
My feet shall never, never stray.

Sinner, would you that world enjoy,
And in its bliss and glory share?
For Jesus all your powers employ,
And with his saints you'll soon be there.

For soon enrobed in glory bright
The King of kings to earth shall come,
Endowed with majesty and might,
To take his wand'ring people home.
